Hootenanny As Brainwash Device By Commies? 'Bah,' Says Keating

Washington, Oct. 1.

How much of a hoot do the Communists give for a hootenanny?

With wit and sarcasm, Sen. Kenneth B. Keating (R.-N.Y.) rose in the Senate to defend folk music. He gave the haw-haw to complaints that some of the lyrics have Commie beat.

The Keating speech was inspired by a resolution sent to the House Un-American Activities Committee by the Fire & Police Research Assn. of Los Angeles, suggesting folk music is a "brainwashing" device of the Communist Party in an attempt to "ensnare" music lovers with a message right

ABC'S EARLY EVE PUSH NIPS NEWS

By GEORGE ROSEN

While it's still too early to forecast who'll do what to whom in the '63-'64 rating battle, one basic, fundamental and final conclusion can be drawn from thus far released preliminary New York and 30-market Nielsens. In the new season, the NBC and CBS dedication to more public service through the expanded Huntley-Brinkley and Walter Cronkite early evening Monday-through Friday news strips while Leonard Goldenson's owned stations and affiliates "counter-

Thesp Salaries (Including Hers) Are Too High, Uta Hagen Asserts

Uta Hagen, who doesn't mince words as the enraged wife in the Broadway production of "Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?", was equally outspoken in a television discussion Sunday night (29) about the economics of the theatre. Mindful that she might be stepping off the deep end, the actress stated, nevertheless, that theatre people —those belonging to crafts and performers, herself included—get paid too much.

She cited that as one of the factors contributing to what she believes is the high cost of theatregoing in New York. In her opinion, there must be subsidization of legit. It's also Miss Hagen's belief that audience tastes are far ahead of community leadership and the producers who attempt to make a salable product. Hers were the most dramatic comments to emerge in a half-hour program of "Com-

The World Series has put a brighter complexion on the already ruddy faces of show biz in New York. The two-game start of the series between the N.Y. Yankees and the Los Angeles Dodgers which begins today (Wed.) has already loaded the midtown hotels. Nitery reservations have also been booming.

A Stingless Death: 378 New Theatres For Films Coming

Exhibitors aligned with the nationwide Theater Owners of America, largest theatreowner trade association, said this week that 378 or more new theatres were placed on the drawing boards within the past two and a half years. There are others unofficially counted, bringing the total to about 500.

These include in some instances the twin-type theatre, in which two exhibition outlets are housed in the one building. This kind of operation was started in Louisville, Ky., and is said to have a psychological advantage. A few customers in a small theatre don't render the barn effect which is felt in a very large house.

Drive-ins are losing ground in the new building; conventional houses number two to one over the ozoners. One tabulation has the cost of the latter-day construction at $297,000,000.

Federal Bureau Seizes National Books of AGVA

The Bureau of Labor Management Reports has attached the records of the American Guild of Variety Artists nationally. They include the national offices in New York as well as the New York local, Chicago, Los Angeles, Las Vegas (latter is under the L.A. jurisdiction), Baltimore, Miami Beach, Cleveland, Boston and San Francisco.

Seizure came after representatives of the BLMR had been poring over books of the national AGVA offices for several months.

U.S. NEGRO LEAD IN JAPANESE FEATURE

Tokyo, Oct. 1.

A Negro actor is playing a lead in a Japanese film for the first time in "Kuroi Taiyo" (Black Sun), currently before the cameras at Nikkatsu Studios.

Chico Roland, a civilian working for the U.S. Forces here, has taken a leave of absence to appear in the suspense-actioner, which tells of a compassionate friendship between Negro G.I. and a jazz-loving Japanese youth. Roland, who speaks serviceable Japanese, has appeared in lesser roles in a number of other films and tv shows.

Yank modern sax tooter Sonny Rollins, now touring here with his combo, is expected to write the picture's score.

'Max Gordon Presents' a Worthy Addition to Show Biz Archives

By ABEL GREEN

The showman-autobiographer of "Max Gordon Presents" (Bernard Geis Associates; $4.95) (written in collaboration with N.Y. Times drama editor Lewis Funke) concludes with a chapter titled "They Remember Me!" Therein he details the rewarding address he made to Brown Univ. undergraduates who remembered his illustrious string of credits despite his recent relative inactivity and with pardonable pride he writes, "I, Mechel Salpeter (original name), had mingled with presidents, with princes of finance, with artists. I had dear friends. I had come back from disaster to fortune and health. I had landed on top. I, Max Gordon, had given the theatre a 'good name.' He has also given show biz archives a good book.

Through the total recall of the burlesque-gone-vaudeville agent-producer, and finally gone Broadway (with detours to Hollywood and tv), and with the skillful typewriter assist of vet theatrical reporter-commentator Funke, "Max Gordon Presents" a panorama of 40 years of Broadway and West End show business.

He presents a success story in the American theatre which is as nothing compared to the personal saga of a tortured human being twice driven to suicidal tendencies, twice bankrupt both in health and exchequer, twice completing the cycle and once again achieving the pinnacle, which he now enjoys.

Transcending all this is the single great love with the "Angel From Amsterdam" (N.Y.), a whistlestop where Lewis & Gordon and other Keith and lesser vaude agents sneaked acts doing their break-ins. These were the kind of hideaway burgs with their hideaway theatres whose absence

Industrial Shows Pay Choristers Top Scale; $199 Base Plus Extras

Highest-paid chorus girls of all are probably those working under Chorus Equity wage scale for industrially-sponsored travelling revues. They get $199 base pay, plus $15 per diem, or $105 weekly travel. In addition, chorines are entitled to other benefits.

If departing by airline they rate $3 toward taxicab and tips. The flight insurance policy is paid for by the employer. And if no hotel room can be had for $6 whatever over the chorister must pay is charged to the sponsor.

These scales, benefits and side benefits invariably anger the musicians and conductors on the same shows who argue that their years of learning and practicing music are compensated at a much lower rate than the chorines.

Dick Barthelmess' Will

Los Angeles, Oct. 1.

Richard Barthelmess, who died in N.Y. Aug. 17, left bulk of his estate to his widow, Mrs. Jessica Stewart Barthelmess, it was disclosed in a will filed for probate here last week.

Superior Court petition stated that will, dated Feb. 15, 1952, had already been admitted to probate in N.Y., but filing here was required to dispose of $450,000 in California real estate. Actor left estate in trust, with his daughter, Mrs. Mary B. Bradley, also named as beneficiary.

Olsen & Johnson Team' Again for That Great Vaude Loop In The Sky

Las Vegas, Oct. 1.

Ole Olsen and Chic Johnson are together again—this time entombed side by side in Palm Mausoleum here. The remains of Olsen, who died in Wichita, Kan., six months ago, were sent here Monday (30) to be placed next to those of Johnson.

Mrs. Cathryn Johnson, widow of Chic, said a memorial plaque will be put over the adjoining resting places which will read: "Olsen & Johnson—They Lived Almost As Long As They Wanted."

The stars of "Hellzapoppin'" and other shows "were just like brothers," Mrs. Johnson said. "So they could be together as they were on the stage, Chic will be moved over one space. It's just like Ole to say 'Move over, kid—here I come'."

The idea of reuniting the pair was that of Mrs. William P. Lear, daughter of Olsen, Mrs. Johnson said. "She never did feel right about having Ole back there in Wichita, and Chic out here."

Johnson died Feb. 26, 1962. He is survived by his widow, and two daughters, June May and Chickie Zogron. Olsen is survived by his widow, dancer Eileen O'Dare, and Mrs. Lear.

FILM CROWD CURIOUS ANENT NIZER'S LEGTER

A pre-opening night preview Oct. 9 of the legit "A Case of Libel," based on a chapter of Louis Nizer's "My Life in Court," will benefit the Hospitalized Veterans Service. According to the benefit treasurer, Robert W. Dowling, chairman of City Investing, the affair is getting a big film industry turnout because of Nizer's long association with the film field.

Benefit tickets, at $50 per, include the play, plus a Hotel Astor supper-dance afterwards in honor of the attorney-author. Henry Denker did the legit adaptation.

Crackdown On Ginza Clip Joints

Tokyo, Oct. 1.

Beginning a cleanup drive in preparation for the 1964 Olympics next October, Tokyo Metropolitan Police arrested 13 small club and bar operators and 33 in the Ginza area, where there are 1,670 drinking establishments.

The crackdown, in response to complaints from clipped patrons, led to the shuttering of five locations while another switched to doing business as a tearoom. They were found to be fleecing patrons, particularly foreigners, and violating the Public Morals Law. Clubs involved include Ace, Las Vegas, Fiji, Bamboo, Rose of Sharon and Novia.

One place was discovered to have charged a Chinese businessman $140 for two highballs. Another forced a U.S. serviceman to pay $64 for seven shots of whiskey and a third demanded $50 from a Swiss visitor for three bottles of beer.

These establishments prey on foreign pedestrians found in the Ginza area. There are about 50 touts patrolling the streets for this purpose. They steer the unsuspecting foreigner, often captivated by their ability to speak English, to bars and clubs which pay them $2.72 per day plus a $1.70 commission for each customer delivered.

PERENNIAL CHEVALIER

Paris Concert No 'Retirement,' Just Another Anniversary

Paris, Oct. 1.

Maurice Chevalier started his one-man singing turn Friday (27) at the Theatre Des Champs-Elysees which will run for 25 performances. But the first two shows were break-ins and with mainly special audiences of old friends from his long, 63-year, career in show biz. This stand also marks his 75th birthday. He got standing ovations.

Chevalier asked the press to abstain till this Mon. (30). Advance sales are brisk and he looks to do solid biz during this turn. It very much like his recent hit stands in New York and London, he will naturally have more French songs

Rewards of Fame

Chicago, Oct. 1.

It pays in several ways to have fans.

A fortnight ago attorneys for the Fischer quintuplets of Aberdeen, S.D., took bids from the networks and syndicated newsreel services for the first exclusive video peek at the infants in their hospital nursery.

The bargaining was spirited and ABC-TV at last came up with the top bid. But the final decision rested with the Fischer family, and they chose NBC-TV at shorter money because they wanted the quints to appear first on the Huntley-Brinkley show.

A Realistic Negro Star Gives Views

Sidney Poitier Recognizes That Profit Is Primary Goal—Social Angles Secondary

By EDDIE KALISH

"You can make the most devastating comment about the human condition but you must design it for the entertainment house." That's the opinion of Negro actor Sidney Poitier who last week expressively discussed filmmaking and the role of pictures in today's social structure.

"Films are the most effective communications medium in the world today," the actor said but entertainment should always come before message in filmmaking. "Every piece of entertainment has a message but this message should be brought home subtly like the fregrance of a good perfume," he opined.

Recently back from a tour of various cities around the country on behalf of Ralph Nelson's "Lilies of the Field," in which he stars, Poitier observed that "first run houses are the people's entertainment places and the exhibitor wants that particular kind of fare that appeals most to his audience, particularly the family. By and large he's not interested in the avant garde or art pictures, or any secular entertainment for that

Bing's Palm Spgs. Pad (JFK Slept Here Thrice) On The Market for 186G

By FRANK SCULLY

Palm Springs, Oct. 1.

President Kennedy took his weekend here, his third in two years, using Bing Crosby's hideaway against the Santa Rosa mountains, Palm Desert, each time. It is not a big place, having three bedrooms and two baths, as well as a maid's room and bath, but it is easy to protect from trippers. It also has a pool, natch.

Crosby is selling the place but prospects were shelved for the Prez's visit. Price is now listed as $186,000. House cost $40,000 to build five years ago and 10 acres were thrown in for free by realtor Tony Burke. He hoped to stimulate biz for a subdivision called Silver Spur Ranch but so far not many have rushed to be Bing's neighbors, besides Jimmy Van Heusen, Bill Morrow and Pete Petitto, and they are all of Crosby's coterie.

Significant additions Crosby has made are some antique furniture and carved doors from a Spanish castle, which were picked up when the Hearst loot at San Simeon was dissembled. This might up the value to $50,000 or $60,000, so at least 100G of the purchase price would have to be charged to the fact that it was Crosby's house "and President Kennedy slept here."

Kennedy likes it because it is isolated, has an intercom and is well airconditioned—an important item in a week that saw San Diego

Joe Valachi's 'Singing' Hints Cosa Nostra Ties To LV and N.O. Gambling

Washington, Oct. 1.

Ramifications of the Cosa Nostra, the underworld secret society, with the gambling industry in Las Vegas and New Orleans, may be on the agenda for tomorrow (Wed.), when Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R., N. Y.) cross examines mobster Joe Valachi tomorrow.

The informer, testifying before the McClellan Committee today, started to relate of the ties between the underworld and gambling, particularly in the resort areas. Valachi said that Cosa Nostra topper Vito Genovese, now "on vacation" in Leavenworth Federal Pen, was tied in with Meyer Lansky who has been variously identified with various hotels in Las Vegas, Havana, New Orleans and elsewhere. Lansky was also the partner of Frank Costello, who also had ties in Las Vegas.

Sen. Javits felt it inopportune to interrupt today to elaborate on the resort gambling industry ties inasmuch as the "singing" hoodlum was relating a chronological yarn, and interruptions for clarification and detail would hurt the flow of the story.

At various times, Lansky and Costello were said to have been tied up in the financing of casinos in LV and Havana casinos and various spots elsewhere.

Bergman 'Crashes Sex Barrier'

Goteborg, Oct. 1.

Comment has been expressed in Swedish newspapers that as a result of the public showing of Ingmar Bergman's new feature film, "The Silence," censorship here has been rendered superfluous. If such scenes are passed, what is there left to censor, is the logic.

There is widespread reference to Bergman having "crashed the sex barrier." Content of the release (see review, page 6) is of unappeasable desire in a woman.

Pic stirred speculation about supposed symbolism of the woman, the son, her sister, the foreign language in which the woman has her adventures with a series of lovers whose language she cannot speak.

So great has been the reaction to the film that the King of Sweden, Princess Christine, the elections in Norway, and what Metro in Hollywood is doing to the Nobel Prize were all obscured. The film was front page news. The high praise of its artistry and the expectation that Bergman has created a "masterpiece" is marked by a contrapuntal wonderment at the sex obsessions on the one side and the curious predicament of the censors who, having passed the scenes, must now defend the picture.

Are Distribs Whispering to FTC That Region-Dominating Circuits Fracture Fair Trade Practices?

Distribution executives in some New York quarters are pulling a switch in tactics—they're going to the Government with complaints against exhibitors.

Film companies aren't talking officially or on the record. But the intimations from certain officials is that they've contacted the Federal Trade Commission with beefs against trade practices engaged in by circuits which dominate regional areas.

They offer the allegation that some territorially prominent chains are making excessive demands for advertising money from the distributors and if the ad allotments are not forthcoming these exhibitors threaten to pull pictures.

According to the charges unofficially heard around Manhattan, an important theatre company will book and open a feature in full accordance with the exhibition contract. The feature might run a week or two and do sufficient business to warrant continuation of the run. But the exhibitor will thereupon contact the ad-pub department of the distributor and threaten to yank the production unless said distributor antes up for additional commercials, such as radio spots.

Distribution people for the most part say they're willing to go for extra ad money outlays on condition that the exhibitors share the expense. However, they claim, the exhibitors want the distribs to pick up the entire tab.

Representative of one major film company said that while his outfit has a genuine grievance, the people who are being hurt particularly are the smaller indie distribs and importers. Because of the limited scope of their operations they lack the power to fight back.

In any event, it's all sotto voce so far? But, said the v.p. of one company, "this is an explosive situation."

ARROW FILM FILES SUIT OVER 'SON OF SINBAD'

Arrow Film Corp. filed a $289,000 damage suit in N.Y. Federal Court Friday (27) against Excelsior Pictures and Himalaya Pictures. Plaintiff charges that in 1961 it licensed Excelsior Pictures to distribute "Son of Sinbad" theatrically for a five-year period. Despite the fact that Excelsior was specifically forbidden from reassigning those rights, says Arrow, Excelsior subsequently turned those rights over to Himalaya.

Arrow charges the defendants with conspiracy and fraud and asks for an accounting of all moneys earned by the picture. In addition to the companies, defendants include A. Campbell Spear, of Excelsior, and Robert Pix, Ernest Munz and Joseph Auerbach of Himalaya. "Son of Sinbad" was produced by the now-defunct RKO Radio Pictures in 1954.

'A Girl Like Monroe'

Tokyo, Sept. 24.

With Marilyn Monroe still getting big space in the Nipponese mags and "Marilyn" (20th-Fox) opening this week at the choice Yuraku-za theatre, Shochiku is set to make a feature called "Monroe-no Yona Onna" (A Girl Like Monroe).

Shochiku, one of Japan's five majors, has a contest going for the selection of a non-pro to play the title role. The winner will receive a bonus award of $2,778 and a Datsun Bluebird auto. The person recommending her will get $278.

Filming of "A Girl Like Monroe" is slated for mid-November with release in time for the New Year season.

Itamar Borges Seeking Capital in Manhattan For Brazilian Tunepic

A Brazilian feature-tv producer is currently in New York lining up talent and, hopefully, coproduction partners for a musical film to be made in Brazil with a Brazilian-American cast. The pic, "Love Is the Greatest Success," will be produced by Itamar Borges and will be filmed in both Portugese and English.

Based on Borges' own story, the musical deals with an American family in Sao Paulo and will be made at Vera Cruz studios and on location in Sao Paulo. William Urai, musical director of Dora Records in the U.S., will compose the music for the film and will be Borges' associate in its production. He'll also conduct the score in the film, produce the soundtrack LP and publish the music.

"Success" is slated to roll early in 1964 and Borges is presently looking into Yank casting. He will shortly begin talks with U.S. producers over possible coproduction arrangements. He says, however, that if he isn't successful in finding a U.S. coproduction source, he'll do it anyway with all-Brazilian financing. He'll be in the U.S. for a few more weeks looking into these matters.

DON GILLIN'S NEW POST

Act as Producer's Rep For Seven Arts Associated

Donald T. Gillin has been named Associated. Exec, who will continue as producer's rep for other film people, will work closely with those distribs handling 7A product, including, at the monent, Warners, Paramount, Metro, 20th-Fox, Columbia and Allied Artists.

He'll continue to maintain his own offices in New York, away from the 7A homeoffice.

TALKS ENVISION PERMANENT TIE

Paramount Pictures and Joseph E. Levine are conducting talks looking to a deal which, if consummated, would have considerable impact on the film trade. The idea calls for Par to buy out 50% of Levine's Embassy Pictures, with Levine retaining the other 50%.

It seems clear that Paramount is high on such a projected tieup. Whether agreeable terms can be negotiated is another matter, at least for the present.

Embassy and Par presently are partnered in production enterprises such as "The Carpetbaggers" and "Zulu." In the case of the latter, Levine has the American distribution rights and Par has the picture for the foreign market. But Par would very much like to renegotiate the agreement so that it, Par, might take over the domestic release as well. Principal photography has been completed on the $3,000,000 feature and all parties are highly satisfied with the results.

"Zulu" may hold the key to the outcome of the conversations concerning the possible 50% takeover of Embassy. Guesswork within the trade has it that if Levine agrees to relinquish the "Zulu" rights to Par, the likely followup would be his willingness to go on an overall 50-50 partnership basis with this major film corporation.

One report has it that Metro, also, has thoughts about some kind of lasting association with Levine. Par, however, seems to have made the headstart.

Par officials reportedly are especially impressed with the success Levine has had in nabbing significant properties and getting them to market. An outstanding example, they are said to feel, is "Carpetbaggers," the Harold Robbins novel.

Further, Levine's Embassy has been powerhouse in grabbing meaningful foreign productions.

In the event of completion of the aforementioned 50% purchase, Levine would continue to function via his own identity but as a Par affiliate engaged in the acquisition of film properties and the merchandising of same. This is the approach which brought him into film business prominence and through which he built his own production setup and a distribution organization which now embodies 10 offices in the U. S.

Whether he requires such elaborate corporate makeup is another story. Chances are there'd be some readjustment if he goes to Par in the role of affiliate.

Favorable factors suggesting the get-together include the immediate

'Just Crazy to Pay Luxury Support Of Hollywood Film Technicians In Foreign Studios': Curtis Bernhardt

Hollywood, Oct. 1.

Curtis Bernhardt, whose "Kisses For My President" goes out via Warners, expresses the opinion that many Yank producers stoop to fiscal folly in taking Hollywood technicians overseas, at great cost in salary and all living expenses paid. His views were formulated during five years overseas. Part of the time he was in Rome shooting "Damon and Pythias" for Metro on a tiny corner of the Cinecitta Studios largely preempted by 20th-Fox's "Cleopatra" Says he: "We were the little retail operation, they the wholesale."

"Americans are being robbed as certain as there is 'Amen' in church," he avers. "American production people in Rome often don't know the most elementary thing about local conditions."

"The only way you can save money there is by using an Italian manager—someone who can handle the crew," he contends. "You don't get smeared that way." He admits, however, that there is some problem about getting "honest" production people, but insists that if you do, you've got it made.

Director believes that bringing Hollywood technicians for overseas film making is largely a waste. "You can get an Italian cameraman, cutter, art director and most other technical personnel who are just as good as those in Hollywood—for half the money," he argues. "But one thing you don't get," he adds, "is planning—pre-conceived organization."

"The Italian," he observes, 'is a great believer in improvisation."

Bernhardt insists that many of the huge costs which Hollywood productions incur overseas could be pared considerably. "'Cleopatra's' transportation bill probably matched the cost of all our sets," he avers. Personal expenses are often entirely out of line also, he believes. "Many go abroad and live in a style they are not at all used to over in California, he contends.

Director terms unions' demands for enforced return of production to Hollywood as "unrealistic from the producer's point of view". Competition on a "cold, dollars and cents basis" is the foundation of the capitalistic system, he reminds IATSE.

Bernhardt says that he found Italian workers intelligent, industrious, hard workers and enthusiastic. Much of what is said about European filmmaking personnel by returning Hollywood film people is done with a "public relations angle in mind", he asserts, adding that "not everything said is true."

All things considered, however, Bernhardt says that he prefers Hollywood picture-making and advises against overseas lensing "unless the story locale demands it—and then only with local people supervising production."

Stross Hits at Unions

Cork, Sept. 24.

Producer Raymond Stross, visiting Ireland for screening of his production "The Leather Boys" at Cork Film Festival, hit out at trade unions in British and Irish film biz for high production costs.

He said that co-productions with European countries are virtually impossible because of British union demands on staffing, first class transportation and first class hotels. Commenting on the union problems which have kept the Irish studios at Ardmore empty for several months Stross said that when Ardmore opened it was possible to produce a picture there at about 6% less than in British studios, now the cost would be about 3% higher than in England.

He has just signed a contract with the government of Israel to produce three pictures there in 1964, starting early February.

Man Says 'No Speeches' For Allied Oct. Fest; Instead, 'Movies Doc.'

Climactic banquet of Allied States Assn.'s 34th Annual Convention, Oct. 24 at the Americana Hotel, N.Y., will offer a staged "History of the Movies." The event will be produced, directed and written by Morton Sunshine, the convention's director.

Presentation is primarily an entertainment affair with special material and lyrics, planned to feature several film personalities. According to Irving Dollinger, convention chairman, the closing banquet will also be notable for one novelty—there are no speeches planned.

Sunshine has produced and written several shows, including tributes to President John F. Kennedy, Rodgers and Hammerstein, Sophie Tucker, Jimmy Durante, Danny Thomas, Eric Johnston, Si Fabian and others. In connection with the affair, each male registrant at the convention will get as a convention gift a copy of the book "A History of the Movies" by Arthur Mayer and Richard Griffith.

Silverstone Quietly Exits 20th-Intl. And Trade Wonders About Shuffles

The unannounced resignation Friday (27) of Emanuel Silverstone as veep-general sales manager of 20th-Fox International has stirred industry speculation as to possible future setup of the 20th foreign arm.

The departure of Silverstone, a key man in 20th International since 1946, leaves the foreign arm with only four top sales execs, including 20th exec veep Seymour Poe who also carries the title of prez of 20th International. The others are Joseph Bellfort, whose title is exec in the foreign department; David Raphel, supervisor for Europe and Near East (based in Paris), and Karl Knust, home office supervisor for Latin America and Far East.

At the time he took charge of all 20th sales operations last year under prez Darryl F. Zanuck, Poe said he expected eventually to appoint a new foreign department head, who would succeed to the job (though not the title) of Murray Silverstone, who was prez of 20th International until he resigned following the Zanuck election. In the intervening months, no such appointment was made and Poe himself has directed activities of the foreign arm in addition to his other jobs.

Whether or not Poe has now found a man to head the foreign operation could not be immediately learned. The exec veep is currently on a Far Eastern tour of 20th offices and is not due back in New York until around Oct. 20.

Resignation of Emanuel Silverstone was described by him as being "on a completely friendly basis." Exec has no immediate plans for the future, but it doesn't seem likely that he intends to retire from the business. Silverstone's career has embraced key sales and administrative posts with Samuel Goldwyn, Alexander Korda and United Artists, prior to his joining 20th.

His resignation also means that, with one exception (financial veep Donald Henderson), all the top 20th execs who were associated with the previous administration of prez (now chairman) Spyros P. Skouras have departed the company.

LANSBURGH IN BOSTON FILMING 'POLICE HORSE'

Boston, Oct. 1.

Larry Lansburgh's Films Inc. is shooting "The Tattooed Police Horse" here for Walt Disney's Buena Vista. Boston's police horses are being used in the film with their riders and Lt. John M. Lynch, heading the mounted police division, is serving as technical advisor as well as appearing with his men.

The story involves the introduction of a Kentucky trotter to the official indoctrination course undergone by all horses chosen by the Boston Police Dept. Lansburgh, who holds two Academy awards for "The Horse With the Flying Tail," and "The Wetback Hound," is an accomplished horseman holder of the unbroken record of 37 feet for a mounted broad jump.

Actors in the film include Sandy Sanders, former stuntman, who plays the role of a Boston police captain; Shirley Skiles, feminine lead, who trains horses.

Film Biz Starts Season Zestfully; Balaban: 'Oughta Consolidate Gains'

By GENE ARNEEL

Barney Balaban, president of Paramount Pictures, told a meeting of the board of directors of the Motion Picture Assn. of America that now's the time for the United States film industry to embark on a hard-hitting public relations campaign. He underlined that there's a "business upsurge" going on and this is when the industry should address itself to the public, rather than waiting until another recession.

The significance of Balaban's comments lies not alone in the need of any kind of institutional p.r. program but also in the fact that there is an unmistakable upsurge.

The picture business, not only in the States but throughout the world, is enjoying a living boxoffice. The presidents and other senior officers around the various homeoffices of film companies and the big circuits have very noticeably gotten away from the poormouth bit.

Films remain a risky business, with rise and fall dictated by a certain amount of luck, of course. But whether luck or production insight on public whims, the fact of the matter is that there's new excitement in the trade and this excitement has been communicated to both press and public.

A femme reporter on a N. Y. paper commented to a VARIETY man last week that she was surprised to find herself "refreshed" with a couple of recent (and rare) theatre visits. This kind of sentiment is being heard more and more.

It's More-Better

Within the trade itself there's a very definite sigh of relief to be heard. Flop pictures are in evidence, as ever. But on the overall there seem to be more pictures making money, and making more money, than there have been in recent years.

A major, and continuing, rub is the matter of filmmaking costs. Said the v.p. of a key distribution outfit: If our current pictures were budgeted at what they were 10 years ago we'd really be in clover." But even with the soaring production costs there seemingly is enough money at the b.o. to keep just about everybody solvent.

Rule of thumb has had it that only one picture in five comes out on top economically, with this one supposed to make up for the losses on the other four. It may sound like roughshod mathematics but for some years it has been a thesis subscribed to by many highly-priced film men.

Paramount, and this is part of the switch being generally experienced, so far this year has had five hit productions in succession. Just last week Metro films, eight in all, grossed over $1,000,000 in only the New York area.

Significant is the range of pic product which is in on the moneymaking. "V.I.P.s" is the big klondike at MGM but other winners have been such items as "Flipper" and "Tarzan's Three Challenges."

One thing is for certain; the panic anent television is ancient history. Video is competitive, naturally, but no longer the devastating menace it had been. The just-opened new tv season caused little if any upset in the theatrical b.o. patterns and morale in the film trade was unaffected.

Indeed, several pic biz observers have been heard to say that various of the new video programs are of such quality that the public will be driven out of their homes and into theatres.

The encouraged outlook among film theatrical people is further reflected in the abundance of new theatre building, plus acquisitions of old sites by the big chains. Stanley - Warner bespeaks confidence via its acquisition of a 24-unit drivein circuit in Texas. Loew's has a continuing survey

17.4% BETTERED NET FOR WOMETCO, MIAMI

Wometco Enterprises, whose theatre and television station operations are headquarteded in Miami, had net income of $407,608 for the 12 weeks ended Sept. 7. This represents a gain of 17.4% over the $400,834 reported for the same period in 1962.

Per-share earnings for the new period amounted to 32c up from last year's 28c, after adjustment was made for a 30% stock dividend paid Dec. 21, 1962. Gross for the new 12 weeks climbed to $4,876,176 from last year's $4,184,814.

Net income after taxes for the first 36 weeks of 1963 was $1,514,068, equal to $1.04, compared with $1,317,031, or 92c per share, for the first 36 weeks of 1962. Gross for the new 36-week period was $14,826,918, up 13.2% from the $13,099,915 grossed in the first 36 weeks of 1962.

Wometco which also is prominent in the vending business, last week purchased for cash all the capital stock of the Coca Cola Bottling Works of Nashville, Tenn. This was described as a multi-million dollar transaction.

Use Negro Skills In Seltzer's Film

London, Oct. 1.

Walter Seltzer, who has just completed production of "Man In The Middle," for 20th-Fox, believes that the Talbot-Pennebaker drama "goes a long step forward toward meeting the demands for fair representation for the colored races in motion pictures."

Three actors in the cast and two technicians are Negroes. The actors, Errol John, Frank Killibrew and Oscar James, all play roles in the film which did not necessarily require colored thesps, and were not described as Negroes in Howard Fast's screenplay. John plays an N.C.O. in charge of a military prison cell block, Killibrew is a jeep driver who becomes the confidante of Robert Mitchum and James is a court reporter at a murder trial.

The technical advisor was Master Sergeant Myron Cochran from Evanston, Illinois, and the technician was Eugene Mark, who handled electrical duties on the set. "We used Negroes in these instances simply because we felt they were the best men for the job," remarked Seltzer.

Seltzer is planning to return to New York on Oct 20, with the picture completed and ready for delivery to 20th-Fox. The answer print has been promised for Oct. 17. Incidentally, the "Man In the Middle" title is now claimed to be finally and positively the last choice. The film started life as "The Winston Affair," changed to "The Man in the Middle," was altered to "The Winstone Affair," reverted to "The Man in the Middle" and has now dropped the initial "the."

Same In France, Italy, India

(For 'The Longest Day')

The kind of biz which 20th-Fox's "The Longest Day" is doing abroad can be seen in several reports from France, Italy and India.

In Paris, the Darryl F. Zanuck production has accounted for total admissions of 852,270 in 45 weeks of firstrun. Its nearest competitors are United Artists' "West Side Story" with 559,100 admissions in 80 weeks of firstrun; the French "Melodie en Sous-Sol (a Jean Gabin-Alain Delon starrer), 478,483 admissions in 22 weeks, and Metro's "How The West Was Won," 437,723 admissions in 42 weeks.

In Rome last week, the Zanuck film was cited by AGIS, the association of Italo theatre owners, as the biggest moneymaking foreign film to be released in Italy during the 1962-63 season.

From Bombay comes word that the film has been seen by over 1,000,000 people in the first four months of its Indian release. Considering the comparatively limited number of outlets open to American pix in India (as against the distribution of domestic pix), this is seen as approaching a new record for imported product in India.

Showmen, Responsive To Current B.O. Success, Think 'Longest Day' Proves Epics Don't Need Tint

A new black-and-white boxoffice champion—Darryl F. Zanuck's "The Longest Day"—is expected to be formally enthroned in appropriate statistical charts before the yearend. While the news will provide understandable satisfaction to 20th-Fox, as well as its prez, it may also be expected to prompt producers to reappraise the long-standing policy that "if it's a big one, it's gotta go in color."

While exact figures on "Longest Day" are not immediately available, it's understood that Zanuck's original projection of the film's boxoffice potential, made at the stockholders' meeting in May, is now deemed to have been "too conservative." At that time, the 20th prez estimated the pic to be heading for a domestic rental of $13,375,000 and a foreign rental of $16,530,000. The prediction was made before the film hit its principal stride when it went into general release in June.

Even if the film were not to exceed those earlier estimates, it would still outrank the domestic earnings of any other black-and-white pic carried on VARIETY's annual chart of all-time domestic money-makers. Until now, the top b/w domestic money earner has been Columbia's 1953 "From Here to Eternity," estimated at $12,200,000, followed by Samuel Goldwyn's 1947 "The Best Years of Our Lives" at $11,300,000. (Undoubtedly, the b/w "Birth of A Nation" would outrank "Longest Day," but no statistics are available on it and thus it's not carried in the VARIETY listing.)

Interestingly, of all the features named in the VARIETY listings as having earned $10,000,000 or more in domestic rentals (24 titles in all), only the aforementioned two have been in b/w; all the rest in one or another of the glorious full color processes. In that list of 24, "Eternity" ranked 13th and "Best Years" 19th.

While the phenomenon of "Longest Day" isn't expected to persuade producers to abandon color for their big-budget spectacles, historicals, musicals and the like, it may well give them new courage (fiscal as well as spiritual) to go in b/w when the subject demands it —as Zanuck reasoned with his D-Day epic which he wanted to catch the flavor of immediacy as seen in actual newsreels of the event.

Heretofore, it's been axiomatic with producers that if a budget is estimated at over $6,000,000 or $7,000,000, the production must go in full color—the reasoning being that the audience "expects it" and won't believe it's a "big" picture without color.

"The Longest Day," however, didn't have any such problem. It was not only one of the most expensive films ever produced by 20th (at approximately $10,000,000, of course, it was a "quickie" compared to the $30-odd-million for "Cleopatra"), but it is also one of the most expensive (if not the most expensive) b/w pictures ever made. And the profits look to be equally phenomenal.

RAFT'S SECRET SETTLEMENT

Author Charged no Coin Paid On Film Rights

Los Angeles, Oct. 1.

Suit brought by writer Dean Jennings against George Raft for an accounting of proceeds from sale of actor's life story for a picture has been settled out-of-court for an undisclosed sum.

Jennings in complaint stated he wrote a national mag story about Raft and that under a 1957 agreement was to be paid by Raft 20% of proceeds if mag story was sold for film use. Complaint further alleged that Raft sold story for $25,000 plus 10% of profits, but Raft had refused to give Jennings an accounting.

New $28,000,000 Rank Loan Issue

A N.Y. 'First': Film Editing Workshop

Minneapolis, Oct. 1.

Columbia Pictures sales manager Rube Jackter has placed himself in the ranks of those film company executives who feel that prosperity has arrived and is back to stay. He so expressed himself last week (23) to host a cocktail party to tell exhibs of the "wonderful" Columbia Pictures upcoming.

Jackter pointed out that theatres now are holding their own, thanks to public willingness to pay high admissions. This despite television and other distractions.

He declared a "golden age" is ahead for theatrical product.

Over 250 Out-of-Towners Due—Strictly Invitational For Technicians Only

Over 250 out-of-town professionals are expected to attend New York's first annual Film Editing Workshop at the Henry Hudson Hotel whose grand ballroom has been rented for five day and night sessions starting Monday Oct. 7. Tele-Tape Productions Inc. will equip and operate a closed-circuit system enabling the Workshop to stage a practical demonstration for the audience of Movieola editing techniques.

The Workshop is running on an "invitational" basis. There are no registration or other fees but meetings are closed to the uninvited. Some organizations are sending three or four technicians. Minnesota Mining will send in three engineers to backstop a demonstration of tape editing by its Alfred H. Moris.

It is believed that this is definitely the first workshop of editing techniques ever held in the east. Delegates from commercial and business film labs, universities, the networks, various Federal government bodies, churches, wholesale drug manufacturers, ad agencies and other interests who use or buy film for instructional, exploitive or entertainment purposes,

Society of Motion Picture & Television Engineers will forego its regular monthly meeting to attend the workshop in a body. All meetings are described as practical, working sessions, and not for dilettantes. The workshop is organized and financed by Camera Mart Inc., a 27-year old outfit whose main activity is renting heavy-duty equipment to producers. Samuel Hyman is president and Paul Meistritch veep. They greet the opening crowd and thereafter the guest speakers and delegates take over.

Coordinating the whole workshop agenda is Charles Lipow, general manager of Camera Mart, formerly with Deluxe Labs. He had hoped to have Stanley Kramer in person, Kramer having been a film editor in earlier career for 15 years. Instead Kramer made a taped interview which will substitute.

Silvius Par's Dutchman

Phil Silvius has been named manager of Paramount Films, N. V., which is the Paramount organization in The Netherlands. He'll function under Henri Michaud, Par's manager for Continental Europe and the Middle East.

Silvius, who joined Par when it first came into being, had been sales manager and, in taking the top post in Amsterdam, succeeds the late Charles Wijsmuller.

Local 52 Will Train Eligibles For Membership

International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees studio mechanics Local 52 is setting up a training program to help develop technicians in the various trades encompassed in the local's membership, which includes electricians, carpenters, grips, propmen, soundmen and others.

The program is getting the support of film-tv production people who are making their studios available for classes, first of which was held last Thursday (26) by the 52 electrical departments at the new MPO Videotronic Center. Other class programs for other trades will be conducted in the future, according to present plans.

Heading the electrical school are Harry Ford and Norman Leigh. Ford is a member of 52's exec board and has been an electrician on pix and tv shows for some time. Leigh is head of MPO's electrical and mechanical systems division and was a supervisor of construction of the MPO center. MPO has provided full use of its facilities for the classes.

Each session will have a guest instructor to discuss various phases of the trade being studied. The first such guest was Fred Claire, a power hookup specialist. The emphasis of the sessions is not on technical terms or deep theory but rather on the development of operating technicians and craftsmen in the practical use of electricity as it directly pertains to lighting and camera useage. Both studio and location work is covered.

In addition to instruction, there are practical application drills with students teamed with experienced craftsmen in the actual planning and implementation of picture technique. Classes are in small groups to permit individual attention and are offered free-of-charge to junior members of the local

EVERY CIRCUIT BIG B.O.-HAPPY

Dallas, Oct 1.

Patronage at motion picture boxoffices in Dallas, most of Texas and the southwest and a good part of the nation has been sensational this summer; in fact, it has been good all year. For an industry which not long ago was being "creped," hung by the prophets of doom, the flickers are showing a remarkable zest for life in 1963. (But actual figures on actual dates they don't give.—Ed.)

Even the U. S. Dept. of Commerce has given an official stand ing to the motion picture boom with its report that the boxoffices of theatres across the country took in $1,405,000,000 last year and an even better year is ahead for 1963.

Executives of the theatre circuits which operate from two to 13 theatres in Dallas have various ways of answering the question; what has caused this summer boom? But all their statements boil down to two factors:

Better films and better release schedules.

Joe Jackson, head booker for the 80 theatre Interstate Circuit which operates more first run houses, five, in Dallas than any other chain, provides a true perspective of what the summer has been:

"Traditionally, the summer season has started with July 4 and the producers have aimed their season releases for this date. However, this year the good films started hitting the screens the first of June and just about all of the theatres in Dallas were able to start the summer with good, audience drawing pictures. There have been numerous family type pictures, the kind that are good for the summer trade when the youngsters out of school can walk to the neighborhood theatres or have their mothers take them."

Jackson also predicted that the good summer biz would extend into the fall and winter with a line up of films scheduled for release in the months ahead.

He was specific about what the summer has meant for Interstate in Dallas. There hasn't been a "loser" all summer and every first run film booked since June has

Biz Turns Very Spotty; 'V.I.P.s' New Champ, 'Cleo' 2d, 'West' 3d, 'Irma' 4th, 'Arabia' 5th

Biz in key cities around the country covered by VARIETY turned uneven this session, with such factors as a touch of Indian summer, dearth of new, big pictures and usual end-of-summer letdown blamed for some poor showings.

New champion at the wickets is "W.I.P.s" (MGM) (2d wk), which is searing to a mighty $473,000 in some 19 keys. It is the first week this pic has been out in release extensively. "Cleopatra" (20th) (15th wk), is winding up second, first time it has been out of first place in months.

"How West Was Won" (MGM) (42 wk) is capturing third position despite the length of time out in distrib "Irma La Douce" (UA) (17th wk) is winding up fourth.

"Lawrence of Arabia" (Col) (38th wk) will land fifth spot. "French Style" (Col) (2d wk) is finishing sixth. "Shock Corridor" (AA) (3d wk) is taking seventh place. "Wives and Lovers" (Par) (4th wk), which was 10th a week ago, will wind up eighth.

"Condemned of Altona" (20th) (3d wk) is finishing ninth. "Great Escape" (UA) 15th wk) will take 10th position. "For Love or Money" (Par) (8th wk) is capturing 11th spot while "Lord of Flies" (Cont) rounds out the Top 12.

"8½" (Embassy), "Women of World" (Embassy) and "L-Shaped Room" (Col) are the runnerup pix in that order.

"Conjugal Bed" (Embassy), one of few new films, is rated great in N. Y. "Lilies of Field" (UA) shapes big in Denver on opener. "Twice Told Tales" (UA) is fair in Detroit.

"Sporting Life" (Cont), good in L.A. and K.C., looks big in N.Y. and hotsy in Minneapolis. "Women of World" (Embassy) shapes good in Balto Denver and L.A.

"Johnny Cool" (UA) looms nice in Minneapolis. "Castilian" (WB), also fairly new, shapes sharp in L.A. but mild in K.C.

"Haunted Palace" (AI), torrid in Boston, looks good in Frisco. "Thrill of It All" (U), which has been high on the list for weeks, still is getting nice coin in smaller houses, including Minneapolis and Washington.

Note: The number of weeks out in release for bigger and longrun pix are designated in such cases.

Language-Speaking Sam Gallu May Coproduce Feature With Rumanians

Hollywood, Oct. 1.

In negotiations instigated by the U.S. State Dept., producer Sam Gallu is discussing coproduction of a theatrical film with the Rumanian Government. On a recent trek to Washington, the State Dept. asked Gallu to meet with envoys of the Rumanian legation in Washington, saying it was interested in coproduction, since a cultural agreement had recently been signed with that government.

As a result, Gallu is going to Bucharest in November as guest of the Rumanian government and will continue neogtiations there. They told Gallu they would like him to make a picture there as a coproduction effort with their government. Gallu is Rumanian and speaks the language fluently, a fact which spurred Rumania's interest in him for the project.

First, however, Gallu will produce-direct a half-hour documentary plot, "$100,000 Reward," for Selmur Productions, ABC-TV's production arm. He left Monday for Seattle, where the pilot will be lensed. Paul Coates is narrator on the series, which is based on unsolved crimes, and would be shot on various locations around the country.

Gallu is also in negotiations with NBC on an hour-long taped series for next summer, "Sunday Night at the Fair." It would star Fred Waring and his Pennsylvanians, and would originate from the World's Fair in N.Y. He has signed Waring, and obtained an okay from Fair authorities. Thirteen hours would be taped in color. Plan is for a variety show, with Waring and his crew toplining.

Bob Rossen To Crete

Producer-director Robert Rossen, accompanied by his wife, sail from New York on the Cristoforo Colombo today (Wed.), with first stop Naples and then on to Crete for a four-week vacation in all. Filmmaker has never been to the Grecian isle before, but a friend recommended it and he's off to leisure away some time there.

Rossen recently completed "Lilith" for Columbia. He has four or five properties to choose from as his next, including "Cocoa Beach," also for Col. In the event he finds he can't get started on "Beach" within six months following "Lilith," he's free to postpone or cancel.

Summer Runs Choked Playdates For Other Films

Chicago, Oct. 1.

Summer longruns, the major distribs' meat, have turned out to be poison for the art and indie distributors in the midwest. The smaller film sellers are just now finding theatres for a substantial backlog of pictures created by the lengthy engagements of big pictures at both firstrun and neighborhood situations during June, July and August.

Among the pictures that have created a shortage of playdates during the non-oyster months are "Longest Day," "West Side Story," "David and Lisa" and "L-Shaped Room". Currently, "Cleopatra" has eliminated a deluxer house in every major city for the foreseeable future.

The smaller distribs are now scurrying about to make hay before the big Christmas pictures come in and again tie up the bulk of the theatres. This gives them about two months to play off the substantial backlog, and while in-

October Rolls In Brightly For UA

The first week of October is a big one for United Artists, with five of the company's items breaking into a total of 120 theatres in the New York area during that time, including three preems.

In the preem category, Ralph Nelson's "Lilies of the Field" opened yesterday (Tues.) at the Murray Hill Theatre, having been moved up from its initially-planned opening which had been set for tomorrow (Thurs.). Starring Sidney Poitier, the film was the winner of four awards at the Berlin Film Festival, including the best actor Silver Bear award for Poitier.

Today (Wed.) "Johnny Cool" makes its local bow on UA's "premiere showcase" multi-house first-run release plan, playing at the Astor and 34th Street East theatres in Manhattan and others in the area. Also today, John Sturges' hot grossing "The Great Escape" swings onto UA's "golden showcase" Broadway followup break, continuing at the DeMille, which has been its Broadway home since its N.Y. preem, and spreading into 23 other houses in the Gotham vicinity. In another move today, "Irma La Douce" moves into a 70-theatre spread, following its highly successful Broadway-east-side firstrun and later "golden showcase" showing.

This Sunday (6) will be the "black tie" preem of Tony Richardson's "Tom Jones" at Cinema I, with a celeb-filled crowd expected. The Lopert Picture Corp. release in the U.S. and Canada and UA issue elsewhere opens its regular run at Cinema I Monday (7). Albert Finney, Peter Bull and John Moffat of the "Jones" cast, in town appearing on Broadway in "Luther," which was written by "Jones" scripter John Osborne and directed by Richardson, will be present at the preem.

Stolen Hours

Susan Hayward remake of old 'Dark Victory.' Should give women good cry and do well at boxoffice. Love in the face of certain death.

United Artists release of Mirisch Co. & Barbican Films production. Stars Susan Hayward; features Michael Craig, Diane Baker, Edward Judd. Directed by Daniel M. Petrie. Screenplay by Jessamyn West; camera (color), Harry Waxman; editor, Geoffrey Foote; music, Mort Lindsey; asst. director, Colin Brewer. Reviewed at United Artists, Sept. 23, '63. Female audiences haven't had a good cry for a while, which will be remedied by "Stolen Hours." A remake of the 1939 Bette Davis starrer "Dark Victory," this affords Susan Hayward a performance which will surely arouse the sympathies of her femme viewers. Husbands should perhaps take that night for poker.

Director Daniel M. Petrie has shaped a smooth and slick production out of the story of a woman facing death as the result of brain disease. The film moves easily from discovery to pre-determined conclusion and gives Miss Hayward a chance to do some effective emoting, supported by a cast headed by Michael Craig, Diane Baker and Edward Judd.

Jessamyn West has written the screenplay for "Hours" and has fortunately chosen not to go overboard on the bathos. The result is a picture which moves well, with fine photography and credible performances, all of which amounts to a potentially strong b.o. contender. Although the supporting cast of this made-in-Britain effort means nothing to Yank viewers, Miss Hayward most likely remains a solid lure and the product itself is produced with the proper values to attract its audience effectively.

Miss Hayward's performance should arouse audience compassion via her deft handling of the role, which she essays with latterday restraint. As her doctor, who she eventually marries despite their mutual knowledge of her fate, Michael Craig does a solid job. Diane Baker is attractive and proves a capable actress as Miss Hayward's sister and Edward Judd is also strong as an ex-beau but still chum of the ailing socialite. Supporting players all handle their chores well also.

Photography, under the direction of Harry Waxman, is colorful and scenically often quite beautiful, a factor which adds considerably to the picture's overall effectiveness. Mort Lindsey's music also adds to the impact and other credits like Wilfred Shingleton's production designs, Beatrice Dawson's costuming and Geoffrey Foote's editing are all strong.

"Hours" is a stylish picture in design and follows the hanky formula to perfection without overdoing, as must often be the temptation. It has all the ingredients of b.o. success and should turn a winning trick for UA and the Mirisch Co. Kali.

Gone Are the Days

Hammer Bros. release of Nicholas Webster production. Stars Ossie Davis, Ruby Dee. Directer by Webster. Original play and screenplay by Davis; camera, Boris Kaufman; editor, Ralph Rosenblum; music, Henry Cowen. At Trans-Lux East, N.Y., starting Sept. 23, '63. Running time, 100 MINS.

Lutiebelle ..... Ruby Dee
Purlie Victorious ..... Ossie Davis
Captain Cotchipee ..... Sorrell Booke
Gitlow ..... Godfrey Cambridge
Missy ..... Hilda Haynes
Charlie Cotchipee ..... Alan Alda
Idella ..... Beah Richards
Sheriff ..... Charles Welch
Deputy ..... Ralph Roberts

Ossie Davis' "Purlie Victorious," legiter, which he has rewritten for the screen, follows the same pattern as the stageshow even down to many of the main actors being transplanted to the screen, though the title was changed. Hence, in many respects this is merely a screen version of the legiter. And as such it has most of the highlights and weaknesses of the original.

"Gone Are the Days" might even be called "Amos 'n' Andy with a message." The message passages seen dragged in and are the weakest part of this pic. It will require a hard and intelligent sell to do well in this country. It follows that the film is a dubious piece of merchandise for Dixie states. How much humor do white audience there manifest when a Negro kids white plantation owner and the minions of the law?

This modern fable concerns the Rev. Purlie Victorious, self-ordained preacher who returns to Georgia with Lutiebelle, his wife, for the avowed purpose of obtaining a barn and turning it into a church. He plans to secure the $500 for the purchase of said barn from Ol' Cap'n Cotchipee (Sorell Booke) who's holding this amount as a legacy from Purlie's cousin Bea (since diad). Lutibelle is to pose as the cousin who has come to claim her reward. This scheme goes awry so Purlie decides to beat the money out of Cotchipee, owner of the cotton plantation. Actually he gets his hands on the coin through the help of the captain's son (Alan Alda), who had grown up with Purlie. But Purlie tells a fanciful tale of making the captain beg for mercy and taking his bullwhip away along with the money.

Obtaining the barn, Purlie fashions it into a church, the first integrated meeting being the funeral of Ol' Cap'n Cotchipee, who has died of a stroke in the contest to obtain the old barn.

The original stageplay has been brought up to to date with references to the Supreme Court, integration, etc. Main weakness of the pic is that it still is a mixture (as was the legiter) or farce, fantasy, meller comedy and a sermon on tolerance.

Davis still is Purlie, as he was in he stage play, and the principal strength of the production because of his acting, either in farcical episodes or straight dramatics. His wife, Ruby Dee, again is Lutibelle and again is excellent. Booke is superb in the exaggerated charactization of an old plantation owner. He also was in the legiter. Alda makes a likely son of the old captain. Godfrey Cambridge contributes an amusing character as the boss Negro leader on the plantation. Last two named also were in the stage production.

Nicholas Webster contributes an intelligent job as director, and also producer. He has been aided by the fine lensing of Boris Kaufman. Wear.

Lonely Lane

(Horoki)
(JAPANESE-TOHOSCOPE)

Hollywood, Sept. 24.

Toho Co. Ltd. production and release. Stars Hideko Takamine; with Kinuyo Tanaka, Daisuke Kato, Noboru Nakaya, Akira Takarada, Mitsuko Kusabue. Directed by Mikio Naruse. (No character names provided). Screenplay, Toshiro Ide, Sumie Tanaka, based on novel by Fumiko Hayashi and play by Kazuo Kikuta; camera, June Yasumoto; music, Yuji Koseki. Reviewed at Toho La Brea Theatre, Sept. 18, '63. Running time, 124 MINS.

Although probably too sombre in mood and deliberate in tempo for the taste of the average western cinema buff who leans to the arties for film entertainment, "Lonely Lane" is a touching and rewarding autobiographical account of the life and hard times of Fumiko Hayashi, who rose from poverty, squalor and constant humiliation to become a celebrated Japanese novelist.

Enriched by Hideko Takamine's luminous performance in the central role, the Toho production and release should be a popular item with Japanese audiences, particularly distaff customers and even more so those of Miss Hayashi's generation who will relate more vividly with the hardships she had to endure in the male-dominated Nippon of the first half of the twentieth century.

The screenplay by Toshiro Ide and Sumie Tanaki is based on the play by Kazuo Kituta from Hayashi's novel. It traces the heroine's artistic perseverance through various ill-fated romances with handsome but shallow men and meagre attempts at earning a living in occupations ranging from peddler to bar-maid. Starvation, degradation and betrayal, however, never manage to dim the underlying artistic spirit that enables her to endure these hardships and continue to write.

Miss Takamine's portrayal is a haunting one, a combination of sweetness, fragility, sensitivity and underlying intellectual spark. Excellent in support of her are Kinuyo Tanaka, Daisuke Kato, Noboru Nakaya, Akira Takarada and Mitsuko Kusabue. Under Mikio Naruse's measured but straightforward and compassionate direction, the story unfolds honestly and communicatively on the screen, although it does have a "Portia Faces Life" tone and flavor. Tube.

Cork Film Fest

Aarti

(INDIA)

Cork, Sept. 24.

Rajshri production. Bombay. With Meena Kumari, Ashok Kumar, Pradeep Kumar, Shashikala. Directed by Phani Majumdar. Screenplay, Vishwamitra Adil; music, Roshan; camera, Pandurang Naik. At Cork Film Fest. Running time, 120 MINS.

India has occasionally proved that it's able to produce worthwhile pix, too. Hence, "Aarti" proves a considerable disappointment for those who expected something in the Satyajit Ray class. While the story can be called of general interest, this production is just too oldfashioned on direction and general treatment to go far.

The oldhat fable of one woman and two men has one man, a poet, who is rather poor. The other is a medico, who is very rich but not as nice as the poet. The girl takes the former but the latter is so madly in love with her that he just doesn't give up until he realizes finally that he'll never get her.

Pic makes the impression as though it was made in the 1930's. For a slight compensation, there's some interesting background music. Hans.

El Hombre De Papel

(The Paper Man)
(MEXICO)

Cork, Sept. 24.

Ismael Rodriguez production. Mexico City. Stars Ignacio Lopez Tarso, Alida Valli. Directed by Ismael Rodriguez. Screenplay, Ismael Rodriguez; music, Raul Lavista; camera, Gabriel Figueroa. At Cork Film Fest. Running time, 110 MINS.

This Mexican film topped the just-terminated Cork festival. If there had been a feature pic award at this festival, "Paper Man" would probably have walked off with it. It's in many ways an extraordinary pic which Ismael Rodriguez directed, produced and scripted. The plot has charm and depth, the direction is highly imaginative and there's fine camerawork. And in particular, there is a piece of excellent acting on the part of Ignacio Lopez Tarso, the central figure, a mute, who was given the Waterford Glass Trophy for the best acting at this festival.

This film should find its way into many cinemas around the world. It's the kind of charming picture that many people will like, be it the ordinary or the more demanding cinema patron. Pic will be remembered for quite a while.

This is the tale of a poor and lonely mute. He suddenly becomes very rich and with his new wealth he seeks a companion in order to breach the dread walls of his isolation. His attempt is a hopeless enterprise because the people he gets in touch are only interested in his money. Pic tells of human thoughtlessness and the perfidy of men.

Tarso's portrayal of the mute and the latter's desperate efforts to break his solitute meant hard work. The actor had to mime everything he wanted to get across. He has turned in a splendid job. The femme lead is played by Italian actress Alida Vali. "Paper Man" was made by the director and team which made "The Important Man," also Mexican, shown at the festival here last year. Hans.

Nevesinjska Puska

(Thundering Mountains)
(YUGOSLAV)

Cork, Sept. 24.

Jadran Film (Zagreb) production. With Miha Baloh, Tatjana Beljakova, Jovan Milicevic, Petre Prlicko. Directed by Zika Mitrovic. Screenplay, Mitrovic and Slavko Goldstajn; music, Vasilije Mokranjac; camera, Ljube Denic. At Cork Film Fest. Running time, 92 MINS.

The Yugoslavs are not bad when it comes to war pix. This one has its plus points and has proved a big hit at home. Western viewers, however, will find it somewhat slow moving and naive. It's hardly something for export.

This concerns the famous hero of the Herzegovina, Micha Ljubibratic, who set out to free his country from the Turks. The film teems with battle sequences of all calibre, and near end it becomes obvious that the Turks are losing out. The final victory can't be long delayed. This tale occurs in the 19th Century, and the signs of the era seem well carried out.

Direction is adequate, and there is some good acting, especially by Miha Baloh, who is the hero. He seems suited for West European pix, too. Hans.

The Silence

Turning from his quest of God, Swedish writer-director Ingmar Bergman creates a film of sheer animal lust. It may be a cinematic masterpiece and it may never be licensed for exhibition in most countries.

Goteborg, Sept. 24.

Svensko Film production. Stars Ingrid Thulin and Gunnel Lindblom; features Jorgen Lingstrom, Birger Malmsten and Hakan Jahnberg. Written and directed by Ingmar Bergman. Camera, Sven Nykvist. At Spegeln Goteborg. Running time, 105 MINS.

Unlike previous pictures in which he is investigating the human mind and looking for God, Ingmar Bergman is turning his attention in "The Silence" exclusively to the body and its passions; this is a film without God. Rather say, full of the devil.

The story is simple: Two lonely sisters—Ann and Ester traveling home to Sweden, make a stay in a strange town of Timuku in a fictitous country. Everything seems a bit morbid—the town is full of soldiers, tanks, crowded cafe halls. There is a sort of prewar feeling on the streets. The sisters, together with Ann's seven-year old son Johan, are installed in an old hotel which looks like an ancient feudal mansion with stuffy majestic rooms, deep beds and mile-long corridors.

There is a strange relation between the two sisters. The older, Ester (Ingrid Thulin), is a masculine type, intellectual with a lesbian fixation to Ann (Gunnel Lindblom), a seductive, sexhungry animal. Instead of caring for her son, Ann is more interested in adventures in the town. But when she comes home she insists upon rendering a full report to her sister who listens eagerly about the love scene in a theatre. Ann spares no details.

Distressed by the adventures of her amorous sister, Ester despairs, undertakes to forget her love in alcohol and degradation.

Ester takes sick. It seems she is going to die, but Ann does not care. She leaves her sister and returns home with her son.

That is all. It is not much of a story. There is not much dialogue, almost no music but a tremendous dramatic force radiating from the screen leaves a strong impact on the audience. The sex scenes have vigor and primitive power to say the least.

The symbolism is for each viewer to determine. The film deals with animalistic humanity — in cages, quarreling, biting, dying. There is nothing pretentious and yet it may be a masterpiece destined to be mentioned years afterwards as a milestone in cinema.

Technical credits are all excellent with a special mention of the camera work and a birth of the new star: Gunnel Lindblom. She has the fury of an Anna Magnani and the beauty of a Sophia Loren; actually she is a veteran of many previous Bergman pictures. For the first time she has a big role, and has acted her part in a manner that should establish her as a new international star.

But can "The Silence," loaded as it is with daring excursions into sex, pass international censorship outside Scandinavia? Bergman would probably not permit cuts. "Silence" may remain an exclusive item for Swedes and in Sweden. Denk.

The Sword in the Stone

(CARTOON—COLOR)

King Arthur's boyhood in excellent animation feature. One of Disney's best but essentially limited to kid trade.

Buena Vista release of Walt Disney production. Directed by Wolfgang Reitherman. Story, Bill Peet, based on book by T. H. White; art direction, Ken Anderson; character design, Peet and Milt Kahl; music, George Bruns; songs, Richard M. Sherman and Robert B. Sherman; editor, Donald Halliday. Previewed at Radio City Music Hall screening room Sept. 27, '63. Running time, XX MINS.

Bill Peet, artist-writer and long-time member of the Walt Disney production company, has chosen a highly appropriate fable, the T. H. White book of the same title, for screen adaptation for the youngsters. It emerges as a tasty confection but, it must be emphasized, primarily for the moppet market.

The feature-length cartoon demonstrates anew the magic of the Disney animators and imagination in character creation. "Sword in the Stone" is in color by Technicolor and it's colorful and amusing all the way. But one might wish for a script which stayed more with the basic story line rather than taking so many twists and turns which have little bearning on the tale about King Arthur as a lad.

Key figures are the boy who is to become king of England because he alone has the strength to remove the sword embedded in a stone in a London churchyard (he goes by the name of Wart), and Merlin, a magician and prophet, who's alternately wise and somewhat nutty.

Others include the villainess Mad Madam Mim, who turns out to be a nice old dame; an English nobleman, a kind-hearted owl, flora & fauna, etc.

Wart finds himself in all kinds of trouble by way of Merlin's wizardry. He's turned into a little fish and is forced to flee from a giant denizen of the sea. Merlin then turns himself and Wart into squirrels. A little girl squirrel cozies up to Wart romantically, but latter will have no part of her.

And so the fable rambles with other transformations, finally leading to the day of the big tournament to determine who's to be king and, of course, it's 12-year-old King Arthur.

The songs by Richard M. and Robert B. Sherman are in the familiar Disney cartoon groove with such titles as "Higitus-Figitis," "Mad Madam Mim" and "The Legend of the Sword in the Stone." They're agreeable tunes and go along nicely with the animated action.

The White book, first published in 1938, has had a vast circulation. This, coupled with the public's know-about concerning high production caliber of any Disney cartoon, dountless will help the "sell." Gene.

Chusingura

This may be Toho's most promising b.o. prospect for U.S. playoff. Powerful story with plenty of action. Exciting to watch.

Toho Co. Ltd. production and release. Stars Koshiro Matsumoto, Yuzo Kayama, Chusha Ichikawa, Yoko Tsukasa, Kumi Mizumo, Toshiro Mifune, Takashi Shimura. Directed by Hiroshi Inagaki. Screenplay, Toshio Yasumi; camera, Kazuo Yamada; music, Akira Ifukube. Previewed at Toho Cinema, N.Y., Sept. 26, '63. Running time, 115 MINS.

Takuminokami Asano ..... Yuzo Kayama
Kouzuke Kira ..... Chusha Ichikawa
Genba Tawaraboshi ..... Toshiro Mifune
Yozenin ..... Yoko Tsukasa
Riku ..... Setsuko Hara
Yasubei Horibe ..... Tatsuya Mihashi
Kinemon Okano ..... Yousuke Natsuki
Denpachiro Tamon ..... Ichiro Arishima
Gayboy Geisha ..... Norihei Miki
Carpenter Goro ..... Frankie Sakai

Gunpei Takada ..... Akira Takarada
Hyobe Chishaka ..... Takashi Shimura

Toho Co., observing its 30th anni as a major film producing company, has turned out a powerful, attention-holding drama with "Chushingura," which may attract more patrons than either "Rashomon" or "Samurai." This vehicle has been so deftly subtitled that it no longer is handicapped by having all the dialog in a foreign tongue. Anyway, this is one of those rarity among foreign pictures—a production where the action speaks louder than words. Pic seems assured of being the most profitable Toho release to be distributed in the U.S.

Based on the Kabuki play, Toshio Yasumi has translated it to the screen with a swiftly-moving screenplay. And Hiroshi Inagaki ("Samurai" and "Rickshawman") has directed this excellent story with an eye always for action. He has expertly developed all details of the intrigue by the samurais as they secretly plan to avenge the death of their master, Lord Asano.

Perhaps this screen production makes the impact it does because the producers have concentrated on moving the story forward, neglecting or at least submerging the customs and extraneous details of Japanese court life in the 18th Century. This is done without overlooking the reason for Lord Asano's attack on Lord Kira and the subsequent edict that the former must kill himself.

Much of the picture is devoted to details of how Asano's loyal

CANADA'S DREAM OF OWN PIX

Sheriff Puzzled Re 'Smut' Films

Meanwhile 'Sins of Mona Kent' Still Circulates Despite Distrib's Earlier 'Promise'

Greensboro, N. C., Oct. 1.

"Sins of Mona Kent" played the Pointer Drive-In Theatre here recently, despite the complaint of the New York radio writer and novelist, Mona Kent, that the title damaged her good name. That story was detailed some time ago in VARIETY.

Making the point perhaps stronger, this film was one of two cited by Sheriff Clayton Jones as a type of indecent feature to which the countryfolk, or those not attending, objected. Other singled out for objection was "Young Love."

Sheriff is having a hard time deciding what is and is not an actionable release. He wishes to pick up the hint against "indecent pictures" recently dropped by County Commissioner William G. Ragsdale.

North Carolina Statute which covers obscene pictures, chapter 14, section 193, states: "If any person, firm or corporation shall for the purpose of gain or otherwise exhibit obscene or immoral motion pictures or if any person, firm or corporation shall permit such obscene or immoral exhibition to be conducted in any tent, booth or other place or building . . . the same shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and punishable in the descretion of the court."

The statute further states: "For the purpose of enforcing this statue, any spectator at the exhibition of any immoral or obscene moving picture may make the necessary affidavit upon which the warrant for said offense may be issued."

The catch, according to Sheriff Jones, comes in the key word—obscene—in the statute.

"The definition of the word appears to be left to local authorities," he said. "It's all a matter of opinion. What may be obscene to one person perhaps is not obscene to another."

The sheriff stated that motion picture theatres were by no means the only purveyor of pictures which are termed obscene.

"You can go across the street here," he said, pointing across the street from the county courthouse, "and buy magazines which are much worse than anything the movies show."

County Attorney Durward Jones, who pointed out the statute to the sheriff, said the courts had been very liberal in cases in which obscenity has been contested.

Sheriff Jones said he talked with the operator of the Pointer Drive-In and was told he had to show "this type of movie" to stay in business. "He told me he took in only $12 one night when another kind of picture was being shown," he added.

Ray Willie 'Pupil'

Dallas, Oct. 1.

Raymond Willie, v.p. and g.m., of Interstate Theatres, was among the 32 exhibitors attending the recent "Cleopatra" (20th) workshop. Interstate is showing the film at four of its theatres, in Dallas, Fort Worth, San Antonio and Houston.

The circuit has earned about 95% of its cash guarantee for the picture. The Interstate report was on a par with such engagements as Atlanta, 97% Boston, 95%; Charlotte, 91%; and Winnipeg, 92%.

The film is currently in its 13th week at the Interstate houses.

8 Films Going For Metro In Big Boxoffice Week

Metro latched onto a major boxoffice spotlight in the New York area last week with eight pictures grossing $1,087478. Spokesmen say this is the largest one-week gross in company's history.

Topping the list was "The V.I.P.s" at Radio City Music Hall where the first week's take was $192,193. Double-bill combo of "Flipper" and "Tarzan's Three Challenges" raked in $364,592 on the Loew's circuit and other nabe houses.

Others contributing to the record gross were "The Haunting," "Murder at the Gallop," "How the West Was Won," "Wonderful World of the Brothers Grimm" and "Mutiny on the Bounty."

John Huston Alone For Dino De Laurentiis Pic Highlighting 'The Bible'

"The Bible," which Italian filmmaker Dino De Laurentiis is shaping as his most ambitious production, has been placed in the sole directorial charge of John Huston. Huston, who is now directing "Night of the Iguana" in Mexico City, is to report to the De Laurentiis studio in Rome in February to begin work on the Christopher Fry screenplay.

De Laurentiis was partnered with Columbia in undertaking the Biblical epic but Col's financing reportedly has hit a snag. Previously the producer assigned four directors, each to handle a separate segment of the picture. They were Luchini Visconti, Federico Fellini, Orson Welles and Robert Bresson. An announcement from De Laurentiis in Rome this week doesn't mention any of them, but simply states that Huston has been signed to "take complete charge of the direction."

ST. PAUL FLYER

Is It Discovery of, or Return To, Sexy Themes?

St. Paul, Oct. 1.

Local exhibs are watching to see what happened at the boxoffice and what may happen otherwise in consequence of South St. Paul's Hollywood theatre showing a twin bill of "Erotica" (Indie) and "Chapman Report" (WB) "for adults only."

In strongly Catholic communities St. Paul itself and suburban St. Paul theatreowners have been shunning Legion of Deceny condemned pictures, films blatantly sexy and foreign releases running eyebrows up.

GUY ROBERGE GIVES POLICY

By GERALD PRATLEY

Swift Current, Sask., Oct. 1.

In this dustry and dilapidated prairie town sweltering in an unexpected 82-degree heat, all 12,000 residents seem to have turned out for the premiere of the National Film Board of Canada's first feature, "Drylanders," the location filming of which was carried out around Swift Current. Dealing as it does with the hard years of the depression, this was the right place to open the picture as the people responded warmly to a story that was part of their own lives. They were also extremely pleased and certainly proud that the film they were seeing was made in Canada by Canadian film makers.

Columbia Pictures (the distributor) and the NFB were wise in other ways to open the film in the west. A good deal depends upon the film's reception. If it goes over well, it will be that much easier for the Board to start its second feature. And the Board draws much of its support from the "grass roots" communities.

For years the Board has been urged to step into feature production by those who wanted to see a regular series of features being made in and about Canada. Although business has never been able to do it, partly because of Hollywood's domination of the Canadian market, the Board was reluctant to move into features for fear of bringing criticism down on the government and having it accused of "interfering in free enterprise."

Now times have changed, nationalism is stronger in the matter of "Canadian identity," features are fewer in supply and Hollywood is not the giant it once was. Into the breach steps Guy Roberge, Commissioner of the NFB. From the beginning of his term of office, Roberge was determined to get more Canadian shorts into the theatres and to one day start a feature film.

He has done this quietly and carefully, without upsetting Government members or bringing the trite criticism upon the Board for having "wasted the taxpayers money." Under his encouragement, the Board has now made two such diverse features as "Drylanders" and "Pour la Suite du Monde," and his film makers are turning out a wealth of shorts ranging from straight-forward news reports to fancy exercise in "cinema verite."

In company with Grant McLean, his director of production, Roberge held a press conference at Swift Current in which the matter of future features on a steady production basis was discussed.

Unlike most producers who make significant films but rush to assure the press that entertainment is their first concern, Roberge started by saying in his most disarming way that "we are not in the entertainment business. We want to make absorbing films, and in this way the public will be entertained. But we are not thinking of making musicals and comedies. We don't intend to displace Hollywood. This is foolish. We only want time on our own screens to show Canadian films. We are charged with the responsibility of interpreting Canadians to each other, and after years of short film making, we feel the time is right and our film makers experienced enough to make dramas with actors about Canadians in different walks of life."

An example of Roberge's way of working quietly and without raising a hue and cry over costs is seen in the production of "Drylanders." It was filmed in 1961 but the work of finishing it was spread over three years so that the $200,000 used could be taken from yearly allocations and profits without inflating the budget during one year.

"We work to a structure" said

Moral of 'Gone Are the Days' Seemingly That Racial Antagonism May Not Beguile Average Folks

Art for Theatres

Rialto Theatre in Durham, N.C., is featuring a front-of-house art exhibit in its lobby, and it figures to be drawing more than the usual kind of interest.

For the oils were brush-stroked by no beatnik, but rather by local Durham athletic wiz Frank Creech, centre on the Duke football team and devoted art student.

"Gone Are The Days" experience in its first Manhattan showing last week, when it opened almost literally to no business, looked "historic" until the weekend when its S.O.S. to civil libertarians and the usual art house upsurge starting Friday bailed it out.

What needs to be stressed is that this film opened behind a very respectable $30,000 ad budget and uniformly favorable critical notices in the Manhattan dailies. But the combination of the "humor" and the lack of stars known to the general film public were plainly against the release. How "funny" is the American Negro when he is on the receiving end of dynamite bundles, vicious dogs, cattle electric prods and so on?

Only 10 paid admissions came into the theatre the day after the reviews appeared. Attendance was only 70 customers the following day, after considerable press coverage of the opening day fiasco.

Actually, only one person showed up for the opening performance of the pic the day before the critical opinions appeared but several days after the ad campaign began.

"Gone Are the Days" is Ossie Davis' film adaptation of his own Broadway comedy of a few seasons back, "Purlie Victorious." Davis stars in the film along with his wife, actress Ruby Dee, both of whom appeared in the stage original.

The film's producers, Milton and Tom Hammer, are flabbergasted at this development. Produced for $211,000, "Days" is satirical. It pokes fun at "Uncle Tomism," white overlords, the Negro condition and American bigotry in general. The effort received the endorsement of leaders in the civil rights movement, some of whom, after the opening day's poor showing reiterated their support in a telegram sent last week to labor unions, organizations and other groups in an attempt to rally support for the feature. Signers included A. Philip Randolph, Roy Wilkins, James Farmer, Hobson R. Reynold and others.

Last Monday (30) evening, Barry Gray devoted his WMCA, N. Y., radio program to the picture and its predicament with Davis, Miss Dee,

'Monopoly' Cry Vs. Cobian Group In Puerto Rico

Charles M. Reagan has filed a $1,000,000 suit in N.Y. Federal Court against Commonwealth Theatres of Puerto Rico, its prez Rafael Ramos Cobian and exec veep Victor Carrady, charging conspiracy and monopoly in the distribution and exhibition of Cinerama pix in Puerto Rico. Further, he says the defendants established an illegal combination to restrain the business of operating Cinerama houses in P.R.

The defendants, says Reagan, prevented him and other parties from competing with them in bringing Cinerama to the island though, as yet, no Cinerama theatre has opened there. According to Reagan, he was negotiating with Cinerama to open a theatre in P.R. earlier this year, when the defendants filed a $2,000,000 suit against him and Cinerama to prevent Cinerama from making a contract with him.

Subsequent Promotion of 'Cleopatra' Is Whimsical And Off Amusement Page

As part of the "new look" for the "Cleopatra" ad campaign in the coming months, 20th-Fox is launching an off-the-amusement page newspaper ad schedule with a series of small, two-column ads of somewhat whimsical import.

Some typical copy lines: "Think Big! See Cleopatra"; "Best date ever imported from Egypt. Absolutely delicious. Cleopatra"; "My wife didn't speak to me all evening . . . Cleopatra left her speechless;" "Two on the Nile," etc.

The campaign also is being adapted for outdoor and transportation posting in all "Cleopatra" markets.

PREM GOES ALONG ON HARD-TIX 'CARDINAL'

Otto Preminger's "The Cardinal" has added another roadshow engagement to its list of domestic dates, bringing the total of such showings to three. It has been decided to play the film on a hardticket basis at the Egyptian Theatre, Los Angeles, where it opens Dec. 19.

Such had not been the original plan for the presentation of the Columbia release in Los Angeles. But pressure was reportedly applied from local sources to switch to a hardticket policy and the change was eventually made. Preminger is on record as being against roadshow procedure but went along with the hardticket showing of "Cardinal" in Boston, where it will have its world preem, and in New York.

The film is also the object or several benefit openings hosted by dignitaries and the Egyptian preem has now joined the list. A benefit showing of the pic will be held there hosted by California governor Pat Brown. Proceeds will go to the Rice Davis Clinic for Mentally Retarded Children. Other benefits already skedded include one sponsored by New York City mayor Robert F. Wagner at the DeMille Theatre, one in Boston at the Saxon Theatre sponsored by Richard Cardinal Cushing and a Washington benefit hosted by Attorney General Robert Kennedy and wife Ethel.

USIA May Send Its 'Themed' Shorts Into Commercial Channels O'seas

The U. S. Information Agency is mulling the possibility of seeking commercial distribution outlets overseas for some of the more than 300 documentaries it turns out each year, film services director George Stevens Jr. reported in New York last week. As the USIA's film program has been evolved in the past, the films have been serviced directly to theatres via information offices abroad, film libraries and mobile units—all free of charge of course.

Idea of possibly seeking commercial distribs for some of its pix would not be to earn money as much as it would be to get as wide a distribution as possible for the government-sponsored product. However, by going out via commercial distribs the pix woud not necessarily be any more "disguised" than they are now (that is, their production auspices would not necessarily be any more of a secret). In so far as possible, says Stevens, the USIA already avoids labelling their pix as such in those countries where it's not required by regulation. Point is made that audience resistence may be triggered just as soon as a USIA label shows on screen. (Commented Stevens: "The films are always attributable to us, though not always attributed to us.")

In New York to host a screening of five typical USIA items for the Screen Directors International Guild, Stevens summed up changes in the USIA film program under his tenure in office by saying he felt that now, more than any time in the past, "except possibly during the war," the USIA is seeking to establish "a sense of authorship in its pictures." While USIA pix are—foremost—expressions of the "psychological" (propaganda) arm of the government, they may also be valuable as expressions of the art of filmmaking. Thus, the film services chief has sought, in so far as possible, to give filmmakers their freedom in utilizing their own styles and techniques.

As To Content

While there may have been some disagreement in the craft audience as to the content of the five pix screened, there was much appreciation for the beautiful technical quality, especially the often strikingly original camerawork. Re film content, Stevens reminded the audience that the pix were made for overseas audiences and that all USIA pix were designed to promote specific policy aims of the U. S. Government. The four principal themes presently being stressed in USIA pix:

(1) the need for modernization (and the U. S. helps those underdeveloped peoples who help themselves)

(2) support of the United Nations

(3) the "insult to humanity" represented by the Berlin Wall, and

(4) the encouragement of peoples to support governments which allow freedom of choice.

Integration Problem

One of the pix screened for the N. Y. directors, "Five Cities of June," included a segment which Stevens thought to be the first direct USIA film treatment of this country's current integration problems. It featured the (ultimately) peaceful enrollment of two Negro students at the University of Alabama, and wound on an upbeat note to the effect that while America has many problems still to be solved, it is seriously working at those solutions.

Pic was edited and put into release prior to the recent Birmingham bombings and Stevens suggested that perhaps the overly rosy commentary might possibly be changed to recognize the fact audiences would be viewing the film with the Birmingham headlines still fresh in their minds.

Film services chief confirmed an earlier VARIETY report that the USIA has cancelled a projected 30-minute documentary entitled "The American Negro: A Progress Report." Cancellation, he said, was no reflection against the pic, produced by Willard Van Dyke and directed by Graeme Ferguson, but rather was dictated by the fact that the film, which was shot last year, was "out of date in light of recent events," including the civil rights March on Washington.

The USIA is now readying a 20- to 25-minute documentary on the march, under the direction of James Blue, which Stevens expects to be finished in a few weeks.

Also included in the program shown to the N. Y. directors was one of the six pix commissioned by the USIA last year to student filmmakers in American universities. The quality of the film, made by a graduate student at Northwestern on a $5,000 budget, was much admired by the pros. It also served to emphasize Stevens' point that the USIA has undertaken an important, though presently small, program to provide a training ground for embryo filmmakers.

Stevens noted that the U. S. has nothing comparable to the various government-sponsored film institutes abroad, especially behind the Iron Curtain, where youngsters are thoroughly trained in filmmaking. The USIA program of bringing in five talented youngsters each year is presently not much more than "a token effort," he said, but it's a first step in the right direction.

'Gone Are the Days'

author James Baldwin, Sidney Poitier, David Susskind and others participating. Reports of the film's disastrous start also stirred interest on the part of various groups and individuals who besigned the boxoffice with phone calls about the situation and also called the Hammers pledging their support of the pic, many offering to buy blocks of 50 and 100 seats to support the film.

Church & School Support

Church and school support has also been indicated, with one Dept. of Education rep calling to see about the arranging of special cut-rate morning showings of the film for elementary and secondary school students. The Hammers naturally agreed and plans are presently in motion to screen the pic for such groups at 75c a ticket. Organizations like the B'nai B'rith and the United Jewish Congress are also being contacted for support.

"Days" opened at the Tranx-Lux East Theatre Monday (23) and Harry Brandt, Trans-Lux Corp. prez has decided not to exercise his option to throw out the film, wishing rather to give it a further chance. He is keeping it in the theatre for two more weeks at least, according to the Hammers who are still hopeful the opening few days' situation can be reversed.

The film is the first production by the Hammers and was directed by Nick Webster. It's translation from stage to screen is a most literal one, in fact the most criticised point about the film was its legit-like quality. On Broadway "Purlie" ran for over seven months but was a $100,000 loser. Around 40,000 people saw it on Broadway with essentially the same cast as is in the film version and this is seen as a possible contributor to the Gotham reception. Also a possible factor, the Hammers figure, was the opening's timing which came on top of the funerals in Birmingham for the victims of that tragic bombing incident—not exactly setting the stage for a comedy satirizing the civil rights struggle. The Jewish high holy days are also a factor.

But these elements are not enough to explain the almost total lack of interest at the boxoffice on the part of the public. It also brings up that old arguement about just how influential critics are at the wickets.

The film had experienced a similar problem, but of a different nature before its release. At screenings for distributors, there was almost unanimous praise for the feature, he Hammers report, but the distribs also refused to handle the pic branding it "too controversial" and terms to that effect. The result is that the current Gotham booking is the film's sole engagement to date and, unless some miraculous things happen, it doesn't look like it will get mnay more, all of which would mean at least a $241,000 loss for the Hammers.

Colorama Future Remains Gabfest; Cure Unsighted

Problems besetting Colorama Features still await resolution. The company has been the subject of rounds of meetings for several weeks. These continue.

The task at Colorama remains financial liquidety. It goes back to last spring when a Canadian outfit, Telac Ltd., which also has a U.S. subsid in Telac Inc., purchased control of the company. It never pumped in the needed funds, however, and recently its prez, Herbert G. Stevenson, resigned as board chairman of Colorama, a post he had held since Telac's takeover.

The Canadian corp is still in 51% control of the company but the main interests at work apparently are two business investment corporations, one being Royal Business Funds, which have considerable coin tied up in the practically dormant operation. Colorama has put but one feature into distribution since Telac's May takeover, in addition to a couple of pix brought in by Telac. A partial financial interest in some of these is held by Colorama prez Dino Fazio who took over that job when the original topper of the company, Jules Weill, quit a few months back.

It is understood that negotiations have been in progress with an undisclosed distrib which would assume control of Colorama if details can be worked out. Such a move, while strengthening Colorama, involves several complexities in its overall fiscal pattern. It is believed that Carroll Puciato, Weill's original partner who sold his holdings to Stevenson, is still owed payoff on his stock and this may be one of the factors complicating present negotiations. Also understood to be a complication is Weill's retained 25% holding in the distrib.

The complexities being clear, if nothing else is, none of the people involved offer comment. Involved are the vested interests of Puciato, Stevenson, Weill, the SBICs, Fazio and others. To unravel these strands of interest is the challenge before the architects.

'CHARADE' FOR SOCIETY

Preem Earns 50G For Anti-Dropout Drive

Washington, Oct. 1.

The dressy high society benefit preview of Universal's "Charade" here, with First Lady Jacqueline Kennedy as honorary chairman and Mrs. Robert F. Kennedy and Mrs. David Brinkley as working cochairmen, earned $50,000 for the local Stay-in-School fund.

The money will be used to combat the school dropout problem in Washington public schools.

Ella Fitzgerald sang from the stage, and Tony Randall was emcee. Randall stayed over and went with Ethel Kennedy the next day to the opening of the new Senate crime investigation to watch Attorney General Kennedy as the leadoff witness.

Universal provided the new Cary Grant-Audrey Hepburn film, and Loew's donated use of its Palace Theatre here.

China Vs. USSR

our people." The film will present the Soviet revolution "from the Chinese point of view."

Feature will make the point that the Chinese peasant was "always threatened." These villains have been "Lions of the East," "Tigers of the West," "Leopards of the South" and "Bears from the North." Dramatic culmination of the message picture is reached when a Chinese peasant kills a white bear "after a life and death struggle." Remarks the Chinese, after the fight, standing on the dead white bear: "The Chinese is a real man. You wanted me to run. But this is going to happen only in your dreams. The day is near when you shall see the might of the Chinese!"

The Soviet press makes bitter comment respecting this new Chinese film. Writes the Soviet daily "Izvjestija":

"The Chinese picture has nothing to do with its name. "The Proletarian" must imply unity. This is foul zoological garden humbug with tigers, bears, leopards and other animals . . . We hope they are not going to put the tunes of 'The Internationale' as a musical background. . . ."

Three Years of Woe Rack Film Biz of Mexico

Washington, Oct. 1.

Mexican motion picture industry is still in the throes of a three year slump, the U.S. Commerce Dept. reported.

Featherbedding, union wage demands and low theatre admission prices were among the factors contributing to the downturn which saw two studios close and two others merge in 1962.

Also hitting the producers was its loss of the Cuban playoff market and a sharp decrease in export earnings to Venezuela.

Attendance also continued to slide last year. The only reliable statistics were from Mexico City where attendance fell to 77,300,000 from the 1961 mark of 80,000,000.

Ted Richmond will produce "Showdown in the Sun," Edward North screenplay, as a Yul Brynner starrer. Producer, who says pic probably will be released through Metro, hops to Madrid for confabs with Henry Hathaway about directing.

IRELAND'S DARLIN' FESTIVAL

GERMANS LOVE FOR ERIN'S CHARM

By HANS HOEHN

(VARIETY Berlin Rep)

Cork, Oct. 1.

Though the film industry of West Germany has been at ebbtide the last couple of years, there were nine German films entered here at the eigth annual Cork Film Festival, running Sept. 15-22. This was more films than any other nation entered. It should perhaps be remarked that the Germans were notably conspicuous among the tourists.

More and more tourists come to Ireland and it's especially the Germans who seem to have discovered a soft spot in their heart for the old sod. The beauty of the countryside, the relatively low prices and last not least the fact that the Irish are sort of "pro-German" because of their troubles with Britain have contributed to lure the Germans. Quite a lot of Germans are settling down here. One hears of a "German invasion." Nearly all the Irish this chronicler interviewed on that particular subject readily admitted that the Irish very much benefit from this "invasion."

The organization of the Cork festival proved excellent. There was nothing to beat the Irish hospitality. The festival nights are spent in the festival club in the City Hall. Evening wear (tuxedo) is compulsory but the nights in this club are a far departure from the conventional society cliche, in fact a gay and very unique mixture of New Year's Eve, Viennese Grienzig, old German ball, and a Bavarian Hofbraeuhaus—but all with an Irish touch and all on the level. Cork is perhaps the most strenuous of all film festivals—in a pleasant way, because it is the longest festival of them all. You can stay until 5 or 6 a.m.

The fact that Cork has (since 1961) an airport of its own has been another important contribution to this festival which therewith is now also travel-wise connected with the big- wide world.

The jury, which was composed of British Frank Hoare (president), Czech Iadislav Kachtik, French ean Nery, German Franz Rowas and Irishman Colm O'Laoghaire, said in its communique that it has been much impressed by the overall high level of quality and originality of the films entered this year—especially in the cartoon and the documentary categories. With regard to short fims, the jury said that it believes that by concentrating on this type of film is making a great contribution to progress in the art of film making since there is clear evidence that it is in this branch of production the experiment and the development of creative talent finds its greatest opportunity.

In all, he 1963 Cork festival saw the participation of 30 Nations including nearly all East Bloc countries. The total of screened films amounted to 98 — 23 full-length features (from 18 countries), 66 shorts plus nine full-length pix shown via retrospective programs which dedicated themselves to the good old "film francais" and "Shakespeare and the film."

Italy was again not represented at Cork. The last time Italy took part in Cork in 1960.

The U. S. had submitted eight films to the Cork festival, seven entries came both from Great-Britain and France.

Two features had their world preem here: Britain's "The Leather Boys," produced by Raymond Stross and directed by Sidney J. Furie, starring Rita Tushingham, an Spain's "Pact of Silence," directed by Antonio Roman, with Ivonne Bastien in the female lead.

The guest list showed around 100 names and quite a few implied prestige for Cork. Peter O'Toole of "Lawrence of Arabia" fame was perhaps the most celebrated. There were also Anne Heywood of England, Mrs. Raymond Stross, Mai Zetterling with her writer-husband, David Hughes (the twosome had entered a very good short, "The War Game," in the festival), Spain's Ivonne Bastien, Waltraud Haas, Gardy Granass and Heidi Treutler (the latter three of the German screen), and there were also quite a few players from East European countries. Also on the guest list were the names of U. S. director Gordon Stuart, British producer-distributor Kenneth Rive.

John Harris, American manager and starlet promoter, planed in from Hawaii and presented here a girl by the name of Leilani Byrd whom he described as "Miss Hawaii." The exotic creature made frontpage news here.

Hailed Though Outsider

Harry Brandt, perennial prez of the Independent Theatre Owners Assn. in New York, will be "Showman of the Year" at Allied States banquet.

Interestingly enough, the Gotham ITOA is not affiliated with Allied and therefore Brandt's kudo takes on a little extra something. He was recently elected to another term as ITOA prez, having served in that capacity since the organization's inception in 1933.

Television 'Macbeth' In Theatrical Reincarnation; Maurice Evans' Personal

Kansas City, Oct. 1.

Hallmark's television Emmy-winning "Macbeth," starring Maurice Evans and Judith Anderson, is to have its world premiere at the Rockhill Art Theatre here Oct. 20. The Sunday preem will benefit the People to People program, of which Joyce C. Hall, Hallmark president, also is national chairman. A second hard-ticket affair, the following night, will benefit the Caroline Benton Cockefair chair for continuing education at U of Missouri at Kansas City (until this year, Kansas City U.) to inaugaurate a Shakespeare Festival Year at the educational institution.

Evans arrives Oct. 19 for a number om local p.a.'s including a Sunday afternoon tv guest shot and a Monday morning appearance and press conference on the UMKC campus for local student editors.

"Macbeth" is dated for a three-week stay to be followed by a 10-week Sunday afternoon series of Shakespeare films, probably on a subscription basis with emphasis on local schools and colleges as lushest market. Joseph Torregrosa is manager of the Rockhill, a unit of Louis Sher's Art Theatre Circuit. The Shakespeare series is the third specially arranged series to play the art house. Last season Torregrosa ran the Golden Operetta series on Wednesday nights. The previous year, a Sunday afternoon encore series of European film classics was presented.

Negroes Keep Up Clamor For Rights In High Point

High Point, N.C., Oct. 1.

Negroes picketed two theatres over weekend. Party of teen-age or under demonstrators silently marched through the downtown section during the peak afternoon traffic period. At Main Street drive-in, hundred of white spectators gathered, but police reported no incidents.

For several hours youths sought to purchase tickets at the Paramount Theatre. As one was refused a ticket, he went to the rear of the line and awaited his time to ask again. Another Negro, an adult, marched back and forth in front of the theatre carrying a sign.

Meanwhile, 13 lined up along the sidewalk at the Center Theatre singing songs and blocking the route to the doors. These were hauled to police headquarters by patrol cars where 10 under 16 years of age were turned over to juvenile authorities and three older ones were booked for obstructing the sidewalk.

Bingo Banished From One County; 'Winked' Elsewhere

Dayton, Oct. 1.

Thanks to the efforts of local attorney Emanuel Nadlin, bingo games in Dayton and outlying Montgomery County are a thing of the past, and if Nadlin had his way, the same thing would happen in all 88 counties of Ohio. He recently signed an agreement to withdraw his pending anti-bingo suits from both the Montgomery County Common Pleas and the Ohio Supreme Court, after city and county officials decided not to appeal a court decision which held bingo of all kinds, whether for charity or personal profit, was illegal in Ohio.

The bingo hassle started when City Manager Herbert W. Starick late last spring issued a set of "regulations" under which the city would permit non-church bingo to return to Dayton without harassment, after a crackdown a year earlier. (During that period, several churches had sponsored games without interference, but non-church operations were suspended) Nadlin tried to have city officials stop the games, and when they did not, he petitioned the Montgomery County Common Pleas court to prohibit the city manager from establishing the bingo rules. He also asked state officials in Columbus to interfere, but the Governor (James A. Rhodes) and the Attorney General said it was a local matter.

Then Nadlin petitioned the Montgomery Common Pleas Court to prohibit the city manager from establishing the new bingo rules. Meanwhile, several groups sponsored bingo games, including the Variety Club of Dayton, all to raise money for philanthropic purposes to a degree, at least.

In a decision late in August, Judge Robert L. McBridge scathingly criticized the city manager's action, and held that bingo was gambling and illegal, regardless of the purpose or the sponsor. He also ordered the city to pay Nadlin $1,500 in fees and court costs.

Nadlin said the city agreed to the injunction against bingo, and he asked that his pending anti-bingo suits be dismissed. In an accompanying note to the Supreme Court clerk, Nadlin wrote:

"Though I am dismissing this action, I remain deeply concerned with the fact that unlawful bingo gambling is being conducted and condoned throughout the other 87 counties of the state of Ohio on a very broad basis. It is my hope and prayer that if and when Judge McBride's decision is published and disseminated throughout the state, its effect will be such that it will no longer be necessary for me to guard and protect the law of this state as contemplated in this case."

Cordele, Ga. — M. P. Jones, former manager of Martin's Florala, Ala., theater, is the new manager of circuit's Crisp Theatre here, vice C. L. Reddick, who resigned.

Taking Care of Patty

Washington, Oct. 1.

Otto Preminger office has negotiated premiere here of "The Cardinal" Dec. 13 at the Trans-Lux Theatre as a benefit for the Patty Corte Fund. "Advise and Consent" had previously been a opening night benefit for the same fund here.

Patty Corte, 17, is the orphan daughter of the late Charles Corte, White House photographer for UPI and war correspondent. She has been paralyzed from the neck down since a July 7, 1961, auto accident which killed her mother, father and aunt.

White House and Congressional Photographers Assn. established the charitable fund in her behalf. It is the only source of revenue to pay for her care.

Costing More to Write For Screen, Television; Guild Seeks Hiked Fees

Hollywood, Oct. 1.

Request for approval of a five-year special assessment which would up the minimum membership fee $15 a year and the basic dues based on earnings of writers one-fourth of one percent annually will be asked of members of Writers Guild of America West this fall. WGAW dues committee made the recommendation for the hike, and the council okayed it.

Guild sought to hike the dues and fee earlier this year in the form of a constitutional amendment, but members failed to give it the required two-thirds majority needed for adoption. Where the earlier attempt embraced both WGA East and West, the new effort probably will be confined to WGAW. New proposal would hike the membership fee from the current $10 annually to $25, and the basic assessment from the current 1% to 1¼%, for the five-year period.

Behind the guild move, and its motivating force, is the conversion from its straight residual format in vidpix to the royalty plan, wherein a writer henceforth owns 4% of a telefilm, in perpetuity, and including the overseas runs, for the first time in guild history.

WGAW estimates it needs $100,000 a year for the five years. This is for record keeping; additional data processing machinery; additional space which will be taken in the Guild building space now rented to others; policing, auditing; additional personnel; contract enforcement (including litigation and arbitration); handling and distribution of checks and statements. There are certain special non-recurring costs, such as office equipment. All this involved machinery will also be used for theatrical films released to tv.

Naomi Ainslie tv residuals administrator, is in charge of the royalty operation.

Guild is having a series of group meetings with members, about 125 in each group, explaining the need for a new levy to them. This is an educational group by WGAW, which feels frankly it neglected to fully inform members of the reasons it needs more income.

REDS WINNERS; SHUSH PRIEST

By EDWARD F. MacSWEENEY

Cork, Oct. 1.

Communist bloc countries stepped up participation in Cork's International Film Festival (8th) this year and took home one St. Finbarr award and two certificates of merit. Finbarrs are the fest's top awards.

Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia and Poland have been taking part in the festival for some years and sending entries for the competitive classes — documentaries, cartoons, educational and general interest categories—and features for screening in the non-competitive section. Last year Russia joined the team and sent both films and a delegation. This year Rumania and Bulgaria were also represented.

Czechoslovakia won the St. Finbarr award for "The Cinema" and also picked up a certificate of merit for "The Orator." Another certificate of merit was won by Yugoslavia for "The Game" and this picture also took the Film Societies' Award for the film of most interest to film society audiences.

The jury at the festival was composed of representatives of Czechoslovakia, Germany, Britain, France and Ireland. Only one award crossed the Atlantic—the St. Finbarr in the animated and cartoon section which was presented to the National Film Board of Canada for "The Great Toy Robbery."

The jury saw 73 entries in the competitive classes and audiences also had opportunities of seeing about 20 feature films during the week, only two "The Leather Boys" (British Lion) and "Impact of Silence" (Spain) were preems.

There was no official American representation but "David and Lisa" made by Heller-Perry Productions, which won the award for the best picture by a new director for Frank Perry at Venice last year was received enthusiastically by the critics.

An exhibit from Sweden, "The Mistress," starring Bibi Anderrson who won a best actress award at Berlin for her performance in the main role, was condemned by the "Cork Examiner" published locally. The critic was criticised in the columns of his own paper the following day by one of the delegates, Father John A. V. Burke, of the International Catholic Cinema Office. A minor controversy blew up when a local priest supported the critic's view, but the general view was that this was a picture shown once only to an adult audience and did project a message that evil results in ultimately the cause of destruction.

Bulgarian delegate remarked that his country's flag was not among the flags of the nations flown at the cinema, and the Russians complained about an unspecified German picture. The Russians were also observed to be doing some high speed translating to each other when watching the Gary Cooper biog "The Tall American," the piece which apparently interested them was the scene of Coop testifying before the Un-American Affairs Committee.

It was the quietest festival to date. There was no official American participation or stars, although "Miss Hawaii" did arrive at the end of the week on a promotional stunt for the Honolulu Film Festival 1964. British stars on hand included Ann Heywood with her husband producer Raymond Stross, Liz Fraser, Peter O'Toole and David Kosoff.

Working on a shoestring budget festival director Dermot Breen says that the festival operates in the black and may be extended next year when he hopes to secure permission of the International Film Producers' Association to introduce awards for top acting and directing seen in the features.

Kroll In Paris on First, U Sets Second Project For Its 'New Horizons'

Some months ago Universal disclosed plans to establish a special production arm for the purpose of developing new creative picture-making personnel via the making of low-budget pix. So far, no films have hit market under the plan, called "New Film Horizons." But a second project is presently in the works. It's "Andy," tagged a "modern drama," to be produced and directed by Richard Serafian from his own original screenplay.

"First "New Horizons" film is in pre-production work. It's "The Guns of August," based on Barbara Tuchman's Pulitzer Prizewinning book. Nathan Kroll and Lawrence White will make it. Kroll is now in Paris scouting locations for the feature.

"Andy" will be Serafian's first feature, he having previously been a director of industrial, documentary and tv films. Universal has been moving slowly with the "new horizons" plan in order to give all concerned ample time to get projects ready for production and in good shape before they actually roll. Since the product produced under the scheme will be in addition to U's regular full-scale budget output, there is no pressure to grind out these low-budgeters to fill any product need.

The company's idea is to develop young producers, directors, writers, actors for eventual graduation into U's high-budget efforts. In the process, U will be getting additional product which will help fill the much discussed "product shortage" and will also be developing an inventory of potential art house pix, in that most of the "new horizons" efforts will be of a specialized nature.

Berlin Arts Fair Tees Off With Philharmonic

Berlin, Sept. 24.

The upcoming 13th Berliner Festwochen, the city's annual Arts Fair, will open Sept. 29 with a concert by the Berlin Philharmonic (under Karl Boehm) at the High School of Music, as in previous years. The Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra is going to have a house of its own beginning Oct. 15. On that day, the city's new Philharmonie, an ultra-modern concert hall, will be launched by a concert of the Berlin Philharmonic. That concert will wind up the Arts Fair. Herbert von Karajan, chief conductor of the Philharmonic, will baton this concert.

The concert side is substantial again. In addition to Boehme and Karajan, the Berlin Philharmonic will have such conductors as Hans Werner Henze, Hans Martin Schneidt and Darius Milhaud, who along with Serge Baudo, will conduct works by himself. The noted Concertgebouworkest Amsterdam, under Eugen Jochum, will guest here five days prior to the beginning of fest.

Other important dates of this year's Berlin Arts Fair include the new staging of Verdi's "Macbeth," under Gustav Rudolf Sellner, with Mario Rossi conducting, at Deutsche Oper Berlin; the Theatre Royal de la Monnaie, Brussels, presenting of Offenbach's "Tales of Hoffmann"; guest appearances of the Black Theatre of Prague; Yi-Kwei Sze, with Chinese Songs, at the Oak Gallery; and the European preem of Edward Albee's "Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf" at Schlosspark Theatre. Dr. Wolfgang Stresemann is head of the city's Festwochen this year. He replaced the late Dr. Gerhart von Westerman, who headed the fest ever since its start back in 1951.

O'Connell ('Greenwich') Plans Prod. in Italy

Rome, Sept. 24.

Jack O'Connell, Yank director of "Greenwich Village Story," one of U.S. entries at Venice Film Fest this year, expects to produce and direct his next pic in Italy next spring. Titled "Friends and Romans," the film is set in Italy and the U.S. It is based on the director's own treatment written some time back and recently updated.

O'Connell, who has left to scout locations for subsequent projects in Ibiza, Spain and Tangiers, disclosed he had sold "Greenwich Village" to Mario Arbace for Italy and France shortly after its Venice debut. Yank filmmaker returns to U.S. briefly before resuming at his Rome base of operations. "Greenwich," incidentally, is only Yank pic invited to be screened at the upcoming October Naples Film Meetings.

Disney Starts Shooting 'Emil' in Germany; 2d Kaestner Script

Berlin, Sept. 24.

Walt Disney Productions has started shooting "Emil and the Detectives" here. This is described as the first film of non-political calibre to be made in the German capital by an American company since the war. "Emil" will be the second Erich Kaestner story Walt Disney has brought to the cinema screen. The first, the Hayley Mills starrer, "The Parent Trap," was based on Kaestner's "The Double Lottchen," and brought acclaim to 15-year-old Hayley Mills. The role of "Emil" will give a like chance to 10-year-old Bryan Russell of Los Angeles. Major adult role is portrayed by American Walter Slezak, with German players Heinz Schubert and Peter Ehrlich as his accomplices.

Walt Disney came to Berlin to finalize arrangements for shooting this pic. Opening scenes were photographed in the little Hessian town of Alsfeld, near Frankfurt, with Peter Tewksbury directing and Guenter Senftleben, a German, in charge of lensing. Associate producer Peter V. Herald, Disney's Continental production chief, then moved his 70-man crew back here where they embark upon extensive location work before moving onto the sound stages of UFA Studios for about seven weeks of interiors.

ITALY HYPER-RESPONDS TO 'HOW WEST WAS WON'

Rome, Oct. 1.

"How the West Was Won" (Metro-C-rama) is off to an early and strong start in the 1963-64 Italian b.o. stakes. Pic, which racked up a sensational $540,000 in one Milan house last season (182 days), already has an $80,000 leg on this stanza for that same house and a new opening in a Genoa key. It will be a hard one to top this fall and winter, though "Cleopatra", "Lawrence", and other strong items will also bid for title.

Remainder of early fall field includes a large number of Italo exploitation pix which are expected to fade because of high numbers and low average quality.

"The Great Escape" (Dear-UA) is currently fourth in the Italo keys, and "The Sword of Lancelot" (U) is making a strong early showing in the number 8 spot. "Giant" in a Warners revival is running 16th, while "Le Monachine" (The Young Nuns) (Astoria) is coming up on basis of early returns.

Wrap-up figures for 1962-63 show Titanus "The Leopard" an easy winner, over "Longest Day" (20th), "Bounty" (Metro), and "Il Sorpasso" (Incei), an Italo sleeper.

Yanks copped 46.5% of seasonal market (vs. 40.4% for '61-'62) as against 46.5% for Italos and coproducts (vs. 52.8%).

Anzacs Cold Audiences?

Melbourne, Oct. 1.

French concert pianist Philippe Entremont, on his second tour Down Under for the Australian Broadcasting Commission, said at a press conference here that he rates Australians among the lowest on the audience - warmth barometer.

He rated Russians and South Americans as the warmest and claimed that very few audiences were colder than Aussies.

Other visiting artists have found that Aussie audiences are reserved during performance but at the end will become the most enthusiastic of any.

Entremont found this incredulous. "In Sydney," he said, "The Sydney Symphony Orchestra was finishing off my programme with a beautiful rendition of Tschaikowsky and the audience sat there like great fat cows and scuttled out before the end."

Frankenheimer At Helm Of 'Train' After Penn Resigns As Director

Paris, Oct. 1.

John Frankenheimer firmly believes that the same script made by different directors makes for quite different films. That is why he found his sudden takeover of "The Train" (UA), from Arthur Penn, on a week's notice a difficult affair.

Frankenheimer is now well along with the pic here and he claims it is one of the most rugged projects he has tackled. That is mainly due to the need to change the script as he goes along. This is not a criticism of the original, he says, but the fact that he just sees the same plot, action and meaning in another light.

Practically the whole film is being shot on location which also means improvisation as well as script changes. Penn ankled the pic after a disagreement with the producer. Frankenhemler set back a project to heed the call of star and production participant Burt Lancaster.

Film is technically a French-Italo coproduction of Ariane Films and Dear Film with United Artists investing for worldwide distribution rights. It is thus eligible for both French and Italo film aid, 14% on grosses and is being made in English and French.

Frankenheimer sees the pic as essentially an action story of railroad worker resistance to the German conquerors in France during the occupation of the last World War. It shows a last attempt to save some Franch art treasures the Germans want to take out of France as the Allies approach Paris.

Frankenheimer is amazed by the cooperation of the French railroads. When he visited on a depot exterior site, he pointed to the many old style locomotives and trains at his disposal. After blowing up trains in a simulated aid raid, the crew moves to Rouen and Paris for a few days of studio work.

This is his first pic abroad and he would like to do more. Next project is "The Confessor." Besides Lancaster, "Train" cast has British thesp Paul Scofield and some German players. The others are French.

New, Important Change in British Booking Pattern May Provide Fresh Hazards for Indie Prods., Distribs

London, Sept. 24.

A new and significant shift in the British booking pattern during the last few weeks may provide fresh hazards for independent producers and distributors — and a few majors, too, who are standing in line hopefully waiting for dates on one or other of major circuits.

For what is believed to be the first time ever, a picture has been held over on general release in a substantial number of situations, thus making a serious dent in the earning potentiality of the film skedded to follow by reducing the number of important outlets.

The pacemaker in this major new trend is the Mirisch Bros.' "Great Escape" (UA), which did standout biz on all its prerelease engagements, and was booked for holdover runs even before its opening on general release. It is estimated that about 40 important theatres played the pic for its second week, in addition to the key and secondary key situations which play holdovers when returns justify.

Not An Isolated Case

That the policy instituted for "Escape" is not an isolated case of giving merited additional playing time to a film which has done well at the wickets, is proved by reports that similar practices will be used in the coming week for other upcoming major releases, among them "From Russia With Love" and "Tom Jones," both of which are UA releases.

One unusual feature of the development, which was tried out on the Rank circuit, was that two Rank releases, which made up the double bill scheduled to follow "Escape," were themselves hurt, having sacrificed the grossing potential from 40 important theatres.

Welcomed By Producer With Hit

While the new trend is understandably welcomed by the producer with a hit pic, it presents considerable added burdens for others, particularly as it has come at a time when product availability (on a numerical basis at any rate) exceeds demands. And both the De Grunwald Pulls Out Of 'Budapest' Prod.

London, Oct. 1.

Dimitre de Grunwald has confirmed that he has withdrawn his British participation from the tripartite production of "Milly Goes to Budapest," in which he was associated with Cinerama and Hungarofilm. He is now back here with the director, James Hill, and the English unit.

De Grunwald said his conception of the film, in style and script, was becoming increasingly different from that of his partners, and since delays in shooting through bad weather necessitated the unavoidable withdrawal of Lionel Jeffries (committed to Columbia pic starting Oct. 7), it seemed in the best interests of the project to let their partners make the film as they saw it.

Nicolas Reisini, Cinerama prexy, has now agreed with Hungarofilm that the film should be directed by Richard Thorpe and coproduced by Thomas Conroy and Istvan Nemeskurty of Hungary. The production schedule has been extended to run through to December.

Shuffle the Product; 'Lawrence' in Moveover Despite Holding High

Tokyo, Sept. 24.

Toho's knotty problem of bookings for its Yuraku-za Theatre in this city was solved by a series of Chinese checker moves. "Lawrence of Arabia," (Col), which has been going socko at the house since its opening the second week in February, moves this week to the roadshow Imperial Theatre where Julian Berman, Columbia's Far East supervisor, predicts it will run at least through the New Year holidays.

Berman previously was reluctant to let Toho move the picture, since it continues to register higher receipts than its minimum for pullout. In its first 219 days, "Arabia" scored a gross of $756,000 at the house and is likely to become Columbia's all-time Japan hit.

To make room for "Lawrence" at the Imperial, Toho is pulling "Tico and the Shark," a Nippon Herald release, which has been strong since its early summer bow. Moving into the Yuraku-za is "Marilyn" (Fox), which will be followed by "Bye Bye Birdie" (Col) in mid-October.

It was expected that "V.I.P.'s" (M-G) would go into the Yuraku-za Sept. 1. The house's lobby had displays for the picture weeks earlier. But "Lawrence" couldn't be budged and the Metro film went across the street to the Yuraku-za where it is doing very well.

Probe Future Of Film Aid Under Common Mart

Paris, Oct. 1.

The Syndicate of French Spectacles has asked for an audience with Centre Du Cinema head Michel Fourre Cormeray to discuss the future of the recently revised governmental Film Aid setup.

The CDC this year won a concession from Common Mart headquarters in Brussels to allow for a 14% kickback on local grosses to pic producers instead of the previous 5%, as practiced in Italy. This revved up production and 100 pix will be made this year compared to last year's 80 or less.

But Film Aid still runs out in June of 1964, and the Syndicate would like to know if it will be renewed on the new basis or whether ECM demands for eventually doing away with all aid will be abided by.

The Syndicate seems to feel that it will be too soon to lower aid now that production has just begun to perk again. They want the government film office to try to keep it at its present level for some time yet. It feels this should be kept up as long as filmgoing is falling here and there is still a general economic uneasiness.

The Syndicate believes that 14% aid has not led to a feared spate of quickies. The raised aid is also leading to more coproduction and more U.S. filmmaking through local companies. It remains to be seen if the CDC will again try to go against the Rome Treaty ECM rules and keep up Film Aid as long as necessary. This may mean that ECM film plans will be set back again on this point.

Aussie Film Biz on Spring Upswing With 'V.I.P.'s' Ace New Pic; 'Birds' Big

Sydney, Sept. 24.

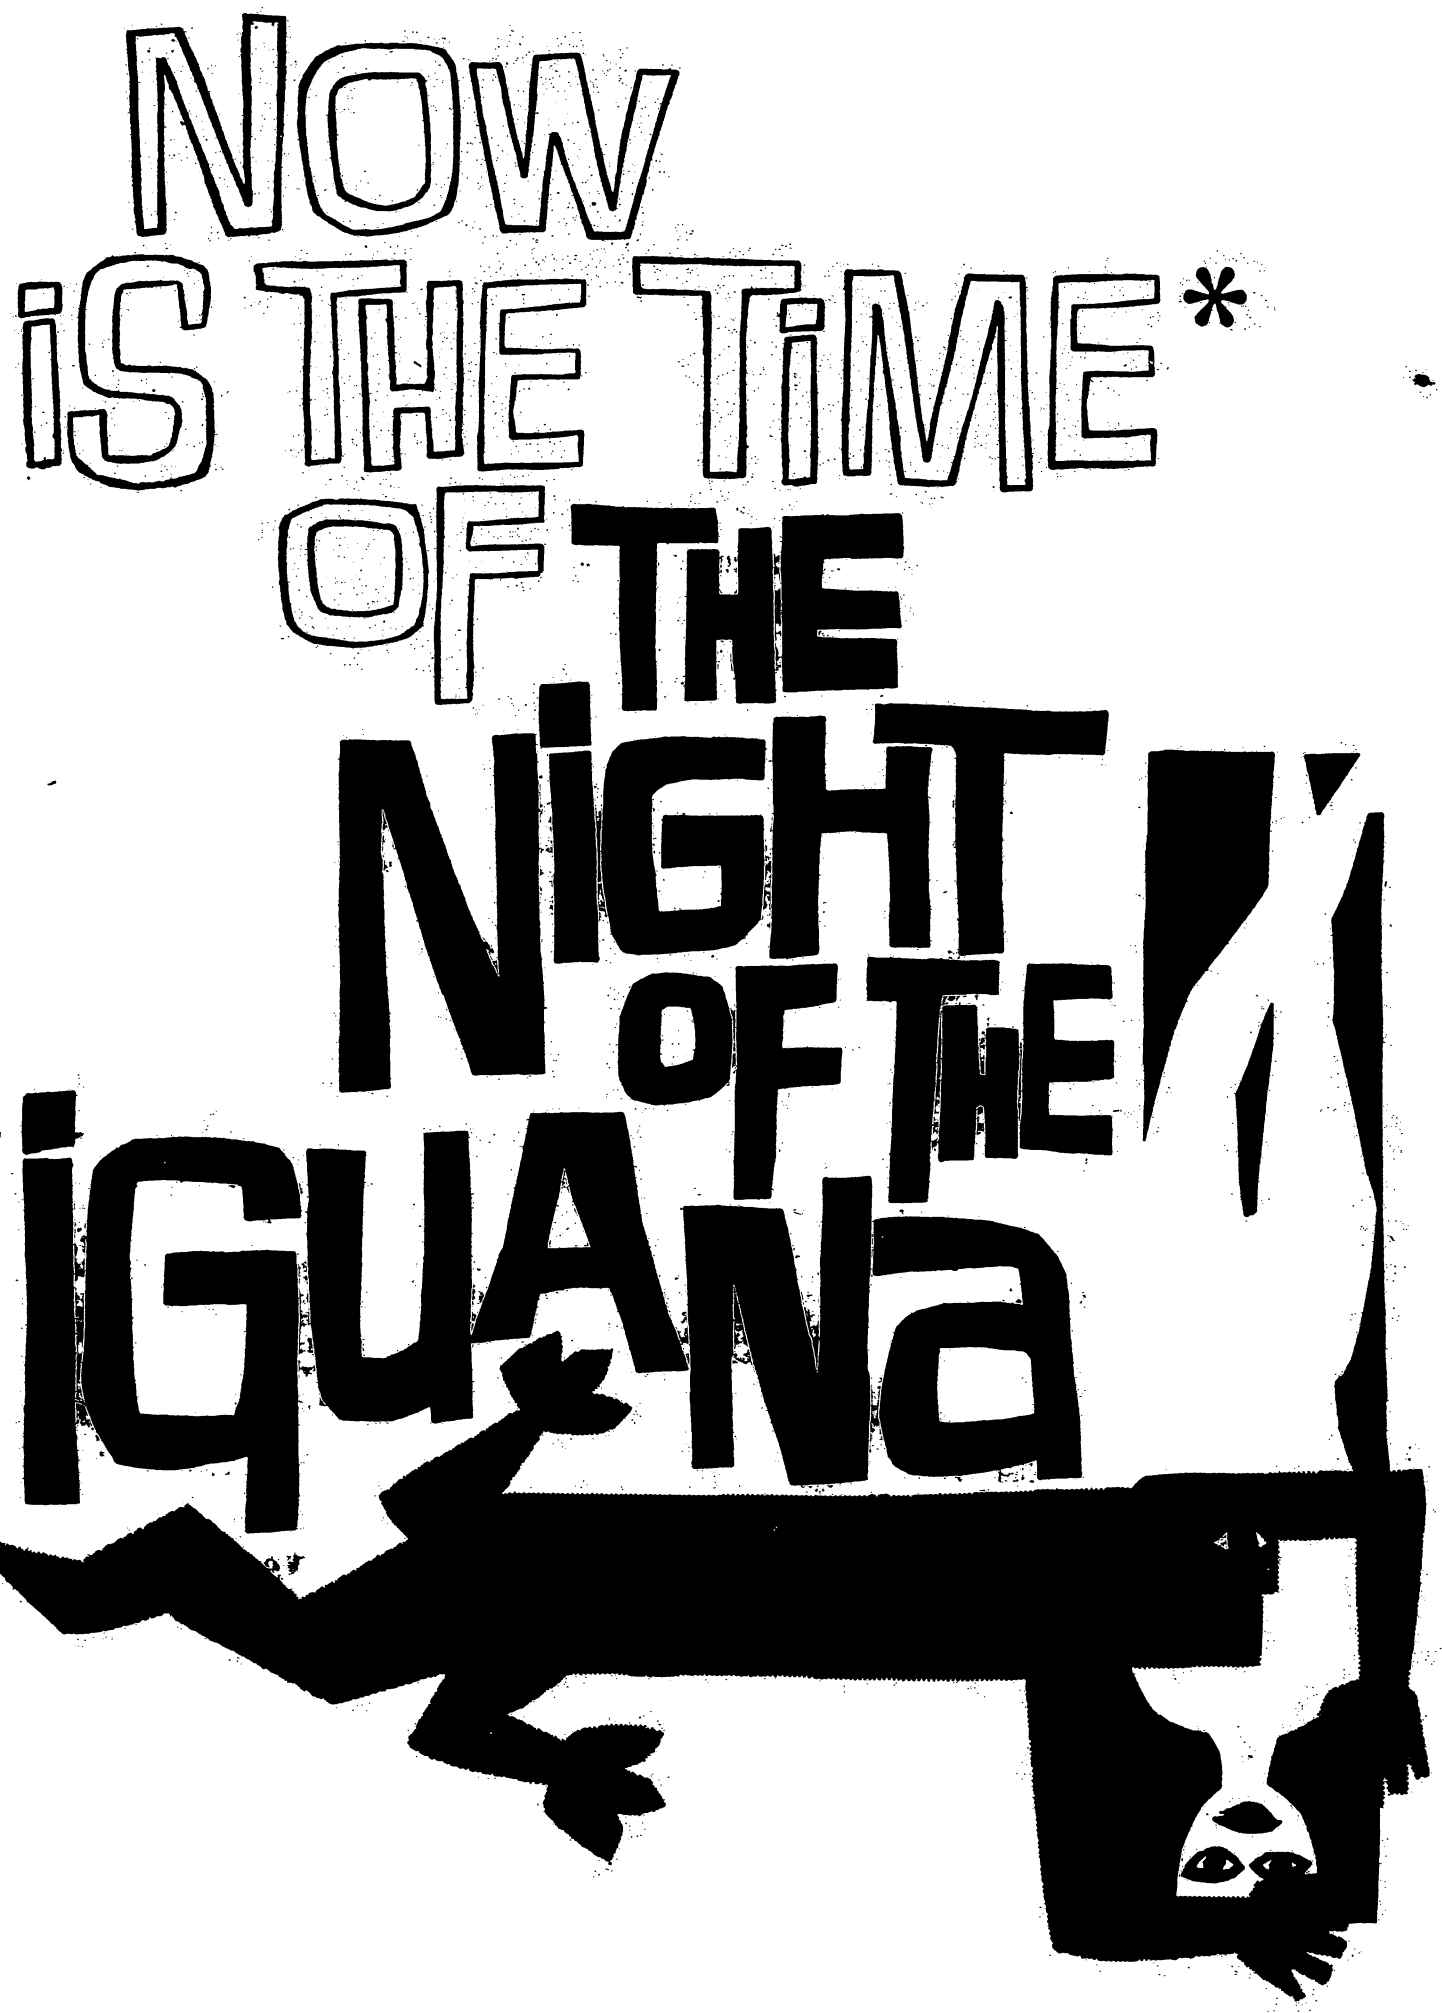
Spring span here sees an uplift in film biz generally here and summer bow-in (October-February) is expected to give showmen solid boxoffice returns, with healthy trading for the outdoor epics. Product flow right through to next fall indicates a breakaway from sex dramas, shot-and-shell and Westerns to lighter fare designed to win back teenagers to the cinema.

Metro has a smash hit with its "V.I.P.s" coast-to-coast, given a publicity hypo via a personal in the keyers by Rod Taylor. Pic goes out this week, too, into the nabes and drive-ins for additional hefty coin.

Biz is powerful, too with "Barabbas" (Col), "55 Days at Peking" (BEF), "How West Was Won" (MG-M), "Mondo Cane" (Blake), "West Side Story" (UA) (winding up run of 66 weeks), and "80 Days" in for repeat play dates.

"The Birds" (U) finished a six week run here, with "Tammy and Doctor" (U) hitting five weeks in the medium price bracket. Good trade is coming likewise with "L-Shaped Room" (Lion-BEF), "Two for Seesaw" (UA), "Bon Voyage" (MGM) and "Whatever Became of Baby Jane" (WB).

In Melbourne, "Longest Day" (20th) is surprising show biz by swinging into 37th week, with "55 Days at Peking" (BEF) and "Sodom and Gomorrah" (Rank) also okay. Outstander is "V.I.P.s" in the two Metro-owned houses.



*Monday was the day in Mismaloya, Mexico, when director John Huston and producer Ray Stark began filming for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and Seven Arts Productions the screen adaptation of Tennessee Williams' prize-winning play. Heading a distinguished international cast are Richard Burton as Shannon, Ava Gardner as Maxine, Deborah Kerr as Hannah and Sue Lyon as Charlotte. Screenplay by John Huston and Anthony Veiller. This motion picture will be released by MGM throughout the world in late 1964.

POSTSCRIPT TO MURDER

Vienna Fusses Over $16 For Grave Upkeep

Vienna, Oct. 1.

Because the necessary $16 was not provided in the "budget" of the Vienna state theatres, management of the opera suggested the union go passing-of-the-hat for that amount. The $16 is for the upkeep of the grave of Dagmar Fuhrich, who was 12 years old when stabbed to death backstage at the opera a few months ago.

In the horror of the murder, the general management of state opera, under Herbert von Karajan, issued an official statement that funeral and all expenses would be covered. A few days later, the Ministry of Education headed by Heinrich Drimmel, declared its inability to ratify this rash decision.

Union of Artists and Stage Hands replied that they will pay the $16.

The confessed murderer, Joseph Weinmann, is awaiting trial.

There are 40 pix entered from 16 countries. An International Convention on problems of school cinema is also planned. One of the speakers is Prof. Bernard Quebeck of Indiana's St. Joseph College, who'll talk on "Audio-visual aids and the teaching of music in American schools."

German Censor Board Extending To 'Political' Control of Product; Bans '4 Days Naples'; Cuts 'Altona'

Frankfurt, Oct. 1.

Latest alarm in the West German film industry—to the American distributors and to the West German producers—is that the country's all-powerful censoring agency, the Freiwillige Selbskontrolle der Filmwirtschaft (Voluntary Self-Control of the Film Industry) has set itself up as a "political" control. Members of the Film Censorship Board, as the FSK is generally known here, are no longer restricting themselves to only those cuts that lie within their power, that is cuts concerning immorality, violence, nationalistic, militaristic or anti-racial scenes.

The FSK has suddenly turned its full force on "political" tendencies the censors feel are not favorable to the Germans or to the German image at home. And the German public, on learning about these outrageous slicings and bans, are hopping mad. Editorials in leading German newspapers are protesting against the excessive powers suddenly assumed by the German censors, one leading paper heading its story "Who is going to protect us from the Film Censors? The Censors are going in a dangerous political direction . . ."

Two U.S. Releases Hit

Most recent scissoring of films, which were of political themes of which the German censors did not approve were in two Italian pics, with American distributors. One is "Four Days of Naples," which met with objections from the censorship board because it dealt with a subject unfriendly to the Germans—the four days in which the Germans took over Naples during the war.

The other was "Condemned of Altona" (20th) which was cut tremendously because of the "political" tendencies the German censors did not feel the German public should be confronted with.

Latter pic, made by Italian director Vittorio de Sica, has been drastically altered for the German cinemas. In one scene, a German who managed to switch with the political currents was combined in name with two leading German industrialists, and another prominent German was linked with the Nazi criminals. The censors demanded that these names be removed because "today these men have a good reputation known throughout the world."

Communistic Hate Campaign

The censors also added that the names had been included as part of the "Communistic hate campaign," being instituted against the Germans. A scene showing former German Minister of Defense Strauss was also eliminated from the German version because it was not a "favorable" one, and it could recall to the East Germans that West Germany was building an army which might one day be set against them in a battle between the Commies and the Western World.

Thus, the films as it is being shown in Germany will have little relation to the pic exhibited in other countries.

The German censorship board includes a representative of the Catholic and the Protestant church plus business and film reps.

Situation concerning Metro's "Four Days of Naples" is even

Spain's Bargain-Basement Westerns; British Started It There in 1958

By HANK WERBA

Madrid, Oct. 1.

The Spanish film industry is almost as saddle-sore today as Hollywood was for years during the film heyday of its Golden West. The land rush is on to get a "Western" into production and the contagion is spreading out to coproducers in France and Italy and has also caught up with Hollywood.

It is no surprise that Spain has become a happy hunting ground for oater production. Hollywood turned its back on Westerns when television screens became clouded with gunsmoke. But the market for Westerns abroad is apparently as strong as ever and Spain offers many particular advantages to qualify it as the logical successor to take over where Hollywood left off.

In the first place, the low-cost economy helps bring this product in at a price that safeguards investment and profit. There are also such features as reliable climate, varied far west terrain, availability of horseflesh and cattle and the myriad facial types that make atmosphere casting for Indians, Mexicans, plainsmen and Lone Rangers a dead cinch.

Chronologically, Raul Walsh reined the first Western in Spain (for Britain) when he directed Kenneth More and Jayne Mansfield in "The Sheriff of Fractured Jaw." This was early in 1958. It must have been feasible even then, for Walsh was getting a daily average of 18 to 20 setups during his five-week location schedule on Castilian plains.

It was not until 1961-62 that British director-producer Michael Carreras formed an American company to coproduce "The Savage Guns" with Jose Maess's Tecisa Films. The cast, headed by Richard Basehart, Rod Taylor, Alex Nicol and Paquita Rico, filmed exteriors in the colorful arroyos and flatlands of Almeria. "Savage Guns" was the first Western fully fabricated in Spain and exteriors were filmed at Sevilla Studios in Madrid. It is said that Metro's distribution advance to Carreras and Spain-Portugal guarantees to Tecisa provided benefits on the low-budgeter before cameras started rolling.

At this point, a French producer, Marius LeSeur, joined with a Spanish cooperative, Copercines, headed by enterprising Eduardo Manzano. Copercines, last year, built a Western set some 25 miles from Madrid, nicknamed it Golden City and started to coproduce bargain-basement Westerns with his Gallic associate. In quick order, they turned out "The Sword of Zorro," "Welcome Padre Murray," "The Terrible Sheriff" and "The Shadow of Zorro." Hispamer Films jumped on the chuckwagon with "Three Swords of Zorro" and Urania Films produced a comedy Western called "Torrejon City" (Torrejon, near Madrid, is where the U.S. Air Base is located.)

This year the trend is broadening to include Hollywood producers and stars. Lester Welch joined with Tecisa to put "Gunfighters of Casa Grande" into the mill under the direction of Roy Rowland. Cast was topped by Alex Nicol, Jorge Mistral and Steve Rowland

Satyajit Roy Sez India Pix Go Well in Russia

Bombay, Sept. 24.

Indian producer Satyajit Roy, who recently returned from Moscow, said there was fine demand for India's films in Russian cinemas. The Russian authorities, however, were not keen on buying Indian pix or selling Russian films to India.

They would, however, welcome an exchange program. In this, the Russos are rated here to be clever since by exchange alone can they force Indian producers to give something of value by releasing Red films in India, which otherwise have no ready market. No distributor here so far has indicated he would invest money in Soviet pix, and the films from Russia in the hands of producers (obtained by exchange) are languishing in the vaults.

Eidophor Impressively Demonstrated

Halpern's Views On 'Rivalry' Between Closed-Circuit (For Specials Only) And Tollvision

Theatre Network Television, long operating in closed-circuit, last week unveiled its new Eidophor color projector. And along with the unveiling came the suggestion that this "breakthrough" on a new show business frontier has a meaningful headstart over home tollvision in the race to provide the public with special shows otherwise not available.

Nate Halpern, TNT president, noted that both organization and economics are hurdles yet facing home toll, whereas a closed-circuit theatre network requires only the installation of equipment in theatres and then, of course, the programming.

The color pictures shown at TNT's studio in Woodside, Queens, were rich in sharpness and overall quality, certainly compatible with audience demands. Picked up were multi-hued shots of fruits, flowers and vegetables and tropical fish swimming in a tank.

The showing clearly demonstrated the projector's capability; much depends, of course, on lighting on the camera end when, say, a special sports event is transmitted.

Sporting contests, opera, ballet and Broadway shows were among the items mentioned by Halpern as possible programming material for the video-linked theatres. The closed-circuit system also can be an important instrument in education and national defense communication.

Halpern expressed view that tollvision and closed circuit are not necessarily competitive. Indeed, it "would be fruitless' to talk of any kind of daily programming for closed-circuit, for this is designed for specialized audiences rather than the masses. Its attractiveness, now enhanced by color, would be in the simultaneous nation-wide pictorial coverage of something going on live, whether a football game for the sports fans or a concert for the cultural-minded.

50 By 38 Feet

The new Eidophor projector is capable of filling a screen measuring 50 by 38 feet. What are the specific plans in the way of actual programming to fill that or any other size screen? Halpern replies that this is another chicken-and-the-egg instance. The programming particulars, he said, must await exhibitor acceptance of the projector and the system itself. TNT already has put across 74 theatre tv shows in black and white.

TNT has all United States and Canadian distribution rights to the Eidophor projector. Some time ago 20th-Fox participated in its development, apparently has bowed out but conceivably could return in the roll of programmer.

The Eidophor is a full simultaneous color system which has three lenses transmitting each of the three basic colors.

Balaban Impressed

Execs in the motion picture and allied fields attended a private showing of the Eidephor closed-circuit system in color and came away impressed.

Paramount president Barney Balaban said he thought the demonstration "excellent." He added that the Par-affiliated Famous Players Theatre in Canada has been using the black-and-white Eidophor system with success "but color could be even better."

Negro Star

matter. What he's interested in are across the board pictures."

"The idea," Poitier said, "is to say what you have to say in an entertaining way. There is a box-office hangup with certain themes, naturally, but it depends mostly on how much you make a picture for and how many playdates you can anticipate." And advocate of low budget pix, the actor, who has formed his own production company and has several projects on the drawing board, contends that "the element of waste is the culpret in most budgets and good films can be made for small money."

"The motion picture is the reflection of the social structure," Poitier feels, and that goes deeper than it sounds on the surface. He expressed the opinion that not only are the end products reflective of social pattern but also the many elements that combine to make and exhibit pictures also mirror the social shape of things. This, therefore, has its effect on the employment of Negro actors and the handling of all matter of themes dealing with the Negro's position in today's society and any other social conditions—which takes in just about everything.

Pictures are made to be shown and to make money by their showing, primarily, and society dictates what will accomplish the best returns. Society, therefore, also subtly, and even subconsciously in some cases, dictates what is filmed, how it is filmed and who appears in the product. All of these factors are strongly a part of the motion picture industry today and, indeed, a part of most everything that happens, and so, Poitier, feels strongly that "it will have to be a moral act not to segregate before much can happen in the industry as far as Negro employment or any related problem."

But, nonetheless, films are a very important factor in the world today, the actor feels. "In any time of stress throughout history, the people have turned to their artists and thinkers for answers." Some are in the business of making films and that makes pix important, Poitier contends. "So film has an impact but it has to be entertainment first."

As far as Poitier's own production plans are concerned, the actor hasn't put anything into action as yet. "A lot depends on 'Lilies' as far as that goes," he noted. It is his first gross percentage pic and he says he'll be in good shape if it does $1,500,000 in biz or thereabouts. It's also the first film in which he is the long and "carrying" star. "It will determine my bankability," he said, figuring that if it turns the kind of profit mentioned, he should be good for $300,000 financing at least for his own projects.

Among his own productions is a plan for a film about six guys who are successful in various walks of life but who aren't happy with what they're doing and long for other persuits, in this case all wanting to be musicians. Every summer they get together and tour but are so bad they can't get return bookings. They eventually make an equally bad record which sets off other things. Anyway, he developed the idea and will bring it to a writer if he gets the loot. He's also talking about a musical with Harry Belafonte and has a longstanding deal with Pan Arts to make "A Bullet for Charlemagne," if that ever comes off.

Actor Salaries

munity Dialogue" carried over WNEW-TV from 8:30-9 p.m.

Others participating in the stanza were Broadway producers Roger L. Stevens and Alfred de Liagre Jr., off-Broadway producer Lore Noto, actor Paul Ford, ticket broker Louis Schoenceit, and Alvin Cooperman, executive director of the Shubert theatre organization. Allyn Edwards was moderator of the program, which concerned ticket prices on Broadway.

The general opinion—one that has been frequently asserted with statistical documentation—was that the increase in ticket prices over the years has been relatively small when viewed in the overall picture of climbing costs. Also emphasized was the reluctance of present-day theatregoers to purchase the cheaper seats in a theatre. It was pointed out that with a hit, the balcony locations are usually the last to be sold. This situation, as de Ligare and others have stated, is believed to be a problem of social status.

As indicated, a lot that's been said and reported before was repeated on the program. Considering that the session was limited to 30 minutes, that didn't leave much time for anything of particular note other than the remarks made by Miss Hagen. Jess.

WHO'S BEING COY?

Par's Exploiteers Vs. L.A. Radio Sex Primness

Several radio stations in the Los Angeles area have rejected spot commercials submitted by Paramount in behalf of "A New Kind of Love." The a.m. outlets thought the verbal copy too hot to handle.

Par shot back with ads in the L. A. papers proclaiming "Sex Outlawed in Los Angeles," and assuring that the commercials were good, clean and American. Readers were invited to dial a telephone number, which responded with the taped reading of the gagged-up blurbs which had been turned down by the L.A. radio outlets.

Commercials are strictly comic, for the most part concerning a couple of old folks discussing the possibilities of "A New Kind of Love" Love" until the explanation comes that this is a picture.

The radio spots have been accepted by stations in the south where the pic production, starring Paul Newman and Joanne Woodward, has been given "Project Picture" exploitation benefits by affiliates of United Paramount.

UNIVERSAL SALESMEN SEE WHAT'S COMING UP

Universal opened its week-long national sales convention in New York on Monday (30) with welcoming addresses by prez Milton R. Rackmil and v.p.-general manager Henry H. "Hi" Martin and the screening of six of the company's upcoming releases.

Those screened: "The Brass Bottle," "The Chalk Garden," "Man's Favorite Sport," "Wild and Wonderful," "King of the Mountain" and "Captain Newman M.D." In some cases producers of the features and other creative personnel were on hand to talk to the sales soldiers about the releases, all of which are 1964 product.

Formal sessions of the conclave begin today (Wed.) with a discussion of re'easing and promotional plans for the first six months of '64. These are being held at the Waldorf-Astoria and are being participated in by managers from U's 31 domestic offices, a rep of Empire-Universal which distributes the company's product in Canada, regional sales managers, the homeoffice sales team and U's ad-pub-exploitation execs. Exhibitor leaders will join trade press reporters at a luncheon this Friday (4) at the Waldorf.

Tomorrow (Thurs.) David A. Lipton, v.p. of advertising and publicity who arrived in New York from the Coast over the weekend, will outline ad-pub plans, joined by Philip Gerard, eastern ad-pub director. Martin will preside at the meeting.

Going over the releases and plans for 1964 in his welcoming talk prez Milton R. Rackmil told the assemblege Monday (30) that they "represent the strongest production lineup we have ever presented and we are confident the realization of this great potential will provide Universal and its exhibitor customers with boxoffice results surpassing the records we have achieved in recent years."

Rackmil also discussed the creative personnel involved in various long-term deals with U, the company's "new horizons" development program and various property acquisitions made by Universal for production soon.

He noted that U currently has 30 writers at work on 17 different projects under nine producers, largest spurt since 1957. Among the upcoming productions, he singled out Alfred Hitchcock's "Marnie," the new Cary Grant starrer being written by Peter Stone who did the actor's latest in "Charade," two upcoming Ross Hunter projects — "The Richest Girl in Town" and "The Art of Love"—and Robert Radnitz's currently in production "Island of the Blue Dolphins" for special mention.

George Skouras, Per Nate Cummings: 'Wouldn't Sell and Wouldn't Buy?

Baltimore Oct. 1

Walter Reade Jr. exhibitor-distributor and producer, took the stand today (Tues.) in the trial of the dissident stockholders' suit against the management of United Artists Theatre Circuit before Judge Reuben Oppenheimer in Circuit Court here.

It is expected that Reade's testimony will conclude hearings after which time both sides in proxy fight will take about two weeks to review the record. At the end of that time they'll present arguments.

Earlier in the trial (Thursday, Sept. 26) Maxwell E. Cummings, head of the Stockholders' Committee for Better Management of United Artists Theatre Circuit, testified that before he bought a share of stock in UATC, "the program put before him and acquiesed in by him" was to get rid of George Skouras as president of the company.

He also said that as early as January, 1962, a replacement was named for Skouras should dissidents' plan be successful. Cummings also said that if dissident group wins proxy fight Reade will become a director of the company.

Cummings also told of a meeting between himself and Reade during which Reade allegedly said that UATC was not enjoying the position it should in the industry, that it had fine prospects and that it was more a question of management than anything else.

Cummings testified that he told Skouras in March, 1963, that he was unhappy with the way things were going, that he (Skouras) was running UATC as a one-man business and pointed out that for the benefit of the company Skouras should become chairman of the board with reduction in salary. He also suggested that he (Cummings) be allowed to name six members to 12-member board.

When Skouras refused, Cummings said he offered to buy Skouras' stock. This was refused and he offered to sell his to Skouras. This was also refused and since Skouras wouldn't sell and wouldn't buy and wouldn't allow Cummings to name six or even four members to the board, there was nothing for Cummings to do but protect his investments and join forces with the Ohrbach-Reade group.

Trial began Sept. 10 and covers two issues. One is whether UATC can legally issue 740,000 shares of common stock in exchange for a 50% interest in United California Theatres. Other concerns request of dissidents for special meeting of stockholders to oust present management. This action was brought by Cummings as head of Committee which is headed by Cummings, Reade and Jerome Ohrbach.

Committee alleges that one of the purposes of proposed transaction of 740,000 shares of capital stock for United California shares held by Naify family of San Francisco is to keep present management in control in face of proxy fight.

UATC counsel had voluntarily agreed in court to withhold any action on stock deal.

Embassy's 10 Current

As the fall season swings into gear, Embassy Pictures currently finds itself with 10 pix playing the New York area, with a couple of others due for display before the end of the year.

Playing Broadway and east-side daydate engagements are "8½" and "The Conjugal Bed," the former at Embassy Prez Joseph E. Levine's Festival Theatre and the New Embassy Theatre and the latter at the Forum and Fine Arts Theatres. Both are in their U.S. premiere dates in the area.

Having recently completed a record 53-week run at the off-Broadway Paris Theatre, "Divorce—Italian Style" is playing Loew's Metropolitan in Brooklyn coupled with "The Hell Fire Club," also an Embassy release. Also playing subsequent-run engagements in the area are "Sky Above—Mud Below," "Boccaccio '70," "7 Capital Sins," "Love at Twenty," "Fabiola" and "O.K. Nero."

Embassy has several pix upcoming, some to be debuted by the year's end. These include "Three Penny Opera," New York" and, into early "Light Fantastic," "Only One 1964, the Carlo Ponti-Joseph E. Levine coproductions "Ghost at Noon," "Empty Canvas" and "Yesterday, Today and Tomorrow."

Hootenanny

out of the Kremlin. A Congressional investigation was requested.

"I," Keating told the Senate with a sweeping gesture which would have outclassed any Barrymore, "had always had the impression that if anything was thoroughly American in spirit, it was American folk music. To be sure, I was perfectly aware of certain un-American influences in it, like Elizabethan balladry, English Protestant hymns and spirituals. But I never considered these sinister."

But the possibility of a Congressional investigation of "verbal subterfuges of applied dialectics" in the lyrics of such tunes caused him to take a more careful look, Keating added.

"I began," said Keating, "to find where there's smoke, there's fire—which perhaps explains how the Fire and Police Research Assn. gets into the act too."

Before anyone laughs at such a proposed Capitol Hill probe out of Washington, they should consider the lyrics of a "pacifist spiritual," Keating said, with tongue in cheek.

He read the familiar lyrics. "Gonna lay down my sword and shield, down by the river-side . . . And study war no more."

He cited "Darlin' Cory" as Exhibit A of "disrespect for law and order," as he continued his spoof. That number tells about "revenue officers a-comin'" with no other purpose in mind, saving tearing "your still-house down," he noted.

Keating said he had given thought to singing the lyrics involved, instead of merely reading them.

"But," he went on, "I don't want to break Senate rules and provoke a Senate hootenanny."

This caused Sen. Hubert Humphrey (D-Minn.), also famous for his sense of humor, to stop Keating with an interruption.

"I have examined the rules," Humphrey asserted, "and there is nothing barring the Senator from New York from singing—except his own good judgment."

Keating said he felt an urge to warn the House Un-American Activities Committee in the event it might give serious thought to a probe of folk music.

"It may," Keating cautioned, "stimulate the writing of new folk music making fun of Congressional investigations."

When Keating had finished, Sen. Richard Russell (D-Ga.) had something to say.

"My only regret," Russell sighed, "is that you didn't make some reference to 'Dixie.'"

IRREVERSIBLE SHRINK OF FILM ROW, ALBANY

Albany, Oct. 1.

Another landmark of Albany's Film row is about to disappear. It's the Metro exchange, which has bounded the old Row on the north for some 35 years and which is the only remaining one of flush-days' large space. Metro will move to the RTA Building, two blocks south. Columbia, Warner Bros., Allied Artists, United Artists and Paramount now maintain smaller offices on the second floor of that same structure.

When Metro closes shop at the present location, only Max Westebbe will remain as an exchange. Tenant of old Film Row, Westebbe, ex-RKO manager, occupies one of the smaller branches, sells independent product in the Albany and Buffalo territories.

MGM branch boss is Ralph Ripps.

Florida Gulf Coast In Quiet Desegregation of Film Theatres

By ODIE ANDERSON

St. Petersburg, Fla., Oct. 1.

Suncoast of Florida is now sprinkled with desegregated theatres, and the switch to the new salt and pepper policy has been accomplished with no fanfare and not a ripple of violence.

Motion picture pads in St. Petersburg were attended early this month by screened Negro couples, following negotiations which began July 26 when picketing by would-be colored patrons was halted. Unrestricted admission of Negroes began Sept. 16 at St. Pete's Florida, State, Cameo, Playhouse and Center theatres. Tampa and Clearwater pix p[illegible]aces have been fully desegregated since Sept. 9. The delay in St. Pete was blamed on a breakdown in communication between Negroes and theatre owners.

Farther south, units of the Florida Theatre chain — the Palace in Bradenton and the Florida and Ritz in Sarasota — have followed with welcome mats for colored patrons. A spokesman for the chain in Sarasota states that tickets are now sold to "anybody who is properly dressed and acts accordingly."

Peaceful integration is attributed to the successful avoidance of publicity.

VICTOR OF JAPAN PARTNERS IN FILM

Tokyo, Oct. 1.

Victor Co. of Japan, which holds the franchise here for RCA Victor and many other labels, is starting feature film production in a tieup with Shochiku, one of Japan's majors.

Victor will start shooting its first picture in early November. To be called "Olympic Ondo" (Olympic Chorus), it will star Yukio Hashi, Akira Matsushima and other singers under contract to the diskery, in addition to players from Shochiku.

Victor plans production of six features annually, with distribution by Shochiku. Idea behind the project is to utilize further popular personalities already under the Victor banner.

North Carolina Gets First Twin Theatre

Charlotte, Oct. 1.

An unusual twin theatre, to be the first in North Carolina will open here about the middle of October. Robert M. Daugherty, Southern Division manager of the General Drive-In Corp. of Boston, Mass., said that construction of the two-in-one structure opposite Charlottetown Mall was on schedule—although a bit more expensive than originally planned.

"We had estimated the investment would be about $750,000," he said. "It'll run at least $1,000,000 now."

The theatre will not only be unique, but also the largest in the area. From a central projection room films will be shown in a large auditorium seating about 1,000 people and in a small auditorium seating about 500.

When the same film is being shown on both sides, the shows will start at staggered hours. Sometimes separate pix will be shown, one on each side.

Forman Heads SCTOA

Los Angeles, Oct. 1.

William R. Forman, prexy of Pacific Drive-In Theatres, is new board chairman of Southern California Theatre Owners Assn., succeeding Harry Arthur, who remains on the directorate. New board members include Eugene V. Klein, prexy of National General Corp., Robert W. Selig, theatre operations veepee, NGC; Evert R. Cummings, Cummings Theatres; and William H. Oldknow, prexy of Sero Amusement Co.

Lester Blumberg also was elected treasurer and Ida Schreiber returned as secretary at board meeting last week. New directors join Forman, Arthur, Blumberg, Sherrill C. Corwin, Robert L. Lippert, Fred Stein, Bill Srere, Harry Rackin.

IFIDA'S 3 GOVERNORS

Goldwurm, Frankel, Wormser Guiding Importers in Gotham

The Independent Film Importers & Distributors of America has elected a new, three-man governing committee for 1963-64 comprised of Jean Goldwurm, prez of Times Film; Daniel Frankel, prez of Zenith International, and Irving Wormser, prez of Continental Distributing, the theatrical releasing arm of Walter Reade-Sterling.

Goldwurm is a holdover from the previous year's governing committee, which also included Richard Brandt, prez of Trans-Lux Corp., and David Emanuel, prez of Governor Films.

DISK JOCK ART FORD TO PRODUCE FILMS

New York disk jocket Art Ford, who Sunday (29) wound up his long association with WINS, is entering the feature film field as a producer. He starts work Oct. 15 in New York on "History of Horror," described as a horror film documentary. Additionally, he is prepping the production of two more films, a three-part comedy-drama to be filmed in New York and Bermuda, plus "Illusion," a romantic drama set in turn-of-the-century Paris. The first is a Ford original and the second is being scripted by an outside writer. Both should be ready to go next year, if financing comes through and Ford completes "Horror" before the end of this year as planned.

This is not Ford's first venture in theatrical pix. In the late 1940s, he worked on Jacques Tati's "Jour de Fete" in France, and in 1957 he directed the lowbudget actioner, "Johnny Gunman," which was released by Tudor Films.

7 Arts Foreign Chief On Far East Junket

London, Oct. 1.

Norman B. Katz, foreign veepee for Seven Arts Productions International, took off last week on a month's trip to the Far East, visiting Japan and Australia. Object of his trip is to supervise distribution and sales of Seven Arts theatrical product in these territories as well as to oversee sales to tv stations of Seven Arts feature film libraries, including the recently acquired 20th-Fox package of 220 pix.

Katz will return to London via New York, where he will meet with Eliot Hyman, Seven Arts prexy, and other homeoffice execs.

'LAWRENCE OF ARABIA'S' TWO-WAVE PLAYOFF

Boston, Oct. 1.

"Lawrence of Arabia" breaks in two waves for New England theatres on Oct. 9, and 13, it was revealed at a merchandising meeting of Boston and New England exhibitors held by Columbia pictures at Hotel Bradford Wednesday (25).

Chairing the session were Richard Kahn, Columbia's national coordinator of advertising-publicity and exploitation; John Skouras, coordinator for the picture; Tom O'Brien, Columbia Boston branch manager; John Markle, Columbia Boston exploitation chief. First wave for "Lawrence," which just finished eight weeks on a moveover at Ben Sack's Beacon Hill to top grosses, hits on Oct. 9, when the picture goes into theatres in Framingham, Peabody, Lynn and Brockton, Mass.

The second wave comes on Oct. 30 when the picture, which will play with the intermission just as in the deluxe downtown Boston houses, goes into 15 theatres around Boston. More than 35 exhibitors from Boston and New England attended the meeting.

New Zest

going on practical locations for new houses.

National General has mapped an expansion program entailing no less than 50 exhibition outlets. These are some of the examples. There is considerable new building and, even if not to be interpreted as an actual building boom, there's certainly less talk about theatres being converted into bowling alleys, churches and parking lots.

The new constructions represent another change, in that exhibitors more and more are tending toward the "compact" theatre, relatively small to keep down the overhead and with stress on audience comfort.

Like the Wall Streeters say, the theatrical film industry is volatile. Right now it's more up than down.

Common Lobby

a shopping center near the city of Pontiac.

Manuel Lima, Redstone exec here from the east, said the theatres will be identical to theatres now under construction for Redstone in West Springfield, Mass., and Toledo, Ohio. The theatres will share a common lobby, Lima said, and will be in operation next April. First run films will be the policy, in addition to road shows in the larger theatre and foreign and art films in the smaller, Clark Theatre Service will do the booking.

Lima said the larger auditorium will have Todd-AO, 70m and other modern projection equipment and full stereophonic sound. Both theatres will be luxury houses, featuring extra-wide, movable cushion seats, year round air-conditioning. Parking, by attendants, will be free and there will be free checkroom facilities.

Harry Schneider, district manager here for Redstone, said an art gallery and lounge will be available to local groups. Redstone operates about 30 theatres, mostly in the east. Schneider supervises Redstone operations in Michigan, Ohio, and Kentucky.

Judge Pans Prior Restraint

Atlanta, Oct. 1.

Chief Justice W. H. Duckworth of Georgia went on record at a hearing last week as favoring censorship of "obscene" pictures only after they open. He said he was dead set against "prior restraint," because this would be the same as checking a minister's sermon before he went onto the pulpit.

Duckworth expressed his sentiments as Atlanta attorneys offered argument in appealing a Georgia court's ruling which was not to their liking. They had wanted an ordinance forcing theatremen to submit films to a government control board for a classification rating. Fulton Superior Court said no to this and it from this decision that the Atlanta lawyers are appealing.

Duckworth said this kind of classification, in which pictures would be "approved," "unsuitable for youth" or "objectionable," would mean restraining an act before it happened, and consequently unconstitutional.

The case is before the Georgia Supreme Court and a final decision is expected within a month.

Those Two Move to Mexico

Mexico City, Oct. 1.

Elizabeth Taylor and Richard Burton were greeted by Mexican film director, Emilio Fernandez, and about 1,000 other presumed well-wishers and newsmen at Mexico City's central airport on their arrival from Canada to begin work on John Huston-directed "Night of the Iguana" here and in Puerto Vallarta.

As the mob pursued the famous pair, police tightened a cordon, and straight-armed a way to the waiting limousine. One person in the crowd fell. Then, the screen players were pushed, shoved, stepped on. Miss Taylor lost her shoes and her purse—both later retrieved, and at one point appeared near the breaking point. Burton carried Liza Todd, Miss Taylor's five-year-old daughter, and had all she could do to make it to the car. A police escort took them to the Maria Isabel. They leave on Wednesday for Puerto Vallarta and location filming of the Tennessee Williams play in which Burton, Ava Gardner, Sue Lyons and Deborah Kerr appear, but not Miss Taylor.

Richard Burton and Ava Gardner, the main glamour items, ducked the press conference at the Hotel Reforma. The questions asked of Burton in Montreal anent his relations to all his leading women reportedly acted as a frost. With the stars absent the conference itself proved pretty blah, apart from starting late. Present were John Huston, Fernandez, Gabriel Figueroa, Sue Lyon and Skip Ward together with producer Ray Stark who apologized for the absentees.

Huston said, "I'm very happy to be back in Mexico again. I have been coming here since I was 18 years old, and I really do love this country. And I thank you."

Huston then introduced Sue Lyon, who stated, "I am very happy to be here. This is my first trip to Mexico, and I'm very happy to be here."

At this point the p.a. system, which proved inadequate throughout began to go on the blink. Ward was introduced. He is totally unknown in Mexico He stated, "This is my first trip to Mexico, and I'm very happy to be here."

At this point either Huston or Stark pointed out that he, Ward, was searching for a new name. Possibly James, or Warren. The noise in the room was quite a din as reporters from such diverse publications as Tass, Pravda, The New York Times, VARIETY, Life-Time, Mexican papers, and Australian, etc., kept asking each other what's going on, what did he (she) say? etc.

Budd Schulberg standing in the back of the room, said, "Isn't anyone going to ask any intelligent questions, for expletive's sake?"

This was neither the time or the place for intellegence.

Typical questions were: Reporter to Huston, "Is it true that Sue Lyon is trying to steal Richard Burton away from Elizabeth Taylor?"

Huston, "I don't think so. No."

Reporter to Huston, "Who's with her—a boyfriend, too?"

Huston. "No, she came with her teacher."

Reporter: "Like Miss Taylor?"

Huston: "Like Miss Taylor. Miss Taylor hasn't anything to do with the picture. She's merely along. She is Mr. Burton's teacher. That's it. She's his teacher. And Miss Lyon has a teacher too."

Meanwhile, In Quebec

Montreal, Oct. 1.

The latest episode in the long-running, "Liz, Dick & The Press" serial has left local Fourth Estaters with the backs up and their pencils sharpened for the kill.

What has them particularly riled, is the quote attributed to Elizabeth Taylor, who's playing in the "Let's Get Away From It All" drama with Dick Burton as the extra-added, that members of the Montreal press fraternity are "the rudest and dirtiest-minded in the world."

Incident took place at the Montreal airport a week ago Sunday (22) when the couple was en route to Mexico where Burton is making "Iguana." Couple also let down briefly in Toronto, and it was to newsmen in the latter city that Liz let fly with her comment about the Montreal lads.

Actually, the big beef locally by reporters from newspapers, is that the accusation is unfair and inaccurate, since it was only one or two of the reporters who threw curves in the form of questions that went even beyond the ultra-personal.

An interesting aspect of the incident, is the talk among newspapermen that although Liz may have generalized a little too broadly for everyone's comfort, there is some substance in her charge, although the locals prefer to describe the guilty reporters' lapse as one of irresponsibility and inexperience, rather than dirty-mindedness. Or were they under instruction?

Turth of the matter is that reporters for the local newspapers —particularly such Big League sheets as The Montreal Star, The Gazette, La Press, Le Devoir, etc.— have for a long time been irritated by the young and inexperienced cubs sent to important stories, mainly by certain radio and television stations.

One radio station is particularly guilty of this, with its reporters generally lacking the experience.

Guns Pessimism

had hold over engagement at Interstate—"I don't know when we had summer holdovers on every picture." The summer has been a record breaker, too, for Interstate, like "Irma La Douce" (UA) at the Esquire and "Spencer's Mountain" (WB) on its return engagement in the nabes.

"The best summer business in years will give Interstate a banner year" is the way Jackson sums it up.

Earl Podolnick, prez of Trans-Texas is even more jubilant. "It's the best year in Trans-Texas history (11 years')) is the way he summed up. "We've had good pictures and we've given them strong promotion, "We believe promotion is a big part of he answer; even a good picture does not always draw well without letting the public know. We have concentrated on creating the motion picture going habit, on building confidence in the public that good pictures are being shown."

The result is record breaking runs at Trans-Texas Fine Arts Theatre and a highly satisfactory six months for Cinerama's "How the West Was Won" (M-G at the Capri.

The summer has been the best in 10 years for the Rowley United Theatre, and John Rowley, prez of the circuit, says the lineup for fall is much better than 1962.

"The public can't and won't ignore good pictures," says Rowley. "A continued flow of good pictures provides a momentum of movement to the boxoffices. The public wants to buy-and we have worked harder to push our pictures because we knew we had good products to sell."

Phil Isley Theatres have had simmer biz 10 percent above 1962 — there is better product coming up for the fall, says owner Phil Isley. "We have had many good family pictures which means good business for the drive-ins," Isley said. "The whole situation is looking rosier than it has in years."

"We are getting pictures on re-run engagements much earlier and we are playing more pictures on multiple first runs," said lead booker Brandon Doak of the Stanley Warner of Texas Circuit. "The result is more business. The film business has been improving every year since 1958 and 1963 may be the best in history."

Stanley Warner moved into Texas in January with the purchase of 37 theatres, mostly ozoners. Doak said the circuit had worked to keep better product in the theatres and more first runs—and he expects October and November to continue the release of top films with continued good business.

Exceptional pictures better than usual and more of them is the way Harry Sachs of I. B. Adelman Theatres explains the summer upsurge. "We have been highly successful in Dallas this summer," he says, "and almost as good in Tulsa and Houston."

Morris Gotcher of the McLendon Theatres has much the same story to tell for the summer of 1963—"Better pictures and more of them provide the answer to a far better summer than in 1962."

After Caesar and Higgins Struts, Rexy Dashes Off In All Directions

Hollywood, Oct. 1.

Already eyeing the December windup of "My Fair Lady," Rex Harrison last week disclosed a trio of vehicles which he is currently mulling to follow his Julius Caesar and Henry Higgins characterizations.

Actor reports that Merian C. Cooper has offered him role of Gen. Chennault in "A Thousand Springs," projected filmization of novel by the General's widow, Anna Chennault. Cooper served as chief-of-staff to Chennault during World War II, retiring as an Air Force Brig. General. "Springs" has been presented to Cinerama for a possible coproduction deal.

Also contemplated by Harrison is a trio of plays to be presented under tag of "The Season," in which he would star on consecutive evenings. One might be a "musical fantasy," another a satire, "a comedy with meaning," and a third straight drama. Two of them would probably be originals.

Present intention is to break them in at the Edinburgh Festival next August after which they would be taken to London, finally to be presented on Broadway.

Third possibility is "a film which would embrace the Henry 8th period" with the characters treated "more like the people of today" than in the traditional historical handling. He avers that Joseph Mankiewicz's "Cleopatra" approach was of this genre.

Projected pic is "not even in production stages," said Harrison, allowing only that it would quite likely be lensed in England.

It is the legit trio, however, which is currently commanding bulk of actor's post "Fair Lady" attention.

On one tack, he terms though of three Broadway opening nights in one week "rather hair-raising." Such an eventuality would be "impossible," he believes, if "they hadn't been broken in very slowly in London, probably on a one-at-a-time basis.

"It will be very difficult—and expensive," he notes, adding, however, that it will not be a unique undertaking since "John Gielgud has done something similar."

Final form of presentation has by no means been set, states Harrison. He notes that one modification might stem from audience reaction, with more popular plays presented more frequently than the less well received.

Probability of venture being tagged "repertorial" may present a selling problem in the U.S., believes Harrison. "A new image should be created for the 'repertory' company here—to remove the present stigma of amateurism with which it presently suffers," contends actor.

Harrison reports that there is both an American and a British producer involved with project, asserting, however, that "it wouldn't be fair" to name them at this time.

Winding on the how-do-you-follow "Cleo" and "Fair Lady" theme, Harrison avers, "I won't go back to doing light thing of no consequence," quickly assuring that he wasn't alluding to his last two pix, but was referring to films he made immediately preceding them.

NATIONAL GENERAL PROFITS HIKE: 54%

Los Angeles, Oct. 1.

National General Corp.'s operating profits for fiscal year ended Sept. 24, 1963 are expected to reach $3,500,000, an increase of 53.83% over 1962's $2,275,138, according to prexy Eugene V. Klein.

Gross for same period should be at least 10% over last year's $43,546,289, exec noted, which will bring this figure just under $48,000,000.

Klein reported that first quarter of 1964 should hit record proportions, and he looks for fiscal '64 to be "substantially" higher than 1963.

'Lawrence' Should Hit $95,000 in Ottawa

Ottawa, Oct. 1.

Sam Spiegel's "Lawrence of Arabia" will come close to the all-time hard-ticket record here: 21 weeks, set by M-G's "Ben Hur," also at the 807-seat Nelson Theatre. Now in its 17th week, it's sure to last till 20th's "Cleopatra" comes in Oct. 3 (at $3 top, compared to $2.50 for previous roadshows), according to Ernie Warren, 20th Century Theatres' district manager.

Now nearing $80,000 in its 16th week, "Lawrence" should, he feels, hit or top $95,000 by the time it exits in its 20th week. "Ben Hur" topped $100,000. This capital's population is 275,000 and largely French-speaking, Hull, Que., across the river, has 60,000, and the prosperous semi-rural Ottawa Valley supplies many patrons.

'GREAT ESCAPE' PACE

United Artists Reports Numerous Holdover Dates

With "Irma La Douce" already perking strongly in boxoffices around the country for United Artists, the distrib is also experiencing hefty action with another pic —John Sturges' "The Great Escape." In over 75% of the key situations which originally booked the picture or are currently showing it, the action opus is holding over for two or more weeks.

James R. Velde, UA sales v.p., reports that 100 out of the 130 domestic theatres which have opened the Mirisch Co. pic, are holding it over. "Escape" is playing in its tenth week at the Odeon Theatre, Toronto, where it opened domestically and is playing in no less than its fourth frame in locations throughout the U.S. and Canada.

Sprightly George Spratley

Toronto, Oct. 1.

With appointment of George Spratley to act as supervisor of Ontario district for Odeon Theatres (Canada) Ltd., other shifts become immediately effective.

Spratley, who has been with the Odeon chain since '53 and manager for the past five years of the Hyland, Toronto, is new assistant to Steve McManus, Ontario district manager, per Frank H. Fisher, vice-prexy and g.m.

Following Sprately's promotion, transfers include moving of James Chalmers from the Humber to the Hyland, with John Stewart succeeding to the Humber post. (Both houses are in Toronto). Ian Fleming, previously assistant manager of the Palace, Hamilton, is new manager at the Odeon, Oakville.

ART JOHNSON UNLOADS

Commonwealth Acquires Lease—Had Been Operating

Kansas City, Oct. 1.

Art Johnson, owner of the Dakota Theatre at Yankton, S.D., has sold his interests to Commonwealth Buton Theatres, which has been operating it. Johnson turned over the theatre and equipment, and the theatre lease from Mrs. Cora Hess of Watertown, S.D., to Commonwealth as of Sept. 8. Mr. and Mrs. Johnson had operated the situation since May 1959.

Commonwealth Buton, owners of the Yankton Theatre, consists of a partnership between T.R. Thompson and Commonwealth Theatres, with headquarters in Kansas City. Thompson originally built the Yankton Theatre in 1948, with the cooperation of Charles Gurney, who financed and leased the building to Buton Enterprises. Thompson operated the theatre personally for two years before going into partnership with Commonwealth in 1950.

The Dakota Theatre is being shuttered for the present while Commonwealth execs weigh pros and cons of updating the house. An announcement is promised in the near future. Bert Becker, manager of the Yankton Theatre, will continue in his present post.

Albuquerque As 20-Week Stand For 'Cleopatra'

Albuquerque, Oct. 1.

"Cleopatra" has been set for a minimum of 20 weeks at the Sunshine Theatre here starting Oct. 10, according to Harold Evans of Kansas City, regional manager for 20th Century-Fox.

Booking, if it holds, will be the longest on record locally. Previous longtime boxoffice champs here have been "Ben-Hur," 12 weeks; "Lawrence of Arabia," 10 weeks; "Carry on Nurse," 8 weeks, and "Ten Commandents," 10 weeks.

Price schedule for the film will also be a local record. Seats, on reserved basis, will be sold for all evening, plus Saturday, Sunday and holiday matinees at $2.50 each. Monday through Friday matinees will be $1.75 each.

Advance ticket sales started last week, a whole month ahead of the booking.

Highest single ticket price on record locally in the past was the sked set for "Lawrance" which only went as high as $2.25.

Two screenings are planned daily for the marathon Liz Taylor film.

The 1,000-seat Sunshine will be closed on Sept. 26 for remodeling in advance of the booking. Lou Avolio, resident manager for Frontier Theatres—which owns the Sunshine—said that the total cost would run about $75,000. Plans include the installation of 70-mm equipment, revised sound setup plus recarpeting and redecorating.

WILMINGTON MANAGERS CAUSE 200 ARRESTS

Wilmington, N.C., Oct. 1.

Police jailed more than 200 Negroes, about half of them juveniles, here recently as a result of their anti-segregation demonstrations at three downtown theatres.

Police Chief H. E. Williamson said managers of the Bailey, Colony and Manor theatres complained that the demonstrators gathered outside and, after being refused admittance to the white-only section, sang and clapped their hands.

Williamson said the arrests were made after all three managers said they would testify to the violation of two city ordinances and one state statute. City code, Williamson said, prohibit public meetings on streets and sidewalks without a written permit (none are granted) from the city manager. Disorderly conduct and disturbing the peace are the standard infractions involved against civil liberty protests.

All of the Negroes were ordered to post $100 bonds.

Grab South State St. Arcade's Peep Films on 'Obcenity' Test

Chicago, Oct. 2.

A grand jury panel of 13 men and 10 women last Thursday (26) began viewing eight of 6,400 peep-show films seized earlier in the week in a raid on South State St. "penny" arcades. The jury must decide whether there is reasonable cause to consider the films obscene, and thus subject to prosecution.

The state's attorney's police raided eight of the peep-show joints on Tuesday and confiscated 132 loaded projectors, 6,400 films and $4,781 in cash, mostly in quarters from the machines. They also arrested 15 men, seven of them owners or managers, six cashiers, an electrician, and the nephew of an owner.

The arcades, in present form, have operated for about 20 years in neighborhood. For 25c., the customer gets 40 to 60 seconds of a flickering strip-tease show. For the deposit of five quarters, he gets a full-length film lasting three minutes.

Chi police began raiding the spots periodically in 1952 sans a warrant and the operators obtained a Superior Court injunction preventing the police from "interfering with the orderly operation" of the arcades. The state's attorney's police are exempt from the injunction, and also took the precaution of getting warrants.

The cases are being prosecuted by assistant state's attorney's James Thompson and Daniel Leahy. Questioned by VARIETY about the difficulty in prosecuting obscenity cases in the light of recent court decisions, Thompson said that the peep-films were vulnerable because they had 'absolutely no artistic merit" per the Supreme Court decision.

Asked how the arcade operators got around the city film censorship and licensing laws, Thompson said that owners got permits for a film for each machine 10 years ago and have shown new pictures under the old permits. Thompson said that the city film licensing ordinance is difficult to enforce with the arcades because of the necessity of constant policing.

'Give Us Flat Rentals'

Minneapolis, Oct. 1.

Under its new president, Ray Vonderhaar of Alexandria, Minn., North Central Allied will continue its campaign to convince all film companies to sell pictures flat on an ability to pay basis to small-town theatres grossing less than $1,000 a week.

Film companies now are demanding and getting percentage for many of their releases even in the smallest situations and from large cities' lower grossing subsequent-run houses.

N. Y. VARIETY CLUB'S BUS FOR HANDICAPPED

Variety Club of New York has donated a specially-designed and constructed bus for handicapped and incapacitated children to the Institute of Physical Medicine & Rehabilitation of N.Y. University Medical Centre. The vehicle was purchased by Universal Pictures which gave it to N.Y. Variety.

The Variety Sunshine Coach, as it is known, is the first of its kind in this country. It was custom built in Britain and is equipped with special devices to facilitate the transportation of handicapped kids and will make it possible for them to go more easily to events and places which before were prohibitive.

Twinex Century Booking Winnipeg's Pace Cinema

Winnipeg, Oct. 1.

Pace Cinema, 18 months old independent art film house has signed a contract with Twinex Century Theatre Corp. Ltd. of Toronto, giving exclusive booking rights to the eastern Canadian company. According to the terms of the contract, Twinex, headed by N. A. Taylor, is to do all film buying for Pace on a percentage basis.

The contract with Pace will provide Taylor with a local outlet for Taylor's International Film Distributors division, which now services a large part of Taylor's 60 theatre chain in Ontario and Quebec.

Len Stone estimated that the new deal would ultimately increase Pace revenue by at least 50%.

Already set under the new contract is "Bell Antonio", "Long Day's Journey Into Night", "Fellini "8-1/2", "Loneliness of a Long Distance Runner" and "David and Lisa". "Divorce, Italian Style" is doing near capacity business in its second week.

'PEOPLE WE DON'T LIKE'

Writers Say Screen Credit Ruling Was Ignored

Hollywood, Oct. 1.

Danjaq S. A., Harry Saltzman and Albert Broccoli have been placed on the "unfair" list of Writers Guild of America.

Guild took action because of producers' failure to comply with a WGA arbitration and to afford correct writing credit on the screen and in advertising for a motion picture.

Picture involved is "Call Me Bwana," the Bob Hope starrer released by United Artists.

Robert Bradford, Bradford-Bevhill Productions and Robert Bradford Productions have been added to the "unfair" list of WGA for alleged failure to pay a writer on a screen assignment.

Pesce Before Committee

Albany, Oct. 1.

Joint Legislative Committee on Offensive & Obscene Material will conduct a hearing Thursday (3) with the motion picture division of the State Education Dept. to be represented by its director, Louis M. Pesce. Pesce will be prepared to discuss censoring of motion pictures and, of course, to answer questions about classification.

$35,000 IN HANDOUTS FOR WARNER STAFF

All branches of Warners are participating in a "Winners from Warners" sales drive which provides for cash pries of $35,000. The push started Sunday (29) and winds up Feb. 29.

Last year the WB steamroller bit went under the title "Welcome to Razz," allusion being to then newcomer sales chief Morey (Razz) Goldstein. This was a major success, states the exec, and he's hoping for more of the same this year.

Winners will be determined on the basis of billings in each branch, with 10 pictures figuring in. These include "PT 109," "The Castilian," "Mary, Mary," "Palm Springs Weekend" and "4 for Texas."

Balaban Fronts Luncheon For Anti-Defamation Org

Barney Balaban, president of Paramount, has been named guest of honor for the 50th anniversary luncheon of the Anti-Defamation League, set for Nov. 1 at New York's Americana Hotel. The League, so far as show business is concerned, undertakes to eliminate "offensive, hate-breeding stereotypes, making sure that no man, no race, no group is held up for ridicule or played for laughs."

Benjamin Melniker, Metro v.p.-counsel, is this year's chairman of the amusement division of the League, which is getting underway with a $3,940,000 drive for development of a program to combat bigotry and prejudice.

OTIS GREENE'S SHUFFLE

Hollywood, Oct. 1.

Otis Greene, who has been assistant to Columbia Pictures production manager Ben Hersh, has been transferred to Screen Gems as production liaison on its "Hazel" series.

Latter resumes production this week following a 12-week hiatus.

IT'S A HIT SAY THE CRITICS

"Purlie Victorious" has been transferred to the screen with admirable success under the new title of...

"GONE ARE THE DAYS!"

"...given such timely subject matter, such fresh treatment, and such skillful execution of the whole by producer-director Nicholas Webster and most of the members of the original play cast, it should be safe to predict the picture will draw large audiences everywhere." Richard Gertner—MOTION PICTURE DAILY

"Purlie Victorious is back and if you missed seeing this latter-day prophet on stage you must see "Gone Are the Days!" Ossie Davis' outrageous and zany fable has been brought to the screen almost intact, with, in fact, only one major cast change, and no change in the rioutously comic fantasy that glitters with ths sparks of its sub-surface fury. Its impact is, perhaps, even greater as a film.

"The performances are superb. Ossie Davis' Purlie is as silver tongued and glow-eyed as one could wish. Ruby Dee, one of the loveliest actresses around, is simply delicious . . . and Godfrey Cambridge, master-satirist, gives you Gitlow to the last cringe." Judith Crist—NEW YORK HERALD TRIBUNE

HIGHEST RATING ★★★★ FOUR STARS
" 'GONE ARE THE DAYS!', by Ossie Davis, explodes with eloquent rhetoric, inherent magnetism and contagious zeal. Ruby Dee is sheer delight." Dorothy Masters—NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

"... comic and incisive, filled with humor, insight and passion. It speaks out against injustice. Made howlingly effective by the dual artistry of playwright-star Ossie Davis, as the ubiquitous Purlie he declaims, sermonizes and indulges in free-wheeling fantasies full of professional pride, vigor and warmth." A. L. Weiler—NEW YORK TIMES

"Purlie Victorious . . . turned into a movie, comes off equally well. The characters are deliberately broad caricatures, the dialogue is flip and funny and director Nicholas Webster keeps the action romping along at a sprightly pace. Author Davis has an acting field day as the flamboyant Purlie, and his wife, Ruby Dee, doesn't miss a trick as the hero's timid girl friend." Rose Pelswick—NEW YORK JOURNAL-AMERICAN

"Ossie Davis proves to be a fresh, disarmingly funny spokesman . . . Ruby Dee is charming and subtly effective . . . Godfrey Cambridge is stingingly comic . . . A broad, free-swinging satire." M. W. Peper—WORLD TELEGRAM AND SUN

"Ossie Davis, author and star of 'GONE ARE THE DAYS!' is a funny man with a lively, playful way of spinning language into huge cotton candy puffs . . . which he delivers with a fine rolling tongue and a glee that is not only convivial but contagious. The tightrope performance is all the more admirable for the height which Davis essays." NEWSWEEK

"A bouncing romp, witty satirical, sharp, contemporarily pungent . played in such high good spirits that it succeeds in making every point with a laugh—and every laugh tinged with truth. The spirit is one of levity but the bite is still there and helps make 'GONE ARE THE DAYS!' lively entertainment under Nicholas Wedster's slick direction." NEW YORK CUE

'George Skouras Drive'

Los Angeles, Oct. 1.

Southern California division of United Artists Theatre Circuit has set Oct. 1-Dec. 31 period for its "George Skouras Drive," honoring chain's prexy.

Sales drive calls for special shows and other means of raising extra revenue.

and included three Spanish beauties—Mercedes Alonso, Diana Lorys and Maria Granada. Low budget by Hollywood standards, "Gunfighters" is a man-sized oater in wide screen and color that features a 2,000-head cattle stampede and a six-shooter batttle involving 160 riders. Again, Metro is distributing.

By this time, Spanish film-makers were beginning to take a closer look at their own bandits and turned to El Tempranillo as one of the favorites. The popular Cordoba highwayman became the subject of two films—one, "Jose Maria," produced by I.F.I. under the direction of Jose Maria Forn, and another—more ambitious, in wide screen and color—entitled "Weep for a Bandit." The latter was filmed as a three-way coproduction with Italy and France under the direction of Carlos Saura with a European cast starring Francisco Rabal, Lea Massari, Serge Reggiani and Lino Ventura. Though both are themed to native story and backgrounds, they were filmed to meet the eternal filmgoer-craving for Westerns.

Chiari's Encore

Italy sent in its popular star, Walter Chiari, for "The Terrible Sheriff" last year. This year Chiari returned to do "Heroes of the West," costarring Raimondo Vainello and Paquito Rico. Spanish director Romero Marchent starred Geoffrey Horne, Paul Piaget and Fernando Sancho in "Three Good Men" twelve months ago. The film was premiered here last week in Madrid while the same director was back in Almeria with Madrid-based Yank actor Richard Harrison and Fernando Sancho for more crackling gunfire on a simulated Mexican border for "The Taste of Vengeance." Femme lead is played by Italy's Gloria Milland.

While a reprise of John Ford's "Stagecoach" shaped as one of the best summer entries along the Gran Via, a new production company, Alesanco, signed another Madrid-based Yanqui, Frank Latimore, to star with Muria Tarray and Pastor Serrador in "Stagecoach Passenger" under the direction of Jose Elorrieta. Two weeks ago, Sergio Newman, in coproduction with Tibre of Italy and Radius of France, signed Tony Rusell, Sophie Loren's ex-lighting double—Scilla Gabel, Tony Soler and Claude Brasseur for "Horsemen of Terror."

The latest and most intriguing development in Spain's "Go Western" motif is the influx of American tv stars. First of the small screen roughriders to sharpen his spurs on the Castellana was Ty Hardin—or Bronco, as he is called here for short. The ex-"Cheyenne" topbiller closed a deal in two and one-half short weeks with Eduardo Manzano and P.I.A. of Italy and already has "Boudine" on location. In addition to his lead role and coproduction chores, Hardin is directing from his own original story on a budget he intends to keep below the $100,000 mark. Due in shortly is "Sugarfoot" star Will Hutchings to head up a cast for another oater that has not yet been titled or announced. Still another—titled and ready to go—will star Jack Taylor (cousin of Robert Taylor) as the trigger-flip hero of "Billy the Kid."

LeSeur and Manzano, in their continuing flying hoof relationship, last week rolled cameras for Venezuelan Western, "The Plainsmen," with Jose Suarez, Gallic actress Silvia Sorrente and American actor Todd Martin. Since Suarez is also starring with Ty Hardin in "Boudine," the Spanish actor will be bicycling for the next five weeks to get into the saddle on time in both pix.

As an indication of purple sage fever on the plains of Spain, the producer of the upcoming "Outside the Law" sent a stagecoach out to the Madrid Airport and right up to the Caravelle landing platform to meet Jany Brunell who has been designated for the femme lead under the direction of Argentine Leon Klimovski. This Wild West roundup would not be complete without the recently-published announcement that film authorities had conceded a shooting permit for an all-Spanish tin-badger, "The Sheriff of Losatumba." Meanwhile, Manzano and LeSeur are greasing some spare saddles for their next one—labeled "The Price of Vengeance."

There must be gold in those reels and until proof is provided that the gulch has gone dry, the eyes of the film world will be on Spain—where the West begins.

followers break up into small groups, seemingly peacefully accepting the wrong to the honest lord. But, all the while they are adroitly building an elaborate plan to slay the venerable Lord Kira.

The actual attack on Lord Kira's mansion takes this villainous leader and his guards by surprise. Of course, it is successful and Kira is slain exactly 21 months after Lord Asano's death.

The cast has a liberal sprinkling of Kabuki stars and stellar Toho players. Some of the standout performers are contributed by Koushiro Matsumoto, as leader of the avenging group; Yuzo Kayama, as Lord Asano; Chusha Ichikawa, as the villainous Lord Kira; Yoko Tsukase, Lord Asano's wife; Kumi Mizumo, as undercover femme operator for Asano's followers; Frankie Sakai, as the amusing corpenter; Yuriko Hoshi, as his sister; and Toshiro Mifune.

Besides Inagaki's magnificent direction, Kasuo Yamada grabs some laurels for his excellent color photography. Akira Ifukube has contributed a superior score.

L'Aine des Ferchaux
(Magnet of Doom)
(FRENCH—COLOR—ENGLISH SUBTITLES)

Les Spectacles Lumbroso-Ultra Film production. Stars Jean-Paul Belmondo, Charles Vanel. Directed by Jean-Pierre Melville. Screenplay, Melville, based on novel by Georges Simenon; camera (Eastmancolor-Franscope), Henri Decae; editors, Monique Bonnot, Claude Durand; music, Georges Delerue. At Philharmonic Hall, N.Y. Film Festival. Running time, 104 MINS.

Michel Maudet ..... Jean-Paul Belmondo
Dieudonne Ferchaux .... Charles Vanel
Lou ..... Michele Mercier
Lina ..... Malvina Silberberg
Hitch-hiker ..... Stefania Sandrelli
Lou's friend ..... Barbara Somers
Suska ..... E. F. Medard
Jeff ..... Todd Martin

On the basis of this production, American audiences may be hard-put to understand the formidable reputation which director Jean-Pierre Melville enjoys in his native France. "L'Aine des Ferchaux" (literally, "The Eldest of the Ferchaux" but titled "Magnet of Doom" here), based on a novel by Georges Simenon, is an ordinary melodrama, unconventional only in the fact that most of it is set in the U.S. and a portion of it was actually filmed here. Name of star Jean-Paul Belmondo should assure it okay returns in the French market, but it has neither the narrative zip required by general American audiences, nor the kind of offbeat, unusual aspects which sell in the arties.

Story concerns an unprincipled old Parisian banker, Charles Vanel, who must flee France during an investigation into some of his shadier operations, and the young male secretary, Belmondo, an expug just as opportunistic as his boss, who accompanies him into exile. Their flight takes them first to New York and then on an automobile trip south, ending near New Orleans where, ultimately, Belmondo is unable to carry out his original plan of stealing the old man's dough.

Characters played by Belmondo and Vanel are familiar scalawags, hard and uncompromising on the outside but predictably possessed of a certain inner nobility when the chips are down. Melville, in his direction and in his writing of the script, has not added dimension to the relationship between old and young. And when, finally, Belmondo acknowledges (too late) his obligations to the old man, the audience is likely to shrug and ask: "Is this all there is?"

Just about.

Film generates a little interest in Melville's handling of the contemporary American scene—motels, diners, Frank Sinatra's Hoboken birthplace, segregation, New Orleans nightlife—but none of it is revealing or pertinent. The locale, in fact, could just as well have been Canada or Brazil. A good deal of unintentional hilarity was provided the New York film festival audience by those passages in which Belmondo is required to speak English. It was apparently learned by rote and comes out sounding like a musical comedy dialect, successfully reducing the dead-earnest character to the status of a burlesque comedian. That's a flaw which can be corrected by redubbing, but it might not be worth the trouble, for the U.S. market anyway.

Belmondo, otherwise is okay, as is Vanel. Supporting performers, most of them femmes with whom Belmondo gets casually involved, are all good. The Eastmancolor-Franscope photography is generally fine. If the picture seems to ramble along, building little or no suspense, it would seem to be the fault of the director-scenarist, not of the editors.

Un Roi Sans Divertissement
(A King Without Distractions)
(FRENCH-COLOR-SCOPE)

Paris, Sept. 24.

Gaumont release of films Jean, Giono production. With Claude Giraud, Colette Renard, Charles Vanel. Directed by Francois Letterier. Screenplay, Jean Giono from his own novel; camera (Eastmancolor), Jean Badal; editor, Francoise Javet. At Biarritz, Paris. Running time, 85 MINS.

Langlois ..... Claude Giraud
Precureur ..... Charles Vanel
Clara ..... Colette Renard

Film is a moody, literary affair with some excellent color lensing. Its penchant for talking things out, rather than being able to make it an intrinsic part of the action, makes this mainly an arty possibility abroad.

Pic takes place in a snowbound Southern French town in the early 19th Century. A gendarme comes in to investigate a series of disappearances of young girls. A crafty retired government man instills in the policeman the fact that the murderer is probably someone just like him rebelling against the dullness, smallness and grayness of this hamlet life.

The policeman finally tracks him down and kills him only to have the need to kill transferred to himself. He manages not to do so but ends up killing himself as a plaintive song scores the boredom that exists in life. On paper this tale probably had taking powers and its symbols were more easily acceptable. But on the screen this does not come across.

Director Francois Letterier shows a feel for well composed shots, helped by the expert color renditions of lenser Jean Badal who uses the snowy, foggy settings for eye-filling splashes of color or subdued groupings. But the film rarely can lay bare the intricate psychological aspects talked about.

Players are uneasy in their symbolical roles. Technical aspects are tops, however. There is a certain misty atmosphere of stifling small-town life and the dizzying effects of seemingly eternal snow. But a plodding, overblown air finally makes this more pretentious than profound.

Yank westerns have managed to make the points of outlaw and law enforcer similarities and interdependence without sacrificing revealing action to talk or forced symbolism. This pic does not have the movement of these pix or the depth to make it effective. This appears primarily a local bet.

Elf Jahre Und Ein Tag
(Eleven Years And One Day)
(GERMAN)

Berlin, Sept. 24.

Nora release of Roxy (Luggi Waldleitner) production. Stars Ruth Leuwerik, Bernhard Wicki, Paul Hubschmid. Directed by Gottfried Reinhardt. Screenplay, Jan Lustig, based on novel by Nigel Balchin; camera, Klaus von Rautenfeld; music, Hans Martin Majewski; editor, Lisebeth Neumann-Kleinert. At Marmorhaus, Berlin. Running time, 106 MINS.

Tina Rodenbach ..... Ruth Leuwerik
Karl Rodenbach ..... Bernhard Wicki
Tony Cameron ..... Paul Hubschmid
Fanni Gruber ..... Margot Trooger
Pichler ..... Wolfgang Doerich
Stumpff ..... Heinrich Schweiger
Wotawa ..... Georg Corten

This German film, which the American Gottfried Reinhardt directed, offers a plot that is so more or less the most oldfashioned one can ask for. The cast headed by Germany's leading film lady, Ruth Leuwerik, may lure large segments of native cinemagoers but it hardly contributes to prestige for German filmmaking abroad.

It's the old triangle of two men and one woman. The latter, Miss Leuwerik, finds life rather dull beside her overly patient and pedantic lawyer-husband (Bernhard Wicki). Eventually she lands in the arms of a handsome novelist (Paul Hubschmid) who's a friend of the couple. Her unfaithfulness becomes known to the husband when she gets involved in a hit-and-run accident. The generous husband not only shows understanding for his wife's side-leap but also protects her from the police by giving false information because he still loves her. Finally she goes to the police herself and the viewer learns that the couple, married for 11 years and one day, will stick together.

Ruth Leuwerik is a beautiful woman and a personality but her acting abilities seem limited. Her role in this film makes it again rather obvious. Wicki is nice as the overly tolerant mate while Paul Hubschmid is overly irresistible in this. The police are overly naive, and the script overly corny. Direction and camerawork appear overly conventional.

Pic was shot against the beautiful background of Salzburg, Austria. The interior scenes were partly shot in the houses of director Reinhardt and his star, Miss Leuwerik, both located in that area. There's not a bit imagination or originality about these "Eleven Years."

Drylanders
(CANADIAN)

Canada's National Film Board's first feature. Commendable in general though marred by surviving flavor of video for which first intended. Nature takes revenge on greedy wheat farmers.

Swift Current, Sask., Sept. 26.

Columbia Pictures release of National Film Board of Canada (Peter Jones) production. Stars Frances Hyland and James Douglas. Directed by Donald Haldane. Story and screenplay, M. Charles Cohen. Narration, William Weintraub; camera (Superscope b&w), Reginald Morris; editing, John Kemeny, Kirk Jones; music, Eldon Rathburn. Premiere at Cinema Theatre, Swift Current, Sept. 25, '63. Running time, 70 MINS.

Liza Greer ..... Frances Hyland
Dan Greer ..... James Douglas
Bob MacPherson ..... Lester Nixon
Ada MacPherson ..... Mary Savage
Colin ..... William Fruete
Russel ..... Don Francks
Thora ..... Irena Mayeska

National Film Board of Canada, long famous for its artistic shorts and functional documentaries, has at last moved into feature film production with this commendable second feature made entirely by and with Canadians, and filmed on location at Swift Current in Saskatchewan.

A good, clean, simple film made with professional care it tells the story of Dan Greer, a Boer war soldier who, despising his city life as a lowly clerk, moves with his family into the wide open-air freedom of the praries in 1907. After the usual setbacks in wheat growing and the hardships of building a home, the Greers eventually prosper as do the other wheat farmers in the growing community.

But greed and the misuse of the land bring about the revenge of nature. Years of drought follow, with choking dust, financial ruin, and near starvation. Families leave, a son goes to the city only to find mass unemployment, and Dan Greer dies a broken man. Soon after the rains begin and his widow resolves to start again.

This film was first thought of as a 90 minute three part television production for the Canadian Broadcasting Co. When it showed little interest the National Board decided to make it into its first story feature with actors.

Unfortunately, Charles Cohen's script still retains the earmarks of television. The result is a somewhat superficial review of the passing years in documentary fashion rather than a consistantly living and detailed portrait of the life of the Greers.

There is too much off-screen narration by the wife providing links which should have been dramatized and shown; the ending is good enough for television but too flat for the cinema; too many scenes of family life are merely set pieces rather than part of a well-developed story, and it was quite unnecessary in such a short film to bring in flashbacks on the death of Greer of scenes of his first years on the prairies.

However, Cohen's dialog rings true in most scenes, but Weintraub's commentary is hearts and flowers stuff. Certain scenes fail dramatically—such as the father slapping his son at the dinner table—because they happen too quickly. There is no indication of strain and tension, the characters move against a background of passing years but only rarely become a part of them.

The players bring considerable conviction to their parts: Frances Hyland has a distinctive voice and the right face for the role of the wife. She conveys intensity and emotional feeling in spite of the screenplay's lack of depth in drawing the characters. James Douglas gives a quiet performance as a simple man seeking an independent life, but the audience should have been closer to him during the depression years. Instead, he becomes a shadow and we feel nothing when he dies. Don Francks, Mary Savage, Lester Nixon and Irena Mayeska register effectively in small parts.

Don Haldane's direction is straightforward and lively and his use of the wide screen, mainly in closeups, is imaginative. The groupings and composition make this film better to look at than to hear. The location photography by Reginald Morris, carried out in windy exteriors and cramped interiors, is extremely good with pleasing black and white contrasts.

Special effects by Wally Gentlemen are excellent—particularly the transition from burning sun to cracked earth, and Eldon Rathburn's music is always a part of the narrative and never obtrusive.

Peter Jones produced this picture at a cost of $200,000 which is reasonable for a costume picture made on location, and many of the residents of Swift Current appear as extras. Judged as a second feature it's worthy of being shown in any theatre.

Maigret Voit Rouge
(Maigret Sees Red)
(FRENCH)

Paris, Oct. 1.

Comacico release of Films Copernic, Titanus production. Stars Jean Gabin; features Francoise Fabian, Vittorio Sanipoli, Guy Decomble, Brad Harris, Ricky Cooper. Directed by Gilles Grangier. Screenplay, Jacques Robert, Grangier from book by Georges Simenon; camera, Louis Page; editor, Sophie Dubus. At Colisee, Paris. Running time, 90 MINS.

Maigret ..... Jean Gabin
Lilli ..... Francoise Fabian
Lognon ..... Guy Decomble
Pozzo ..... Vittorio Sanipoli
Charlie ..... Brad Harris
Cicero ..... Ricky Cooper

Vet actor Jean Gabin lends his inplacable presence to another Maigret pic based on Georges Simenon's literary character. Pic is solidly plotted if somewhat too stolidly directed. It looks like an okay local bet with lesser chances for foreign spots.

Here Maigret comes up against a couple of American gangsters out to knock off a witness who may send up their boss back in U.S. The FBI also gets into it. But Maigret's infallible logic and shrewdness end up setting things right.

There are some okay fights and a series of characters from upper and underworld haunts. But none can take on mueh life. Gabin himself has taken away some of the humanity of Maigret and made him a sort of unctuous law enforcer who patronizes rather than accepts his inferiors.

It is technically all right. But director Gilles Grangier lacks the punch to make this neatly dovetailed tale other than an ordinary one.

Thunder Island
(C'SCOPE)

Crisp suspense meller filmed in Puerto Rico. Better than the average "B."

Hollywood, Sept. 25.

Twentieth-Fox release of Jack Leewood production. Stars Gene Nelson, Fay Spain, Brian Kelly, Miriam Colon. Directed by Leewood. Screenplay, Don Devlin, Jack Nicholson; camera, John Nickolaus Jr.; editor, Jodie Copelan; music, Paul Sawtell, Bert Shefter; asst. director, Frank Parmenter. Reviewed at the studio, Sept. 25, '63. Running time, 65 MINS.

Billy Poole ..... Gene Nelson
Helen Dodge ..... Fay Spain
Vincent ..... Brian Kelly
Anita Chavez ..... Miriam Colon
Ramon Alou ..... Art Bedard
Carl Cepeda ..... Antonio Torres Martino
Rena ..... Esther Sandoval
Antonio Perez ..... Jose De San Anton
Jo ..... Evelyn Kaufman
Linda Perez ..... Stephanie Rifkinson

Skillfully designed and executed within the limited possibilities of an extremely modest expenditure, "Thunder Island" is a commendable example of frankly "B" picture craftsmanship — unpretentiously tailored to a supporting function but pound-for-pound, dollar-for-dollar a cut above average for its diminutive size. Filmed in Puerto Rico in relative haste, the Jack Leewood production for 20th-Fox's API wing will make an attractive and serviceable running mate, painlessly augmenting whichever of the studio's major releases it accompanies into the open marketplace.

While the picture leaves certain elements to be desired, principally in the area of emotional involvement with its characters, these lapses and unfulfillments are to a large degree understandable in view of the stringent specifications. The Don Devlin-Jack Nicholson scenario, a workmanlike original, deals with a plot to assassinate an exiled dictator. A callous assassin is hired by a small band of idealists who fear the dictator's possible return to power. In the process of botching the job, he inadvertently helps heal the marital wound of an estranged couple dueling over a way-of-life to pursue.

The film is briskly paced, wisely geared to action essentials and the accumulation of suspense. Where it fails is in the establishment of audience involvement—in the development of a rooting interest in the contest between the supposedly idealistic band of assassins and their target. The dictator is too nebulous a figure. Since the nature or motives of this debate-to-the-death remain somewhat obscure, it is difficult to become emotionally concerned for the participants. It's like going to a ball game in a strange town and not caring whether the visiting team or the home team emerges victorious because one doesn't know the players.

By far the most convincing and colorful portrayal is that of Gene Nelson as the sadistic, health-conscious, raisin-eating hired killer. Miriam Colon is well cast as liaison woman for the job, and Fay Spain and Brian Kelly are adequate as the troubled married couple. Art Bedard and Antonio Torres Martino capably head the supporting cast, mostly contrasted on location in Puerto Rico.

Producer-director Leewood has engineered a taut tempo and his climactic chase scene, executed in colorful El Morro Castle, is excitingly mounted and filmed—the highlight of the picture, icing on the cake. Resourceful photography by John Nickolaus Jr. and an expressive score by Paul Sawtell and Bert Shefter are key assists to the production.

Frau Cheney's Ende
(The End of Mrs. Cheney)
(GERMAN)

Cork, Sept. 24.

Europa release of Roxy (Luggi Waldleitner) production. Stars Lilli Palmer, Carlos Thompson, Martin Held, Francoise Rosay. Directed by Franz Joseff Wild. Camera, Guenther Anders; screenplay, Johanna Sibelius, Eberhard Keindorff, based on comedy by Frederick Lonsdale; music, Hans-Martin Majewski. At Cork Film Fest. Running time, 96 MINS.

Mrs. Cheney ..... Lilli Palmer
Artur Dilling ..... Carlos Thompson
Charles ..... Martin Held
Madame Ebley ..... Francoise Rosay
Helene ..... Maria Sebaldt
Dimanche ..... Wolfgang Kieling

"Mrs. Cheney," West Germany's feature film entry at the recent Cork Film Fest, can be described as a pic beyond the German average. But it offers little if anything to make it an item of foreign interest. The more demanding international audience will find it rather dull.

Mrs. Cheney, the principal figure, is both an attractive and intelligent widow who seems to be perfect lady. But this, in fact, is only on the outside for her real "profession" is that of a thief. With the help of her butler, she aims at stealing the valuable diamonds of a rich old lady on the Cote d'Azur. But then she gets involved with amore, and the latter changes her. She becomes a loving woman and forgets all about stealing.

The best about the film is Lilli Palmer whose portrayal of "Mrs. Cheney" is not exactly a masterpiece yet something that also the more fastidious patron will enjoy. Her personality actually saves the film which otherwise would have been rather banal. Acting honors are also due for Martin Held as Miss Palmer's butler. Argentinian-born Carlos Thompson, husband of Lilli Palmer in real life, is a smart playboy with whom Miss Palmer falls in love. He's not at all impressive.

Direction by Franz Josef Wild has its witty moments but, in all, lacks the imagination and charm needed for such a boulevard comedy. Yet the main fault for these deficiencies lies with the script which is too routine. On the plus side is the good camera work and a fine score. Other credits are up to par.

die production has been down compared with a year ago, the distribs report an increase in imports that are not purely in the art category.

The "L-Shaped Room" is providing one of the more dramatic examples of the tightened situation in Chi. It is currently in its 15th day and date week at two of the Windy City's prime art house, the Town and World, both owned by Chuck Teitel, and the end is not in sight. Pulling 30 play weeks from the availabilities in Chi art houses has been a source of anguish to the other art distribs. Emboldened by the success of the experiment, Teitel is looking for another picture of sufficient merit to warrant the two-theatre playoff.

Art Clinic and Decency Legion Talk

Crowther, Brandt, Deneau, Brown, Levinson on Special Films—Other Speakers For TOA Convention

With the opening of Theatre Owners of America's 16th Annual convention moving rapidly closer, events and speakers for the conclave, to be held Oct. 28-31 at the Americana Hotel, N. Y., are piling up. In addition to a host of previously-reported events and participants, several others have been added to the list.

On Oct. 29, an Art Theatre Seminar will be held, to be participated in by N.Y. Times film critic Bosley Crowther, Trans-Lux Distributing Corp. prez Richard Brandt, Walter Reade-Sterling v.p.-general sales manager Sidney Deneau and Melvin A. Brown of the Peachtree Theatre, Atlanta. Norman Levinson, Dallas exhib, will head the discussion, with Nat Fellman of Stanley Warner Theatres in the chair.

That evening Columbia Pictures will hold a gala reception for convention delegates at the Americana and the evening before Joseph E. Levine will throw a bash, followed by dinner at the Americana's Imperial Ballroom. There will be a dinner and reception Oct. 30 and the president's banquet the following evening at which Cary Grant and Angie Dickinson will receive awards.

On Oct. 30, the Rt. Rev. Monsignor Thomas F. Little will address a luncheon in the hotel's Georgian Ballroom on the subject "Exhibitor—Citizen, Saint or Sinner." Msgr. Little is the exec secretary of the National Legion of Decency and holds other Catholic posts. The convention will be opened by general chairman Edward L. Fabian, 10 a.m. on Oct. 28 and other participants will include Richard A. Smith, architect Drew Eberson, retiring TOA general counsel Herman Levy, producer-director Carl Foreman, Bob Selig and others.

The day before the convention opens, Oct. 27, retiring counsel Levy will be given a testimonial luncheon by the TOA board and exec committee at the Americana. Stuart Aarons, house counsel of the Stanley Warner Corp. will be toastmaster. Levy resigns Nov. 1.

U'S 5-WEEK SALES DRIVE: 'ABOAF MONTH'

October Aboaf Month, a five-week sales drive named for Universal International's veep and foreign general manager Americo Aboaf, got underway Monday (29) with 45 of the company's branches and distribs participating. Drive concludes Nov. 2.

While this year's drive will not coincide with the ending of the fiscal year, as in the past, the five-week sales effort is designed to lend strong emphasis to the effort of the overseas U organization to surpass last year's fiscal figures.

British Booking

major chains have all the key dates pencilled in up to the end of next year.

The scramble for worthwhile dates also affects product which has proved itself in the U. S., such as the Embassy Pictures imports, which are distributed in the U. K. through 20th-Fox. The most successful of these to date has been "Bocaccio '70," which recently played the third release, plus a few added bookings from the majors, and is now predicted to end with a U. K. gross of around $300,000. By present day standards that is regarded as a healthy return, though is a long ways short of Embassy's original predictions.

Now there's the problem of getting adequate playing time for "Divorce, Italian Style," which is still doing smash biz on its West End release after more than three months, originally playing the Carlton and Curzon, and now at the Cinephone. One likely date may have to be abandoned as a result of the new holdover policy. But any protracted delay could land the film bang in the middle of the pre-Christmas doldrums, which all distribs try to avoid.

The dilemma is one facing the entire industry. Whether or not the creation of an effective third release will provide the requisite solution is now being examined at trade and governmental levels. Several months must elapse, however, before a decision is made.

Pamela Tiffin will costar in "The Pleasure Seekers," David Weisbart production at 20th-Fox.

Theatres Rise as California Expands

11 New Houses In Southern Sector—Investments Run as High as $750,000

Los Angeles, Oct. 1.

Southern California is embarked upon a film theatre building kick. Eleven new houses, significantly the greater majority consistiing of hardtops, have opened in local areas during the past few month, and seven additional situations are nearing completion for preeming mostly before the first of year.

While total cost of houses isn't definite they range from $300,000 (minimum for a full-equipped theatre) to $750,000, excluding the $1,000,000 unusual cost of the new Pacific Cinerama Theatre which opens Nov. 7 in Hollywood. At an average of $450,000 for the 18 new locations, the overall aggregate for new wave of theatre construction will amount to some $8,100,000.

Leading the field is National General Corp., which, according to prexy Eugene Klein is planning 50 new theatres as additions to its current 225-house chain. Corp. since May 23 has opened four houses, with another due in February, 1964. Opened are the Thousand Oaks, at cost of $400,000; San Jose, May 29, $600,000; Palos Verdes Peninsula, August 7, $450,000; Northridge Sept. 11, $350,000. Coming is the Rossmoor Shopping Center, budgeded at $300,000. Total construction actually outlayed for these five houses is $2,100,000.

Similarly, Fred Stein's Statewide Theatres on June 19 opened $350,000 Capri in West Covina and on July 19 the $750,000 San Diego in San Diego. Company says "it is very likely" they will continue theatre construction.

Stanley Warner Theatres, additionally, spent $250,000 without equipment for the La Mirada which opened Dec. 18 and will budget at least an equal amount on the Canoga Park, to start construction pending court approval.

Other houses opened include the Simi Valley Drive-In, constructed by Metropolitan Theatres and opened August 7 and the independently - owned Sands, which opened Feb. 1 in Glendale.

Upcoming houses include $350,000 Torrance, to open Oct. 9 for United Artists Theatres. Company has plans for two new theatres, according to assistant division manager Roy Evans. Others set, on indie bases, are by Sam Stiefel, to open Woodland Hills theatre this winter; Jack Roseman to open La Mirada in the winter; Granada Hills house set for October opening under Sam Baker aegis, and Five Points Shopping Center Beach Theatre in Huntington Beach, to open next spring.

Added construction is particularly significant in view of the shutdown of theatres in past 15 years. In 1946 there were some 20,000 conventional theatres throughout the country, the figure diminishing to 16,000 in 1958 and moving up to a current listing of 17,000. Recent surveys of the field indicate the majority of new houses have been in the shopping center areas, many of them merely leased from the center developers.

Perennial Chevalier

here but with plenty of Anglais items peppered throughout.

He did 16 songs, half of them new and some sketches. His twist takeoff to a song called "The Straw Hat Twist" got a solid salvo and had youngsters admitting the old boy still had plenty on the ball.

Celebrating his 75th birthday and his 63d year in show biz Chevalier also got a tremendous reception on his final number talking of his age. He then went down and shook hands with members of the audience.

It is estimated that he will mainly draw the older crowds. However, last Sunday's (22) all-day show on private radio station Europe No. 1, dedicated to Chevalier, had youngsters expressing that they were interested in seeing him too.

Radio show had many of the top older and new singers doing the songs he made famous as well as himself. Various younger members of the audiences were asked about Chevalier and many said they felt he was a "croulant" (literally "a falling apart one," jargon for old-timer) but still an interesting one they would like to see and hear again.

Fellow performers paid him homage at a garden partly held at his home in Marne a Coquette near Paris. Here he was also offered a leading role in a Comedie-Francaise performance of Moliere's "The Doctor In Spite of Himself" by C-F head Maurice Escande.

Chevalier made no commitments but made it clear this song stint was not a farewell show but one to make an anniversary. He had no plans of retirement and various singing projects and pic plans in the U.S. He said he would go on for a long time yet.

He also has just finished the eighth tome of his memoirs which will be coming out soon break all records for heat, L.A. come within a degree of its all-time frying smog record, and Palm Springs register a cool 113°..

Crosby has long tired of the place, though he moved there only five years ago when his place above the Thunderbird C.C. became "too noisy." He sold that hacienda for $90,000. He is building a new home on the Gulf of California, near Guaymas, Mexico, where the fishing is good. That, Beverly Hills and Pebble Beach will be his collection of pads for the present.

Efforts to lure the Prez into buying a place around here like ex-Prez Eisenhower has done at El Dorado C.C., have got nowhere so far, but these peddlers of sand dunes don't give up easily.

White House staffers and Secret Service men bunked in the Van Heusen, Morrow and Petitto homes during the weekend. Press holed up at the Riviera and Spa hotels in Palm Springs, 15 miles away.

Phil Regan threw a cocktail party for them Saturday night but the Prez communed with the ocotillos, cacti and smoke trees which constitute the Crosby lawn. The place has color tv, but poor reception. Besides what's on Saturday night?

grimmer from the standpoint of freedom of the entertainment industry here.

Private Censorship Showing

The pic had a highly unusual "private censorship screening at the West German Foreign Office in Bonn, a situation so unusual that the Foreign Office reps refuse to talk about it.

In addition to officials of the Ministry, officers from the West German Army were present at the secret screening to decide if the pic could cause any political repercussions with the German public and especially among members of the West German army who might view it.

The Foreign Office reportedly nixed the pic, and passed this word along to the German censors. Result was that the FSK, the censorship board, turned thumbs down on the film in toto. It came up for a second appeal screening before the censors, who had the right to change their decision, but the word was still negative.

Frightening Aspect

Frightening aspect of all this is —people in every land are able to see the West Germans in this light via these films but the West Germans are denied the privilege of seeing what the others are viewing about them.

In addition, it's noted that "The Condemned" is an accurate presentation of the stage play by Jean Paul Sartre which held views unfriendly to the Germans but nonetheless had wide showings in foreign countries. The film was considered outstanding enough to win the Italian film prize, the Golden David, for 1962.

When German critics saw it at its Milan preem, they noted it was "anti-German" "aggressive" and penetrating". But at least they felt the Germans had a right to see it and decide for themselves.

Now, as one German editorialist notes, it's getting to the stage where a foreign filmmaker must approach the German censors in advance with a script of a forthcoming pic, and ask whether there is anything in it to offend their sensitivities.

And it's generally noted here, the FSK seems to be exceeding its authority when it decides which of these scenes or words might be "politically dangerous" for the German public to view.

Canada's Dream

Grant McLean "which is designed to keep our various departments such a science, educational, animation and so on all working the year round. If we had taken money from these units for "Drylanders" they would have been without work and we cannot run the Board efficiently this way."

Roberge paid tribute to Columbia Pictures for its suport and encouragement. Under the auspices of the Swift Current Chamber of Commerce, with the Government of Saskatchewan as the host, and through the hard work of Jim Lysyshyn of the NFB's Information Services, the premiere went with a real western swing. Among the dozens of guests were actress Irena Mayeska (who appears in the film), Saul Isenstein of Columbia Pictures, Calgary and Irvine Fogel of Columbia in Winnipeg. Abe Schnieder of New York sent his greetings. The film has been booked into some 20 theatres in Saskatchewan during the next two weeks and will open in the eastern part of Canada during November. In cities far and near, the press, radio and TV have been talking about "Drylanders" which belies the often made statement that Canadians aren't interested in seeing Canadian films. The future looks bright.

Inside Stuff—Pictures

Episcopalian "open house" discussion about race relations in the Father Malcolm Boyd's apartment in Detroit was filmed on Sept. 1 for coast-to-coast telecasting on Oct. 10 by the Canadian Broadcasting Corp. on an hour-long documentary program entitled "The Observer."

More than 100 Negro and white students and other guests crowded into Boyd's digs overlooking the Wayne State University campus while a six-man film unit, which came to Detroit from Toronto for the occasion, set up TV lighting throughout the apartment and proceeded to film the program.

Rev. Malcolm Boyd will be commuting between Detroit and Washington, D.C., during the first three weeks of October to film six half-hour tv shows entitled "Concepts in Cinema" which are slated to run Sunday afternoons on WMAL-TV, Washington, through Oct. 27.

Motion Picture Producers Assn. is cooperating with station and the Greater Washington Council of Churches by supplying clips from current films for the tv series. Clips from "8½" were seen on the premiere show while the second ran clips from the new "Lilies of the Field" starring Sidney Poitier.

Episcopal priest hails the "religious" quality of such films as "8½" and "La Dolce Vita" while being highly critical of such self-styled religious films as Paramount's "The Ten Commandments" and Metro's "King of Kings."

Marlon Brando is "very much interested" in a plan "not to allow our films to be shown where there's discrimination in seating," he told interviewer Kingsley Brown in an exclusive Canadian Broadcasting Television "Newsmagazine" coverage of the recent Freedom March in Washington. Asked if his appearance there "would backfire at the box office," Brando replied calmly, "That's incidental. We're interested in bringing this situation — as it bears on all oppressed groups (He named nearly a dozen — to an end."

Virtually paraphrasing the late Oscar Hammerstein's "You've Got to be Taught to Hate" lyrics from "South Pacific," Brando concluded, "Hatred and fright become part of the family standard. Such people are now faced with the need for very serious consideration . . . I have a list as long as my arm of Hollywood people who feel as I do, but whose work prevents their being here today. Others are joining our movement every day . . . No, we're not organized — just people who feel the way we do and are ready for whatever unpleasantness may come our way as a result."

A favorable omen is interpreted by Senator J. William Fulbright (D.-Ark.) in the recent bestowal by the Moscow Film Festival of its grand prix upon the Italian feature, "8½."

Leading the Administration's forces for Senate ratification of the test ban treaty, Fulbright interrupted debate on that subject to praise "8½" as a "brilliant and almost surrealistic account of an artist's struggle with his creative use."

(Be that as it may. Perhaps realism demands the footnote that the Russians gagged at giving the prize to the Fellini film praised by the senator. It is the type of self-indulgence in a director which they deplore. Only the united pressures of the international members of the festival jury pursuaded the Russians to go along on "8½," but that does not invalidate Fulbright's point that Moscow may be "changed" for the better, since the Soviet jurors did yield to opinion.—Ed.).

Ben Sack, who operates film houses in Boston, is back from Spain with a paean of praise for Samuel Bronston, his film being shot there, "Fall of the Roman Empire," and the country itself, which, he predicts will become the major motion picture capital.

Sack says the praise for Bronston and the film is entirely unsolicited. He doesn't have the picture, doesn't know if he will get it or not, and said he'd "pull for anyone else who might beat me to it." Furthermore, he said: "I'm buying a full page ad in VARIETY to tell the whole world film industry what I think about it, and it will come as a surprise to Bronston and everybody else, I'm that high about it."

Accompanied by his wife, Barbara, his 21-year-old son, Jerry, and Robert Gary, 9, for whom his Gary theatre is named, Sack journeyed to Bronston's studio in Madrid for a screening of the rough cut of the film.

Henry Klinger, Story Editor of 20th-Fox in the N.Y. office, has contracted with Pocket Books (Simon & Schuster) for a fourth mystery novel in his paperback series in which Lt. Shomri Shomar of the Israeli police is the sleuth. New text will be backgrounded entirely in Israeli and in a film studio there. Klinger made his first visit to that country this summer. His previous titles were "Wanton For Murder", "Murder Off Broadway" and "Essence of Murder", situated in Manhattan and dealing with, respectively, diamond, legit theatre and perfume angles.

Motion Picture Production Code, unlike its earlier days, is now concerned with "treatment" and not with "subject matter," Code Administrator Geoffrey Shurlock reported on KNXT's public service program, "Viewpoint," Sunday (15). Stressing "There are now no taboos on subject matter," Shurlock told interviewer John Hart, "Movies have changed with the changes of civilization."

cash (or Par stock) values which would accrue to Levine, presumably on a capital gains basis, and the mutually agreeable association which Levine has had over the past several years with Charles Boasberg, former Warners distribution head and now president of Par Film Distributing Co.

Levine is perhaps responsible for the most excitement created by an individual on the business end of the film business in some number of years. His bids for overseas productions have made him a household world in foreign production circles and he has become significantly known in the U. S. for his merchandising methods along with the product he has had to offer.

TV NETWORKS HANKER HENRY

The Dow-Jones 'Overnights'

The overnight Nielsens are being upstaged these days by the overnight Dow-Jones averages. Over the past couple of weeks Wall St. has been reacting with an almost amazing sensitivity to the new fall tv schedules. The brokers are reading the reviews even more carefully than the bankers who have been watching the new pilots coming on.

CBS, for some time now the bluechip of the entertainment industry and highly touted on the street, registered a seven-point climb (hitting a high of 79¾ last week), a feat attributed to bullishness over the web's schedule during premiere week. The ABC fluctations have been in direct ratio to critical reaction to its programming and the "overnights."

RCA isn't that simple to dig. Too many other corporate factors (manufacturing, electronics, etc.) are involved with the NBC subsid, which accounts for about one-third of the total RCA worth.

Jerry Lewis Blasts 'Incompetent Idiots' at ABC For Censoring Script

Hollywood, Oct. 1.

ABC-TV had a second thought on "The Jerry Lewis Show" Saturday night after allowing a Mort Sahl monolog routine to be aired in the east and midwest, and censored the program for western outing. Network faded out the audio on guesting comedians turn and clipped version of the live show as it was telecast via tape in the west.

A spokesman for Lewis reported that the star-producer had sent a blistering telegram to ABC-TV prexy Leonard H. Goldenson protesting that "The network has no right to do this," and warning, "If this is ever repeated again," etc.

Lewis, in his wire, is reported to have reminded Goldenson that he has "complete artistic control" over his show, per his ABC-TV pact. Lewis also is reported to have informed Goldenson that he was not blaming him personally, nor the higher echelon execs of web, but "some of the incompetent idiots" on lower levels.

In the controversial Sahl sally, Sahl observed: "The governor of Nevada is objecting to (Frank) Sinatra's friends—who are Sam Giancana and the President of the United States."

This sentence was chopped after the word "friends" the second time around. On the tape version seen on the Coast Sahl just pantomined, the words having been faded out.

Sahl's reference obviously was to Sinatra having to face a hearing before Nevada gaming control board which charges Sinatra entertained mobster Giancana, member of the infamous "Cosa Nostra," at Cal-Neva Lodge, Tahoe, owned by Sinatra.

Crazy, Man

Rather than tote his own jumbo instrument, Frank Carroll, bass man for NBC-TV's "Sing Along with Mitch" now on national tour has been renting a bass in each city. Problem: he plays four-string bass and the local outfits have been sending over five-string jobs.

To keep things straight in Cleveland, show management called the local musicians' union and request a bass with four strings. What did they get? A bass player and four fiddlers.

Why Were Dean, Sinatra Tossed Off Bing Show?

Conflicting reports surround the bumping of Frank Sinatra and Dean Martin from the CBS-TV Bing Crosby special scheduled for Nov. 7.

Sinatra and Martin were pencilled in to tape a segment in Hollywood Sunday for the show, plugging their upcoming "Guys & Dolls" album cut for Warner Bros. Reprise label.

Segment has been dropped, with two reasons for the axing emanating from MacManus, John & Adams, ad agency of sponsor Pontiac. Early report from agency said the act ran over the allotted hour and had to be out. Second agency report said Warner Bros. requested postponement because the record release was set for January. Warner Bros. spokesman, however, said release was slated a few days before the show.

However, other sources contend yanking the segment resulted from Pontiac's concern re Sinatra's tangle with Nevada gambling board by his alleged entertaining of Mafia mobster Sam Giancana in his Cal-Neva nitery at Lake Tahoe. Nevada board is slated to make a decision in the case next month, and the outcome could be unfittingly timed to the show date. Postponment of the Sinatra-Martin bit to a Crosby-special scheduled for February would give time for a substitution.

Skelton's Far East Show

Tokyo, Oct. 1.

Repping Red Skelton, attorneys Joe Ross and Marvin Sears were here ironing fine points with the governmental Japan Broadcasting Corp. (NHK) for coproduction of a color episode of the comic's show here next April or May.

Sears said Skelton would be the only performer coming in the group of 20 from the U. S., which would also include musical director David Rose.

A non-commercial web, NHK would get Japan rights to the episode for its participation.

Serling Developing CBS 'Chase' Series

Hollywood, Oct. 1.

Rod Serling, creator of "Twilight Zone" on CBS-TV, has been signed by that network in a development deal for another Serling-created series, "The Chase," for the 1964-65 season.

Hunt Stromberg Jr., CBS-TV coast veepee in charge of program development, signed the deal with Serling whereby the writer-creator will develop the hourlong modern adventure series. Deal was negotiated with Serling's agent, Aldon Schwimmer of Ashley-Steiner.

Stromberg was instrumental in bringing Serling's "Zone" to CBS-TV.

TIO Taps Walbridge

Exec veepee and general manager of KTRK-TV, Houston, Willard E. Walbridge, has been elected chairman of the Television Information Committee, governing body of the industry's Television Information Office.

Walbridge succeeds Clair McCollough, president of Steinman Statitons, Lancaster, Pa., who had headed the committee since its establishment in 1959.

FAT CATS BEYOND RANGE OF GUNS

By GEORGE ROSEN

E. William Henry, the new FCC chairman, whom the networks had feared would become their bete noir of the 1963-'64 season, has—much to their totally surprised delight—turned out to be their All - American, alltime favorite chairman.

When the tv networks' Who's Who—Gen. and Bob Sarnoff, Frank Stanton, Leonard Goldenson, together with their squads of administrative aides—accepted the invitation to grace the dais to frame Henry's first industry appearance and maiden speech in New York last week, it was with fevered trepidation that Newton Minow's successor would articulate a new anti-tv crusade which would make Minow's "Wasteland" address, in retrospect, tame indeed.

Advance trade speculation anticipated a withering fire of criticism together with a tough program, spelled out in compelling specifics, to upgrade prime time's tv program quotients and, at the same time, "Loevingerize" the networks' gold mine of owned stations by advocating that the big tv station combines be reduced from a maximum of five to three.

When Henry mounted the Waldorf-Astoria rostrum last week, almost every man on the executive-laden dais would have laid odds that he was about to excoriate the networks for failure to implement the JFK-inspired goal to "elevate" tv programs. While they had expected a vivid and thorough indictment in the earlier New Frontier Minow tradition, their amazed ears tuned in a speech which left them as thoroughly unscathed as one they might have expected from an FCC chairman appointed by Barry Goldwater.

Meantime, and in sharp contrast, most of those in the general audience, mistakenly thought Henry's speech was in the New Frontier "make the networks toe the public interest line" tradition. And thus Henry's "valiant" speech against "vulgar, excessive and ill-timed commercials"; his call for "corrective measures . . . long overdue" was reported and applauded in the press, not to mention the networks' own newscasts which gave it unexpectedly large coverage.

Indeed the newspaper reader or the tv newscast viewer could hardly avoid the impression of glum, greedy network execs once again getting a scolding from a new knight in shining JFK armor who—like Minow before him—would rally public opinion and the FCC to force the networks to put the public interest above their private profit.

Here, again, it seemed, was wit, rhetoric—a new crusade of a new young protector against the entrenched interests of broadcast greed, a greed Henry summed up as "over-commercialization."

Knowing The Score

But as Henry read his prepared text, his impact on the dais was unlike that on the audience or general public. For on the dais some 30 poker faces (the two Sarnoffs, the Stantons, the Kintners, the Goldensons, the Aubreys, the Sonny Werblins, the Wally Jordans, et al) paid respectful attention while they struggled to conceal their secret discovery and delight that Henry's withering anti-broadcast fire left them safely out of range.

As every alert network exec knows, before Henry can focus an attack on over-commercialization, he must first define it. What makes a commercial "vulgar?" How many are "excessive?" When is it "ill-timed?" While Henry postponed an actual definition until after what he proposes be "a face-to-face meeting between the Commission, en banc and . . broadcasting stations, networks, program producers and advertisers," he suggested that the needed definition might well

Paley and Stanton: What's With '64-'65? CBS Brass to Coast For Early-Early Wrapup of Next Season

By this weekend, it's anticipated that CBS, for the first time in any network's history at such an early date, will to all intents and purposes have pencilled in the program schedule for next season. Even before the first National Nielsens for the '63-'64 semester are posted, CBS will have a pretty fair sizeup of what'll have to be scrapped and the pilots to shoot for.

It's a feat made possible, of course, by the certainty of a long list of established holdovers, whereas an ABC, for example, will be obliged to sit it out and wait for the returns on its practically whole new schedule.

Like ABC the week before, CBS premiered its entire '63-'64 schedule during the past week of Sept. 23-30, with evident satisfaction over how overnight Nielsens responded to the Judy Garlands, the Danny Kayes, the "Petticoat Junctions," the "East Side West Sides," etc.

But apparently it hasn't eliminated the concern for next season. That's why board chairman Bill Paley and corporate prexy Frank Stanton leave for the Coast today (Wed.) for a several-day look-see at everything and anything that tv network prexy Jim Aubrey has been dickering in recent months toward resolving '64-'65. Accompanying Paley and Stanton will be Aubrey and program head Mike Dann.

The foursome, accompanied by Coast senior v.p. John Reynolds and his key aides, are set for a crash program of activity in which they'll touch base with every major producer and packager of network product. It's the three-day period in which Stanton and Paley will give the okay on the major commitments for full series, involving as high as $8,000,000 to $10,000,000 per hour time.

Eternal Hope

Bob Hope, back for his umpteenth season, all of them dedicated to NBC, demonstrated anew his indestructibility when he registered a whopping 35.6 overnight N. Y. Nielsen last Friday night. His 50% share of audience was topped over the weekend only by Ed Sullivan. Closest competitor was "Burke's Law" with a 14.4 (20.2 share). Even "Harry's Girls" benefitted from the Hope lead-in, winning its time period.

Hope will only be doing a one-a-month special, otherwise hosting the Chrysler-sponsored Friday night anthology series.

ABC '100 Grand' First Casualty Of TV Season

The Sunday night "100 Grand," ABC-TV's attempt to bring back the big money quiz games into the network picture, has wound up as the first casualty of the season after a couple of weeks on the air. The show has been pulled this coming Sunday (6) for a news documentary on the Senate crime hearings but will not be back the following week. First intimations of the decision came when prexy Tom Moore went on a close-circuit to affiliates yesterday afternoon.

The quiz show failed to get off the ground ratingwise since its debut Sept. 15. It did poorly the first week and even worse last Sunday (29) when it ran a poor third. Network execs were still huddling on a replacement for "100 Grand" at presstime yesterday afternoon (Tues.). It's likely be "The Roosevelt years." This is the series that's been on the ABC shelf for more than a year. It was originally scheduled for the same Sunday at 10 time but was yanked in favor of the now-deceased "100 Grand."

Hearing or No Hearing, Those Video Ratings Still The Be All & End All

Any idea that the rating services would be diminished in importance as a result of the Washington hearings a few months ago has proven to be an illusion of the innocents. The season has just got underway and the network execs are back again quoting the pocket pieces as if they were gospel.

One unexpected result of the Washington hearing is that the ratings have, in fact, become more important than ever.

Public interest in ratings seems to have been whetted by the probe as have the lay press, which formerly didn't know the difference between a rating point and a megacycle, have been hot after those overnight Nielsens to inform their readers about tv's multi-million dollar popularity contest.

Tammy's SG Deal

Hollywood, Oct. 1.

Tammy Grimes has been inked to a multiple feature and vidpix series pact by Columbia and Screen Gems. Series, untitled, will be a half-hour situation comedy, is aimed at the 1965-66 season.

Miss Grimes, currently guestarring in a "Route 66" seg for SG, co-stars with Bea Lillie in Noel Coward's "High Spirits," opening in N. Y. next March.

NBC's $7,000,000 Daytime TV Sales

NBC-TV daytime sales director James Hergen says the web has had sunshine sales totaling close to $7,000,000 during the last six weeks.

Major advertisers on the roster of buyers include Sterling Drug, renewing four shows; General Mills, which bought into nine shows; and General Foods, into four shows.

Sterling's buy for 1964 curtain includes "Say When," "Truth or Consequences," "Concentration," "Missing Links," via Dancer-Fitzgerald-Sample.

General Mills buys include "You Don't Say," "People Will Talk," "Word for Word," "Missing Links," "The Doctors," "Loretta Young," "Make Room for Daddy," "Rough 'n' Reddy" and "Captain Gallant."

General Foods, via Young & Rubicam, has expanded its daytime slate with buys in "Your First Impression," "Missing Links," "Loretta Young" and "Make Room for Daddy."

CBS Participation Coin

CBS-TV, as its new season unwound, plugged up a number of nighttime participation holes.

Block Drug bought participations in "Perry Mason," "Mister Ed," "Rawhide," "Great Adventure," "CBS Reports," and "Chronicle."

Toni inked for participations in "East Side, West Side," "Nurses," "Great Adventure," "Glynis." Beech Nut Life Savers bought participations in "Mister Ed," "Glynis," "Rawhide," "Nurses," "Alfred Hitchcock Hour," and "Great Adventure."

Collins Warns NAB Review Board It's Gotta Toughen Code, Not Relax It

Washington, Oct. 1.

NAB prexy LeRoy Collins, in a new outbreak of foot-in-mouth disease, told the Television Code Review Board here that any plan of making money out of their broadcasting investments should at all times be subordinated to "the basic aim of serving the public good."

Collins told the board the industry should toughen the code and not relax any of its restrictions.

He said he wanted to know from the board what the board wanted from the code but he did not get any such reaction. Members listened and kept their feelings to themselves. The Monday (3) meeting was behind closed doors.

All the board did was to pass a resolution commending Robert Swezey for his services as code director as his resignation went into effect and tentatively agreed to meet next January.

Collins said he has taken no action to replace Swezey yet because he wanted an understanding with broadcasts on whether they wanted the code to exhibit industry statesmanship.

Collin speech almost sounded as if he had Minow in mind as code director.

"When any issue arises under the code," he said, "the first question to be resolved should be, where does the public interest lie?"

"The code," he said, "should not wait for trouble, but should look for all signs of it and promptly get into motion with preventative procedures. It should not be satisfied to help the broadcasters 'get by,' but should challenge him and aim him to do his best."

He spoke of "fires of excitement" in the industry—"fires that should cause more and more broadcasters to rise above simply being better and better money makers and encourage them to scale the magnificent heights of creative achievement and public service."

The two questions of the hour, Collins stated, are these: "Will broadcasters act for themselves? Will they place their aspirations to achieve their best above their desires to make the most profits?"

He said the code should not only be something "in which the public has an interest but in which it also has a working stake."

He called strengthening the code "broadcasters last one chance to make a free profession." He meant FCC will take over.

Louis Nye Series

Hollywood, Oct. 1.

"The Not Very News Reel," half-hour show starring Louis Nye, is being piloted by 20th-Fox TV, as a co-production with ABC-TV, for the 1964-65 season.

Formet consists of Nye's humorous comment on old newsreels. Groucho Marx originally was slated for the series, which is produced by Hal Kanter.

NAB Rips Into FCC Proposal Imposing Com'l Time Limits

Washington, Oct. 1.

You don't have any authority to impose time limits on broadcast commercials, NAB told FCC Monday (30).

And if you adopt a rule requiring limitations, you'll destroy free enterprise in broadcasting as well as violate the free speech guarantees of the U.S. Constitution, NAB added in a message of outrage to the Commission on the breadbasket issue for the industry.

NAB General Counsel Douglas A. Anello and attorney Robert V. Cahill used 44 pages to rip into the FCC proposal.

The main points:

—Limiting commercials "would be the assertion of power never expressly conferred or even intended through inference by congress."

—FCC would "debilitate or destroy free enterprise in broadcasting" if it took such a move, which would amount to "wide and arbitrary powers over the business decisions of Licensees."

—The consequences to the public interest "would be tragic."

—FCC is prohibited by law from "rate regulation," but what's the time limit rule if it isn't that? Limiting the amount of time devoted to commercials would, under the universal rules of arithmetic, determine the minimum rate which would be charged if a station had any hope of staying in the black.

—If the first amendment prohibits the exercise of such power over newspapers, how come broadcasters have less of a constitutional guarantee?

—It would "spell the doom of self regulation."

250G Preemptions As CBS-TV Goes 'Live' On Valachi

CBS-TV again was the only network yesterday (Tues.) which had scheduled "live" coverage of Senate subcommittee's questioning in Washington of Joseph M. Valachi about his activities as a Cosa Nostra member.

NBC-TV slated highlights of his testimony from 2 to 2:25 p.m., 4:30 to 5 p.m. and from 11:15 to midnight. NBC News also slated a preemption for tomorrow (Thurs.) night with an hour special, titled "The Cosa Nostra," fronted by Frank McGee. "Temple Houston" will be preempted that night.

ABC-TV slated taped highlights of the Senate hearings from 1:30 to 2 p.m. and from 11:15 to 11:45 p.m. ABC-TV also planned a half-hour special "Cosa Nostra" Sunday (6) night, preempting "100 Grand."

CBS-TV slated to carry "live the hearings of the convicted narcotics peddler and murderer, as they reopened yesterday (Tues.) morning and continued through the day.

Last Friday, CBS-TV was the only web to televise the hearings "live," when Valachi testified publicly for the first time before the Senate Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations. CBS-TV's coverage started "live" at 10:20 a.m. Friday and continued to 3:30 p.m., when the committee recessed until yesterday. It's estimated that CBS-TV dropped $250,000 in commercial preemptions.

The other networks on Friday had taped highlights.

Walter Rogers as FCC Top Gremlin

Washington, Oct. 1.

FCC has a new hairshirt.

Rep. Walter Rogers, once unknown beyond the lines of his Amarillo, Texas, Congressional district, has gone to the top of the list of the Commission's Capital Hill gremlins.

Serving his first term as chairman of the House Communications subcommittee, Rogers has a prime position for firing potshots.

His latest move as chairman was the announcement of hearings on two of his bills preventing FCC from imposing commercial time limits and from charging fees with license and renewal applications.

Rogers said he hopes to call the hearings in October or early November.

He said the issue involved in both proposed FCC actions "goes to the basic theory of the separation of powers." This statement is in line with his oft-repeated remarks during the editorial hearings before his group that broadcast guidelines should be written by the "duly elected representatives of the people (Congress) rather than by an agency downtown (FCC)."

Rogers questioned the authority of FCC's commercial curbs saying, it seems "traceable to the proposition that Congress has not specifically denied the Commission such powers."

FCC's authority for charging license fees "came from some com-

'World of Art' Tinter

Rome, Oct. 1.

Half-hour color video series titled "The World of Art" is about to get under way here and in Florence under aegis of Guy V. Thayer, who co-produces with Italian director Luciano Emmer.

Skein, which will illustrate various aspects of painting of past and present, will be presented and narrated by Pietro Annigoni.

Deal was packaged by Hugo Lodrini in Rome.

July Premieres?

If ABC proves out right in its crash premiere schedule by going allout for the early sampling and inviting viewers at least a full week before the other networks, it's anticipated that it will start a three-web rivalry for early exposure in the future. The returns aren't in yet, but there's a strong possibility that ABC may have converted it into a definite plus for '63-'64 by retaining a good percentage of the samplers.

If the webs try to outdo one another, there are those who see the possibility of premieres being moved up to August and even into July. As one observer put it: "Maybe it'll eliminate summer reruns."

Incidentally, there was nothing accidental about ABC-TV's kickoff of its new schedule the week of Sept. 15-22. On the contrary, the web was proceeding on the most extensive investment ever made in pre-testing audience reaction.

The research was done on the Coast by Audience Studies Inc., a corporate subsidiary of Screen Gems but an independent operational unit. ASI tested several segments of each of ABC's show to determine which would be the best one to launch the series. ABC was anxious to get the best possible results from the viewer sampling that takes place early in the season.

ASI, which has been in business for about three years, also pretests for NBC-TV, while CBS has its own testing facilities. MGM and Columbia Pictures use ASI to test their features as do producers of commercials.

A Pole Looks at Capitalistic TV

Film Director Polanski, Here for Festival, Can't Get Worked Up Over Medium

By BILL GREELEY

Polish film director Roman Polanski is not impressed with capitalistic television. Before this raises any "free world" hackles, it should be noted he's not impressed with Polish television either.

Polanski is 29, slight and lively. He looks as though he might be a teen-aged rock & roll idol, but instead is one of the heroes of the recent New York Film Festival. He came to the U.S. to attend the preem of his feature film, "Knife in the Water," at the fest, and also its theatrical release in New York.

In his 34th floor suite in New York's Hilton (is there one in Warsaw?), Polanski has had a chance to view some New York television. It's all theatrical, he says through an interpreter, confined in the theatre's three walls before the theatre's audience.

His opinion, however, is fettered by one aspect. Having been busy nights with screenings etc., Polanski has seen only daytime tv with its game shows, live soap operas and reruns complete with

Toy Com'ls Okayed

Washington, Oct. 1.

NAB's Code Authority staff has approved 100 toy commercials prepared for tv Christmas season advertising.

The spots were checked from the storyboard through final film versions to see if they measured up to the actual game or toy, NAB said.

None of the comercials submitted were disapproved by the Code, although some were accepted with minor qualifications.

New French Radio Concept Being Put Into Orbit in '64

Paris, Oct. 1.

Minister of Information Alain Peyrefitte, who helms Radiodiffusion-Television Francaise, which runs the state owned radio and video adjuncts, specified that radio will begin its facelifting in November and go into its new orbit in January '64. Main aspect is in making radio and tv independent of each other and in putting on a heavy cultural aspect without sacrificing its general entertainment and mass appeal.

Peyrefitte stated that it was up to the governmental RTF to try to have as many radio owners listen as possible and keep abreast and even ahead of the peripheral private stations by fine entertainment as well as cultural and educational offerings.

He maintained that tv and radio should be complementary and not rivals. During the hours when tv was off radio would make its top listening impact. The early mornings and afternoons, he said, would be the time to reach car owners and housewives. Since it would be a sort of background to activity he thought that alert, lively and direct

Newton Minow, former FCC chairman who is now general counsel for Encyclopedia Britannica Inc., is currently authoring a major tome about the broadcasting industry in collaboration with Lawrence Laurent, veteran radio-tv editor of the Washington Post. Book will be published by Atheneum next spring.

Minow and Laurent are planning to cover all the major questions facing the broadcast industry with a scholarly treatment suitable for classroom use. It's expected, however, that the book

RAP 'CHECKBOOK JOURNALISM'

Jack Benny's CBS-to-NBC

The question was being posed in the trade last week: Did CBS make a mistake in letting Jack Benny fly the coop and set up shop at NBC next season?

Those who recalled the now-storied "Paley's Comet" of the late '40s when Benny was capital-gained away from "home base" NBC, concede that it was Benny, perhaps more than any other performer, who helped build the Columbia network, generating a talent-raiding spree that was to give Paley the wherewithal to start his tv network.

But some 15 years later the chips were down last week and when option time on his two-year contract came up for a third year renewal, CBS prexy Jim Aubrey didn't exercise it. It was CBS' feeling that, without a protective time period, Benny's usefullness to the network lacked the same potency as in the past.

When some weeks back Aubrey elected to knock Benny out of the post-Skelton Tuesday night period in favor of installing "Petticoat Junction" in the time, Benny let out a yell, but this time Paley didn't come to his defense as in the past. Aubery was running the show and running it most successfully (see Wall St. box), and that's how the score stood. Benny was appeased somewhat by a $3,000,000 capital gains deal for daytime reruns of his shows at some future date, but it was no dice on Tuesday night.

On the other hand, NBC, short on big name personalities, feels that Benny, for all the fact that he's approaching 70, still has a few seasons left as a peak attraction. (Plus the fact that NBC could be inviting a moveover of General Foods biz (Jello) breaking up the CBS virtual monopoly on GF billings).

As to who is right, the answer will be in a year from today.

Ford's $6,000,000 Educ'l TV Grant Cues Revamp of Program Operation

With a new grant of $6,000,000 from the Ford Foundation, the National Educational Television & Radio Centre is now redirecting its activities into exclusively production channels. NET is giving up radio operations, dropping its instructional programs and eliminating its Washington office to concentrate on the production of five weekly hours of cultural and public informational programming. Ford's $6,000,000 grant for the next year topped its 1962 contribution of $4,700,000.

The Ford grant, according to NET prexy John F. White, has ended the first phase of educational tv in the U.S., a decade in which 81 stations have been launched. On the basis of the upped Ford grant, NET will no longer collect affiliation fees from local educational stations. This revenue totalled $585,000 last year and bore no real relationship to the costs of the NET's programming service.

NET has been developing some instructional programming with the U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare. It's expected that the Department will now carry forward these instructional shows with some other agency, possibly a university. NET itself will concentrate on public affairs and the creation of programs in drama, music, dance and science plus fare for children. New orientation has cued the reorganization of NET into two major production units for public affairs and cultural programs.

The Ford Foundation has been the mainstay of educational television since its inception. It has contributed $22,000,000 to NET over the past 10 years and has given over $86,000,000 to all phases of educational tv.

Collins Warns Vegas Audience to Beware Of Fast FCC Shuffle

Washington, Oct. 1.

NAB prez LeRoy Collins said broadcasting and government should be close allies not antagonists and then went on to tell the Nevada Broadcasters Assn. why NAB is fighting FCC and Congress.

He said the industry and government should join to defeat public apathy by stimulating thought and debate.

But he called FCC's proposed commercial time limits and suggestions from the Commission and Congress for "fairness doctrine" guidelines are "areas of very grave concern" to broadcasters.

In a Las Vegas speech, released here, Collins charged the commercial time curbs would "impose a suffocating blanket of obsolecene" on the industry.

'Crockett' Ain't Cricket

An old hit which helped to put ABC-TV into contention about nine years ago has come back to haunt it this season. It's the "Davy Crockett" repeats on the Walt Disney show on NBC-TV Sunday nights at 7:30 p.m., which have been blanketing ABC's new "Travels of Jaimie McPheeters."

To add irony to injury, ABC helped finance the Disney production when it played on the web back in 1954.

Half-Dozen Pilots Firmed Up By ABC For Next Season

ABC-TV, in planning for the 1964-65 season, now has six pilot deals solidly firmed up. Among the most recent properties which Ed Scherick, programming v.p., has okayed are "Alexander The Great," a one-hour historical adventure series out of Selmur Production starring William Shattner and an hour Four Star property, "Royal Bay," starring Joan Crawford, Paul Burke and Charles Bickford, a story about a middle-sized American community and the people who make it tick.

Other pilots in ABC's corral include a half-hour series titled "Criminal At Large," an idea of Paul Coates also being produced at Selmur, which is an AB-PT subsidiary. The principal photography on the MGM-TV "Bible" series pilot has already been completed with Hugh O'Brian in the role of Joseph. George Burns and Connie Stevens have been set for the "Wendy and Me" series pilot at Warner Bros. and Walter Brennan has been inked for a show out of the Danny Thomas production firm.

Another quiz show, "Solo," owned by Larry Thomas Productions, which created ABC-TV's current "100 Grand," is being tested in novel style at the Rutgers Field House in New Brunswich, N. J. The show is being presented live before about 5,000 people. Format for the show involves pitting the knowledge of one man against an entire community. ABC has taken an option on "Solo."

AFFILS ASSURED OF SALANT SCORN

CBS News prexy Dick Salant assails what he called "checkbook journalism," the practices exemplified by a Satevepost tying up all rights to the Fischer quintuplets yarn until the first installment of the Fischer adventure in birth appears in the Satevepost in mid-November.

Salant, in a speech to CBS Radio affil convention prepared for delivery today (Wed.), said publications, broadeasters, or other media, when they spend monies to tie up exclusive rights on hard news developments commit a disservice to journalism and to the public.

For its part, Salant said that CBS News will refuse to become a part of the cash competition for such rights as long as it can stay out of it, even at the expense of missing out on some news beat.

Satevepost, when it purchased rights to the Fischer quintuplet story, included tv and radio rights, which is understood up for grabs by the networks. Life mag has had a running deal for the personal story of the American astronauts, a deal which has not robbed the other media of the story because of its international and national importance.

Salant's address was one of the highlights of the two-day CBS Radio convention which opened yesterday (Tues.) at the N. Y. Hilton.

CBS Radio prexy Arthur Hull Hayes, in the opening session, reported that station payments for '63, will be more than double what was estimated when the new plan of affil compensation was announced last September. The more than double increase was credited by Hayes to the network's strong sales surge over the past nine months.

Hayes, in a welcoming speech to the record number of attending affil execs, noted that business has averaged an 80% sellout of network time since March, exceeding 90% of all available time in some weeks.

CBS Radio's topper reminded the affils that the web had recently put through a general rate increase in an effort to reduce the amount by which radio has been underpriced, noting that "none of us are receiving a commensurate rate of return for what we offer." He forecast that this increase would not be the end but tempered this thought with another. "As we raise our rates, we must give full value... continual experi-

Stanton's Warning

CBS prexy Frank Stanton warned broadcasters that if they fail to use their right to editorialize they will lose that right. He further stated that "if we abuse the power to editorialize we will invite "troublesome and dangerous regulation of that power."

Stanton's strong declaration in favor of editorializing by broadcasters in a responsible fashion was made at yesterday's (Tues.) luncheon meeting of the CBS Radio affils at the N.Y. Hilton.

Said Stanton: "A right must be used with some regularity and with some force and vitality—or it will atrophy. Nothing is so murderous of a right, so contemptuous of it, as to abuse it. In editorializing this simply means unfairness. Nothing is so suicidal and shortsighted as the conviction of a very few broadcasters that, because they hold a license to use the airwaves, their views alone should be entitled to a hearing on their frequences."

CBS prexy reported that during the past five years CBS radio and tv o&o's have broadcast over 1,800 editorials.

Britain All Set To Take Wraps Off a New TV Season As BBC, Indies Jockey For Rating Posts

London, Oct. 1.

With fall sked shows locked in tight and with the competing webs' programming execs able to do little else now save sit back and wait, the British tv industry's autumn season battle for ratings begins at the end of the week.

BBC-1's video programming hierarchy, under the control of Donald Baverstock, has had a definite advantage over the commercial opposition inasmuch as the indie schedule has been known in trade and advertiser circles for some weeks, while BBC's lineup has been kept more or less under wraps until the last minute.

But now that both sides have put their cards on the table, it becomes clear that the main battleground will be in the 7-9 p.m. area. As never before, BBC has shuffled and juggled its clickshows and "promising bets" so that, come the starting gun, it will mount a solid wall of potentially high entertainment value shows from 7 p.m. to the 9 p.m. newscast.

"Balance" shows, which in the past have been deployed among the comedies, the dramas, the spectaculars and other high rating fare —for example the current affairs showcase "Panorama" was sandwiched between a comedy and an action show — are now mainly shunted to slots after the news. "Panorama," as a prime case in point, shifts from its Monday 8.30 p.m. berth, to a post-news peg.

Move of the "balance" shows out of early prime time allows BBC to build such pre-newscast back-to-back audience attractions as (Mon.) "Top Of the Form," "Dick Powell Theatre" or "Defenders," (Tues.) "The Lucy Show," "The Good Old Days," "Maigret," (Wed.) "Sportsview," "Z Cars," "Festival" (Thurs.) "Dr. Kildare," "This Is Your Life," "It's A Square World" and (Fri.) "The Marriage Lines," "Here's Harry," "Dr. Finlay's Casebook."

At weekends BBC is going full belt at catching the viewers with entertainment shows. Saturday line includes "Deputy Dawg" cartoons bringing the gap between sports and the teen-appeal show "Juke Box Jury" followed by the 52-week serial "Dr. Who" (from Nov. 23) "Dixon Of Dock Green" (an established Saturday night fave), "Comedy Playhouse" which skyrocketed the "Steptoe And Son" show, a feature and then "That Was The Week That Was." Rounding out Saturday nights will be repeats of "The Third Man."

On Sundays, BBC introduces a new, three-weekly pattern of alternating "The Black And White Minstrel Show," "The Billy Cotton Band Show" and a Dick Emery

CBS' Al Fresco Show

On the eve of the CBS Radio affil meet, CBS had the crowds on the Avenue of Americas buzzing with its capsule review of the sights and sounds of history during the last 36 years.

The sights were captured by photographic panels on the construction fence fronting the site of the projected 38-story CBS skyscraper between 52d and 53d Street. In addition to back-lighted transparent pictorial blowups, each panel is equipped with an automatic telephone over which passers-by are able to hear highlights of each event as it was broadcast by CBS at the time. CBS was founded in 1927. The events depicted range from Charles A. Lindberg's flight to Paris to Col. John Glenn's space flight, from Marconi to Telstar.

The N.Y. Hilton, the site of the CBS Radio affil meet, is opposite the projected skyscraper. The sight and sound splash, according to one tradester, represents "CBS showmanship in the shadow of the RCA Bldg."

$133,753,200 As Whopping 6-Mo. Take For Brit. TV

London, Oct. 1.

With the commercial tv stations facing a hefty $64,000,000 rental from 1964, time salesmen are making hay while the last of the levy-free ad coin is flowing. This is reflected in the results of spot cash receipts during the first six months of this year, just issued by Media Records Ltd., an independent monitoring service.

According to MR, January-June ad coin amounted to $133,753,200, some $6,140,400 and 4.81% higher than the total of the same six months a year earlier. More than half the indies registered an increase, most outstanding being ABC-TV in the North which is 17.33% up; Associated TeleVision in London which is up by 11.75% and ABC-TV in the Midlands, up by 12.88%.

The 15 contractors shared out the six-month billings total as follows: Granada-TV raked in the highest gross, according to MR, with a 25,474,400 haul. Associated TeleVision garnered $11,905,600 from its London operation and grossed $12,860,400 from its Midlands franchise giving the station an aggregate of $24,766,000 in ad revenue from Jan. to June. Associated-Rediffusion collected $23,153,200 for the same period. And ABC-TV raked in $18,771,200 from its weekend-only stint in the North and Midlands.

Southern-TV topped the smaller regions by collecting some $7,910,000. Scottish-TV followed with $7,868,000. TWW took $7,168,000; Tyne-Tees-TV $6,557,600; Anglia-TV $3,850,000; Westward-TV $2,312,800; Ulster-TV $1,951,600; Border-TV $1,355,200; Grampain-TV $1,313,200; WWN $1,022,000 and Channel-TV trailed with $280,000 for the first half of the year.

Cassavetes 'Flip Side'

Hollywood, Oct. 1.

John Cassavetes will be solo performer in a one-hour dramatic spec, "The Flip Side," for the Canadian Broadcasting Co.

Story deals with an American deejay, and will be directed by Harvey Hart.

Another King (NAB's) Invades the South To Quell Rebellious Groups

Washington, Oct. 1.

NAB staffer Alvin King was appointed to the rebellion quelling post of liason with state broadcasting groups.

Moving further to bolster NAB's position against Southern separatist movements, NAB prexy Le Roy Collins said King "will help NAB establish an even closer working relationship with the 49 State Broadcast Assns. in a coordinated effort to advance the cause of better broadcasting on federal, state and local levels."

An NAB staffer since 1954, King for the last two years has been Field Director of the station relations staff.

Collins and the NAB hierarchy have been speaking out against rebellious state groups—mainly the Georgia and Texas Assns.—and Collins recently said he would appoint a liason as one move to help douse the seccessionist fires.

16 Hours of O'seas Entries For WNDT's First Int'l TV Festival

In the wake of the three networks' new-season premieres, New York's educational channel 13, WNDT-TV, will present its first International Television Festival. For its sheer diversity of race, creed, color, technique and programming, the fest will no doubt sweep the new-season's grand prix for variety entertainment.

To be presented in primetime over two weekends (and possibly three, depending on late entries), the International event will have more than 16 hours of shows from abroad. Entries are already in from Austria, Brazil, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, England, Finland, France, West Germany, Hungary, India, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Mexico, Nigeria, Poland, Spain, Switzerland, Thailand, the USSR and the United Arab Republic.

All countries have contributed their shows (free) to the prizeless Fest on the basis of a one-shot New York exposure. While the entries have arrived on film, vidtape and kinnie, they are all, by WNDT request, productions for television. They'll be adjusted technically for airing here, and will be presented with native soundtrack, with necessary fore, aft and during explanations in English (WNDT reports that with most entries amazingly little footnoting will be needed). Air dates are Saturday and Sunday, Oct. 19 and 20 and 26 and 27, with approximately four hours each night between 7 an 11 p.m.

More than 30 countries were invited to enter, and, says WNDT, "programs of dance, music, drama, comedy, current events and art of every kind are pouring in from around the globe."

Specific entries include "The Lost Revue," from Czechoslovakia," with a clown emcee and a cast of close to 100 performers, including chorines, a jazz band, divers in underwater sequences, torch singers and comic musicians all performing from locales filmed in and around Prague; "Preludes," an experimental production from the Moscow Television Studios with a Bach score and no dialog, relating a story of boy-meets-girl at the Fine Arts Museum; a performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony from St. Peter's Basilica, presented before the Ecumenical Council; Japan's tv school program for deaf children; a retrospective German documentary on the Sacco-Vanzetti case; an exploration of Macumba rites in modern Brazil; a performance of Schiller's drama, "Mary Stuart," from Austria; a biography of Gautama, the Buddha, from India; a telementary on the U. S. Civil War from England; and many others.

WNDT's prexy Dr. Samuel B. Gould and staffers got the idea for an international roundup from the response to foreign productions shown last year during the station's first year of operation. Particularly well received, the station says, were an Italian production, "Isola Di Favigna," about an island off Italy who's entire commerce is tuna fishing, and a French show on the life of Proust.

NBC Gets Global Distrib Rights to Nippon Series, 'The Boy and the Bear'

Tokyo, Oct. 1.

Prez Akira Shimizu of Pacific TV Corp. iscosed that he has agreed to let NBC have global distrib rights outside Japan to his upcoming telefilm series of half-hour children's adventure show called "The Boy and the Bear."

The show is rolling on location in Hokkaido, Japan's northernmost main island, in co-production with the Hokkaido Broadcasting Corp. With time out for the winter snows, it will resume in the spring.

Shimizu claims "The Boy and the Bear" has a production budget three times the Japanese average. Story deals with a youngster who befriends a bear cub and then grows up with the animal. Producer is Tatsuo Hosoya, formerly in charge of production at Shochikn, and director is Aiichi Koishi, managing director of the Japan Directors Assn.

Wayne Howell Back To WNBC; Marshall Exits

WNBC, the NBC radio flagship in New York, has hired Wayne Howell, who left the station in 1962, to handle the 7:05 to 10:30 p.m. disk slot. He's taken over for Jerry Marshall, who's last show was Sept. 26.

Station manager George S. Dietrich says the hiring of Howell's coincides with the station's recent move to "adult music... which is bright and up-tempo," and will now include semi-classical, standards, show tunes, new selections and many others, "just so long as it is a good performance, vocal or instrumental, of an adult, melodic tune. We will not play anything in the 'hard' music category."

Changeup is actually a swing back to the sort of thing the station was doing in its "wall to wall" disk format, and is in line with a musical policy recently worked out with good response from affiliates by NBC radio web for its weekend "Monitor".

Metromedia's D. C. Stagehand Hassle Over Negro Hiring

Metromedia, whose prexy John W. Kluge recently enunciated in VARIETY a firm policy against color bias, is now in a hassle with the Stagehands Union over the hiring of a Negro stagehand at the chain's Washington station, WTTG-TV. Metromedia nominated Oscar Tate, a porter at the station for the past couple of years, to become one of the two regularly employed stagehands at the station.

The Washington local of the Stagehands Union, however, has protested the nomination of Tate, not on the grounds of his race, but because the union wants the temporary replacement to have the job. Tate, who was promoted from $61.20 to $143.20 weekly, is still working at WTTG despite the union squawk. The union has asked that the matter be taken to arbitration.

Opening for a new stagehand occurred last July with the death of Paul Cheney, the stagehands supervisor. Norman Bernhardt was moved up to supervisor and another stagehand was temporarily assigned to the station. On Sept. 9, WTTG nominated Tate as stagehand under the standard union contract procedure.

Goldman-Saperstein Acquire Alperson Pix; Wrapup 900G In Biz

Hollywood, Oct. 1.

Newly-formed Screen Entertainment Co., headed by Harold Goldman and Hank Saperstein, has acquired 10 features produced by Edward L. Alperson for tv distribution.

Latest buy increases Screen Entertainment's inventory of pix to 103. Company recently acquired seven features from Alan Ladd Enterprises, 69 from American International, 12 from Pathe and five from other sources.

In another development, Jerry Kurtz has been named general sales manager. Other appointments include Lee Cannon as midwestern sales manager and Sid Cohen who will handle sales in the western territory.

Saperstein stated that Screen Entertainment Co. has written $900,000 worth of contracts during its first week of operations, covering sales to tv stations of product from its initial block of 93 post-'54 features.

Kurtz, SEC's new general sales manager, held the same post with Walter Reade-Sterling. Cannon was formerly midwestern sales manager for TV Personalities, and Cohen served as west coast division manager for Allied Artists Television.

RUSSO SPACE FILM ACQUIRED BY STALLION

An exclusive film of Russia's space effort, titled "The Great Adventure in Space," has been acquired for U.S. distribution by Stallion Films, Inc., of N.Y.

According to Stallion Films prexy Mark Druck, the Russians have given Stallion Films exclusive rights to all documentary and news films on their space program produced by the Novosti Press Agency. The agency was described as the Soviet counterpart to the United States Information Agency.

Stallion produces and distributes motion pictures and commercials in the U.S.

'Carib Adventure' A Burrud Grosser

That the specialized first-runner finds a market, even in the current tight local time situation, is evidenced also by the success of the Bill Burrud Production Co., the Coast headquartered outfit which has specialized in documentary travelog films.

Burrud has experienced a good grossing adventure with his one hour travelog special "Carib Adventure," starring Victory Jory and other celebs in cameos. To date gross on the one-shot is from $65,000 to $75,000, with some 35 to 40 stations lined up. Copping Delta Airlines in a regional also helped.

Additionally "Carib Adventure" is serving as the kickoff of a first-run half-hour series, titled "Islands in the Sun," 39 episodes filmed in color. Producer Burrud, in this series, stars, being shown on a boat visiting islands.

Gene McCabe, Burrud sales topper, explains that his company always has sold armchair escape adventure via travel shows. It has worked for "True Adventure" and other series, he adds, admitting that the sell is tougher now than in years past, but that for specialized product the market still is there.

McCabe was strong on color. "There are 25 stations which want color today," he says adding, "there will be more in the future." Of all the markets in the U.S., Cleveland is most heavily programmed in color with a penetration of 6.4% of color sets in the market, he finds.

FOREIGN SALES ON 'LIZ TAYLOR'S LONDON'

"Liz Taylor's London," the CBS-TV special slated for airing Oct. 6, has been sold by producers Phil D'Antoni and Norman Baer in more than a dozen foreign markets besides the previously announced English and Canadian sales.

Show also will be seen in France, West Germany, Italy, Japan, Sweden, Norway, Denmark, Netherlands, Austrilia, New Zealand, Brazil, Argentina, Ireland and the Philippines.

Six different languages will be dubbed for the foreign exposure, with the Taylor commentary being done in most cases.

Syndication Review

FRACTURED FLICKERS
Producers: Jay Ward, Bill Scott
Writers: Chris Hayward, George Atkins, Bill Scott, Lloyd Turner, Jim Crutchfield
30 Mins., Thurs., 7 p.m.
KABC-TV, H'wood

"Fractured Flickers" lacks the satiric subtlety and restraint to entice the sharper, more selective viewer, but it could become a big favorite with audiences whose taste runs to hot foots, itching powder, dribble glasses and baby pictures with captions. That, of course, is a sizable and responsive audience, but it's too bad that the Jay Ward scribblers weren't more inspired because the concept of embellishing silent flix with new dialog certainly seems to lend itself to richer, more provocative comedy than the rather obvious, pedestrian gaggery for which the writers have settled.

It is fortunate that the new novelty series has been inserted into such an early evening time slot locally (Hollywood) on KABC-TV,

Frank Reynolds' Chi Exit

Chicago, Oct. 1.

WBBM-TV, topdog news station in this market, will soon lose a second key member of the team that grabbed the lead from WNBQ some seven years ago. Frank Reynolds, a fixture in the noon and 6 p.m. reports at WBBM-TV and rated by many in the trade as the finest newscaster in Chicago, has given notice to general manager Clark George and is understood to be headed for a Washington berth, presumably with the CBS organization.

Reynolds was known to have been unhappy at the station ever since the news department baton passed from Bill Garry to John Madigan last spring. Madigan was brought in by George about a year ago to be the station's editorial writer and voice, and in that capacity he enjoyed a fair-haired status with management and a certain autonomy from Garry. There was considerable friction, and after a falling out with management Garry resigned as news director and went over to WBKB, where he is now developing an editorial operation for Sterling (Red) Quinlan. Madigan, to no one's surprise, inherited Garry's post.

Reynolds, meanwhile, as a devout Garry loyalist, had several philosophical and personality clashes with Madigan, but his departure from WBBM-TV was foretold the day the department switched stewards. His dissatisfaction was so well known in the trade that both WNBQ and WBKB made overtures to him for his services. In turning them down, he told of a desire to work in Washington and of a post pending there. It's not known as yet when Reynolds will be leaving but, judging from a recent development at WBBM Radio, it will probably be during the next month.

The sister radio station had planned to install a new newscast in the early evening and had tapped Fahey Flynn of WBBM-TV for the chore. But the initial announcement of Flynn's assignment was cancelled a few days later with the explanation that it would conflict with Flynn's television duties at that hour. Since Flynn had never worked the 6 p.m. chore on WBBM-TV, it was an easy deduction that he was to inherit the anchor duties from Reynolds, and that's the tipoff to the latter's farewell.

John Drury, whom he station has been grooming for about two years and who was obviously standing in the wings for Reynolds, is the likely successor to the noon newscast.

Irish TV, Heavy on U.S. Shows, Wants Change of Pace; Eyes British Segs

London, Oct. 1.

Telefis Eireann, the Southern Ireland national tv network, is doing some rethinking about the screening of Yank programming. Or at least so says Neil Sheridan, web's pubrelations chieftain.

Over here on a scouting trip, Sheridan—one of the founder members of the Irish network—is eyeing British product on both the BBC and the commercial network with a view to buying.

He says: "The good American shows go over very well in Ireland. But the mediocre ones are no good at all. What we want to do is to get more programs from this side of the Atlantic."

Currently, Telefis Eireann programs about 45% locally-originated material, the rest coming from overseas sources, mainly the U.S. But after the success on the Irish web of BBC-TV's cliffhanger "The World Of Tim Frazer" and selected comedy segments starring Tony Hancock, the outlet is keen on taking more product from this British source, "mainly drama."

Another factor is price. Sheridan reveals that to date an American show will be picked up for about $125—in the early days of Telefis Eireann it was a low as $70—while BBC has let the station have programs "for next to nothing," which BBC is prone to do nowadays

Empire Films' O'seas Rights on Hope Pix

Hollywood, Oct. 3.

Empire Films has acquired all foreign rights (excluding Canada) to seven Bob Hope features, produced by Paramount between 1948 and 1955. U.S. and Canadian dights are owned by Allied Artists Television.

Foreign rights cover theatrical reissue and tv first-run, according to Edward L. Koenig Jr., Empire Films prexy. In a number of the areas of the world, some of the pix have never been exhibited theatrically.

Included in the group are "Seven Little Foys," "Road to Bali," "Son of Paleface," "Lemon Drop Kid," "The Great Lover," "Road to Rio," and "My Favorite Brunette."

Texas Brewers Hopped Up Over Pastor's KDRY

San Antonio, Oct. 1.

The general council of the Texas Brewers Institute has complained to the FCC that the Rev. Sam Morris of San Antonio intends to close up both local breweries and dry up all of Texas and that he should not be permitted to use the call letters KDRY on his new local outlet.

The letter, signed by Homer Leonard of Austin as general counsel for the Texas Brewers Institute and addressed to FCC chairman E. W. Henry, asked that the granting of the license to the Rev. Mr. Morris be reviewed.

"I hope there is now some way in which you can again review the purpose behind this venture," Leonard wrote, "and consider it in the full light of what the effect would be if that purpose could be accomplished by Mr. Morris."

If the brewers had known about the application they would have "protested most vigorously the granting of a license with such call letters," he said.

"Mr. Morris' lifelong devotion to the prohibition cause is assurance enough to us," the letter declared, "as to the purpose to which the station will be put at least in substantial measure. But the call letter in themselves represent built-in propaganda in behalf of prohibition . . ."

WNEW's Klavin & Finch Build Special Following Among Ad Agency Execs

Klavan & Finch, WNEW Radio's morning mahouts of mimicry and ad libbed commercials, have developed a wide listenership among ad agency execs who are curious to find out how their plugs are being handled. This special audience for K&F has now cued other ad media to use the disk jockey duo to sell their message to Madison Avenue.

WOKR-TV, Rochester, a new channel repped by Blair and Family Circle magazine, have both supplied K&F with fact sheets aimed at agency execs. Others who used K&F for this purpose are KING-TV, Seattle; AM Radio Sales, the Westinghouse station reppery; Foster & Kleiser, the outdoor billboard firm which is a corporate cousin of WNEW-TV; and Bob Lawrence, producer of tv commercials.

Latter was really an unusual deal. Lawrence bought one spot to ask agencymen to watch his six-minute commercial on a tv show that same evening. Biggest WNEW user among competing media is ABC-TV which bought a heavy four-week schedule on the station to promote its new fall schedule.

SYNDIES' QUALITY FIRST-RUNS

CBS Films: Travel Bureau For Stars

CBS Films, which claims to be the top exporter of tv film shows, has a personal appearance overseas tour mapped out for series stars. Latest to hit the overseas p.a. trail is producer-writer-host Rod Serling of "Twilight Zone."

Serling has left Los Angeles for a 38-day trip which will take him to Australia, Japan, Hong Kong, and the Philippine Islands. He'll cover 38,000 miles. Author-producer follows Raymond Burr (Perry Mason), Eric Fleming, Clint Eastwood and Paul Brinegar (Rawhide), and Donna Douglas (Beverly Hillbillies), all of whom have been sent on overseas p.a.'s by CBS Films.

Serling's first stop will be Sydney, where he will be guest of the Australian Broadcasting Commission, which carries his program on its six stations, and a guest of the Australian Writers Guild. He is slated for interview shows and as guest lecturer at the Writers Guild. In Manila, he will be met by execs of the Inter-Island Broadcasting Co., which carries his programs. From there, he moves to Hong Kong and Tokyo, returning Nov. 5.

CBS News Bureau In D. C. Evolves Special Interest Stories For O&O's

Washington, Oct. 1.

From 10 to 15 stories per week are being supplied by the CBS o&o Washington News Bureau headed by correspondent John Edwards. The stories covered by Edwards are of special interest to their markets and are not normally filmed by CBS News for network broadcast.

The bureau, which became operative Sept. 1, was formed by the five CBS o&o's last spring as they were in the process of expanding their news operations. Each of the stations increased its early evening news schedule this fall to supplement the network's increased time.

Longest time allotment for news among the o&o's was granted by KNXT, Los Angeles, with its 90-minute Monday-through-Friday "Big News." Program consists of one hour of local and regional news plus the half-hour Cronkite

The other stations—WCBS-TV, N.Y.; WBBM-TV, Chicago; WSAU-TV, Philadelphia; KMOX-TV, St. Louis—all present 30 minutes of local news adjacent to the web's newscasts.

John Edwards' coverage in Washington of stories pertaining to the CBS o&o areas has been an integral part of these expanded programs. He has covered such local stories as the Mexican labor situation in California, the Indiana Dunes Development Project, plans for the Jefferson Memorial in St. Louis, etc. He has serviced several stories on behalf of all five stations, stories dealing with the Senate crime inquiry, the White House Mental Retardation Conference and Senate hearings on air pollution.

Edwards reports that he is in regular contact with about 20 Senators from the five stations' area as well as with more than 100 Congressmen. The bureau manager-correspondent added that as word of the bureau's function spread in Washington circles, legislators have been contacting him with leads on stories

Bank Opens Vault To WBBM Radio

Chicago, Oct. 1.

WBBM Radio made one of the big catches of the new season by hauling in a local bluechip sponsor whose main effort heretofore has been in tv. Marshall Savings, through the Kennedy & Heyne agency, signed for an ad splash that will tote up more than $300,000 over a full year if the sponsor renews after the first 13 weeks. In local radio, that's a pile of business from a single customer.

The buy involves a schedule of 60 helicopter traffic reports per week on the station, plus full sponsorship of the complete live performance of Verdi's "Nabucco," which opens the Lyric Opera's 10th season this Friday (4). Latter includes coverage of the pre-curtain and intermission color.

Marshall still has some television coin committed, but for the next quarter at least WBBM Radio will have the lion's share.

'Romper Room' in Britain'

London, Oct. 1.

The first deal for Fremantle's "Romper Room" program with a British tv station was closed last week. It will go out from Grampian, starting Nov. 1. A local girl has been signed to femcee the show, and she will be leaving for Baltimore on Friday (4) for two weeks' training.

The deal was made by Angela Cuthbertson, Freemantle's U.K. and European rep.

WOR-TV's 54-Hr. Tint Week In '64; Norelco's Tube

Tint video continues in the new-season news with the report that North American Philips Co. has developed a new camera tube for better color and black & white pickup and a New York independent's announcement that it will be colorcasting 54 hours of color a week, and next season will be broadcasting major league baseball in color.

Norelco's "Plumbicon," a new color-camera tube, is said to produce unusually uniform color pictures "free of dark 'halos' and color shadows and blurring." Amperex-Electronics Corp., a Norelco subsid, will distrib the tubes here, which are made by Philips Holland. (WBS-TV, the one network with no regularly scheduled color, is acting as advisor on the operating requirements of American broadcasters. With Theatre Network Television, Norelco is studying possibilities for closed-circuit and large-screen use.

WOR-TV, with its multiple run feature film shows, will be putting out 54 hours of color programming a week, beginning in the spring of 1964. Along with tint feature pix, station will be telecasting the New York Mets games in color from Shea Stadium.

Cleve. Reshuffles

Cleveland, Oct. 1.

The area's game of musical chairs with news directors continues as Charles Day leaves WGAR to join WEWS and Pat Trese, KYW-TV, resigned to rejoin the "Huntley-Brinkley Report."

Trese is the fourth man to leave the Channel 3 news directorship in less than five years. He came to KYW last October after 10 years with NBC.

Day, with WGAR for 20 years, replaces Joel Daly who has joined the WJW-TV newscasting staff following the departure of Warren Guthrie, a 10-year veteran and head of the speech department of Western Reserve University.

TO NIDORF IT'S SAVIOUR OF BIZ

By MURRAY HOROWITZ

Resurgence of quality first-run product for syndication is forecast in key quarters, as the '63-'64 network season opened to what many people in the trade feel to be a faltering start.

The resurgence, because of time limitations on the local level, isn't focused on the nunber of properties. It's frankly acknowledged that the syndication biz in the forseeable future couldn't support the quantity of first-runs, as it did in the heyday of syndication.

The upward curve of the cycle, though, is seen in the quality packages—the entries which fill specific station needs running the gamut from Steve Allen to "Battleline" to Jo Stafford specials to David Wolper documentaries, such as those distributed by United Artists Television.

Mike Nidorf, board chairman of Independent Television Corp., who has experienced the ups and downs of market-by-market selling, puts it this way:

The off-network hours have been bought and played by stations across the country and haven't proven themselves, by and large, in the ratings. He says he has documented research to prove his point. He also raises the question of why action adventure shows which now, by and large, are passe on the network level, should be considered good rating getters on the local level, as reruns.

Stations, he maintains, in order to gain excitement on the local level, in order to attract the regional advertiser in a program buy, must look to first-run product. Poor first-run product won't sell, but quality first-runners that fill station needs in program categories, that in quality are on a network level, will sell.

Nidorf, whose company also happens to be in the network biz as well, points to the sales success of not only ITC's own "Jo Stafford Specials," but to Steve Allen and "Battleline." He says talent still holds off from doing a syndication series such as Allen. Jackie Gleason loves the rerun payments for "Honeymooners," but he feels Gleason and stars of his caliber still shy away from doing a syndication show, as if they were involved in a sustaining time vehicle.

That will change, Nidorf predicts. Stations, which have driven down prices so that it's become uneconomical to produce first-run product, now recognize that better prices must be secured and are more willing to pay better prices for desired first-runners. Talent, too, is being weaned away from the "sustaining time" notion associated with syndication. Allen and those who appear as his guests are helping, so are the reviews on an Allen show.

As to talent, Nidorf says, it's an uphill fight. Success of the J.O Stafford specials, though, will find

JERRY LESTER SHOW SOLD TO AUSTRALIA

"The Jerry Lester Show," telecast on Canada's privately-owned CTV network, has been sold to Austarama Television Pty, Ltd., of Melbourne. CBS Films, which co-financed the show in Canada, handles foreign distribution.

Thirteen episodes are being produced at CTV's affiliated station, CFTO-TV, Toronto, matching 13 episodes previously produced in N.Y. The Canadian-produced programs feautre Canadian performers, thus giving Canadian talent overseas exposure.

Similarly, CTV, through an arrangement with Storer Programs, Inc., of the U.S., has launched a new series, "The Littlest Hobo." Skein is filmed entirely in Canada, according to CTV, using Canadian talent. This, too, is aimed for the international market.

WPIX's $3,800,000 Spree On 'New' Programming With Big Thrust Into 60-Min. Entries; Also Two Hours

Riddle Me This

Chicago, Oct. 1.

An early-morning WMAQ newscast last week got an immediate reaction at the switchboard when newsman Charles Heath dropped the item than an unidentified but well-groomed nude woman had been reported walking around the Near North Side.

All of the callers had the same question: how could anyone tell she was well-groomed?

Trend to hour shows has hit the big-market independents full force, with the primetime schedule of New York's WPIX-TV (set for the fall preem of new entries as the smoke settles from the three network's fall fireworks) mirroring the greater length.

WPIX, which calls itself with some justification, "The One Station Network," this year will have nine hour shows, compared with four a year ago, and a couple of two-hour shows to top it.

To be sure, the trend to hours follows the networks via the off-web route, but the station's exec veepee and general manager Fred Thrower has an economic theory about that. The producers of the hour series, he says, have to bank on the residuals of summer repeats and syndication reruns else they could never load the shows with the talent and high production values they have. Anyhow, if the independent has to live with repeats, he still has two-thirds or so of the tv audience yet to catch on the second or third go-around.

Thrower thinks this is his station's best season yet. He knows its the most expensive (he estimates cost of new programming for the year at $3,800,000).

New hours on WPIX this year will include "Naked City" (the "Naked City" half hours also will be scheduled); "Hawaiian Eye," "Frontier Circus" and the "Dick Powell Theatre." Last year's continuing include "Checkmate," "Thriller," "Adventures in Paradise" and "Divorce Court." Two hour entries will be a variety sports special Saturday nights and David Susskind's "Open End" moving over from WNEW-TV (where the talk show's legendary controversy was mostly off-screen between the producer and station execs). "Great Music from Chicago" represents an hour entry outside the drama realm.

Station will still have plenty of half hours, with new ones to include Four Star Distribution's "Tom Ewell Show" and "The Law & Mr. Jones," and Trans-Lux's "Guest Shot," the series featuring celebs and their hobbies.

But the most interesting development in the station's half hours is the Friday night coupling of what could be called video's situation comedy classics, "The Honeymooners" and "Life With Father." Jackie Gleason's "Honeymooners" is continuing on WPIX, and its success gave Thrower the idea for a block of the shows from the past that have something extra. He actually called CBS Films and asked to buy "Life With Father," and he was also trying to negotiate for the old "I Remember Mama" series with Peggy Wood, to make a 90-minute block out of the shows. Death of Carol Irwin complicated

WABC-TV's 2-Hr. Ayem Strip a La 'Today' Showcase

WABC-TV, N.Y. flagship of the ABC-TV web, is making a major bid for the morning market with a live two-hour strip of news, public affairs and entertainment from 7 a.m. to 9 a.m. John Gilbert, the station's recently appointed manager, is currently negotiating with a name personality to host the show. It's due to kick off later this fall and if it has any impact in the New York market, there's a good chance that the show will be primed for a network rise.

This venture is the cornerstone of WABC-TV's ambitious live local programming plans which will total almost five hours daily, in addition to weekend public affairs shows. Other live shows on the station will include the syndicated "Girl Talk" show, a half-hour news wrapup at 6 p.m., a late evening show and the Les Crane "Nightline" show which runs a minimum of 90 minutes starting at 1 a.m.

Move into live programming area has been greased by the station's click with two new feature film strips. The 5 to 6:30 p.m. "Big Show" has tripled the station's ratings in this area. The late-night "Best of Broadway" feature package has also sharply increased the station's standings and is now bringing in enough revenue to pay the freight for the live shows. Another feature film show, from 9 to 10:30 a.m., debuted on Monday (30). Gilbert is accenting firstrun product on these film shows. A taped 90-minute special with phyliis Diller has just been completed by the WABC-TV staff and will be slotted in the "Best of Broadway" time period.

The station's news and public affairs department, now headed by David Shefrin, will present a one-hour "New York, New York" and a half-hour "Page One" on Sundays. In addition, Gilbert has launched a regular series of editorial pronouncements which are tied to his monthly luncheons with local public figures to determine the community's needs.

Chaseman's New Status

Joel Chaseman has been appointed to newly-created post as director of Group W Projects for Westinghouse Broadcasting Co. Inc. by prexy Donald H. McGannon.

Chaseman will take his new post, headquartering in New York, in December, leaving his present spot as executive producer of "The Steve Allen Show" and general manager of WBC Productions Inc.

Chet Collier, program manager of Westinghouse's KYW-TV, Cleveland, succeeds Chaseman on the Allen show.

Chaseman has been exec producer of the Allen show since its June, 1962, inception.

WWRL's Transfer Brings $2,000,000

WWRL, N.Y. radio outlet beaming primarily to a Negro audience, is being sold to Egmont Sonderling, head of Sonderling Radio Stations in the west, for a price announced at over $2,000,000. William H. Reumann, head of the Long Island Broadcasting Corp. who built and has owned WWRL since 1926, expected the deal to be consummated by Jan. 1, pending FCC approval.

Sonderling will stick with WWRL's current programming stress. Reuman will continue to operate WRFM, a Queens FM outlet.

Sonderling is buying WWRL in association with Richard Goodman and Mason A. Loundy, both of Chicago.

An interesting eulogy which has been put together by, obviously, a company of professionals, this first in a series about Hollywood people and places is above the routine in terms of production approach and, hand-in-hand, loyalty to a discriminating public. The values may well be expressed in the negative form: It is not a cheap recap on the career of a film colony figure; instead, it bore down with clear honesty on an outstanding actor.

A short-of-excellent rating is in order because this latter-day exposure of Humphrey Bogart was not profound. Or, to put it another way, there was little of what Madison Ave. calls "in depth."

Yet, there is some element of depth in just the pictorial retelling of Bogart before the camera. The replay of clips from "Petrified Forest," "Maltese Falcon," "Casablanca," "To Have and Have Not," "Sierra Madre," "Caine Mutiny" and "African Queen" indeed chronicles the man. Bogart literally blazed his way (with pistol and Tommy gun) to cinematic prominence to the extent that he overshadowed early-day rivals James Cagney and Edward G. Robinson. This was circa WB in its thematic lawless heyday.

Excerpts from his pictures tell his career story in some part. David L. Wolper as exec producer and Jack Haley Jr., as series producer, took no short cuts. They gave this initialer genuine production values. Wolper's knowhow in the documentary field shows through. The continuity was carefully plotted, and a few words by Bogart's old friend, John Huston, were fitting. Music by Elmer Bernstein proved a dramatic assist. Perhaps a little too much adulation was expressed in the hushed tones, but not the words, of Joseph Cotten's commentary.

This first-time-out for the series of half-hour documentaries was interesting. Supposedly nothing else but old material had to be offered in the way of providing insight on the strikingly individualistic and strong personality that was Bogart. Militating against the impact for some onlookers was the fact that Bogart is seen so much via the theatrical features now going the tv exposure route.

More importantly, the caliber of the production augurs just fine for the series followups which are to focus on other stars, film cycles, filmmakers and human interest features. Gene.

OTHELLO
With Adolph Caesar, Mimi Kai, Dom Tattali, Susan Fram, Henry Laskawy
Producer: Lucille Murovich
Director: Bob Eberle
90 Mins Sun., Sept. 29, 12 p m.
WOR-TV, N. Y.

It can safely be said that not too many college term projects can be worked into a good 90-minute tv special. That, however, is just what WOR-TV made out of this "Othello," produced and acted by New York University students.

The Shakespeare tragedy was a term project of Lucille Murovich, who got producer credit on the hour version. To fill out the 90 minutes the station wisely tragged on the half-hour segment on "Othello" from the University of Michigan's fine Shakespeare series featuring Prof. Arthur Eastman.

The hour version of "Othello," Shakespeare's great tragedy built around a melodrama of love, hate and jealousy, was played by the five NYU students (who, incidentally, reportedly brought the idea of an airing to WOR). Particularly strong were Adolph Caesar in the lead role, and Dom Tattali as Iago. Excellent in support were Mimi Kai, an attractive young Oriental, as Desdemona, and Susan Fram as Emilia and Henry Laskawy as Cassio.

Professor Eastman's illustrated comments in depth made a perfect adjunct to the preceding enactment. This would be a fine way to rerun the entire University of Michigan Shakespeare series, giving the collegiate thesps a chance to flex their talents electronically and viewers a chance to reexamine The Bard in entertaining and instructive format. Bill.

It's regrettable that "Mr. Novak" is stamped with some of the cliches that trademark those link sausage telefilm series, because it is otherwise a promising new entry for NBC-TV, one that could give that network a fast start on Tuesday nights. Presumably the creators, E. Jack Neuman and Boris Segal, feel they are playing it safe by passing up all the avenues to a distinctive television series and relying instead upon the formula devices that give it a similarity to all other vidseries about professional people.

The debut show had all its winning moments in the first half, when it seemed as though "Novak" might become a serious version of "Mr. Peepers," with some of the same charm and with low key stories about earnest tyros learning the teaching game. But it soon became clear that this was going to be another conventional melodrama showcase and that the title character was going to have more in common with detectives and urbanized cowboys than with Mr. Chips. From the looks of things, Novak is going to be busier looking after his wayward flock outside the classroom than in it.

In the preem chapter, he's initiated to extra-curricular teaching by a high school senior who drops out to go into business for himself. Novak feels obliged to save him from free enterprise, first, because the kid has the best grade average in the school's history and, second, because Novak knows that winning the boy back will earn him the confidence of the rest of the class.

What is immediately hard to accept, and never satisfactorily accounted for, is how a fellow like this could be an honor student and not care about school or how he could run a man-sized business in his junior year and still get top grades. No matter; Novak pursues the kid and, using the boy's dad as an object lesson, predictably captures his game. Lee Kinsolving does well as the young dropout.

In James Franciscus, the series has a prepossessing hero who fills the prescription for Novak with just the right amount of candor, eagerness and innocent idealism. The character of Novak is an interesting conception and the series' strongest point thus far. Next strongest is Dean Jagger, who is cast perfectly as the school principal (and correlative of Dr. Zorba, Dr. Gillespie, et. al.). Two good looking gals are introduced who promise future romance angles, and there are other faculty members who will have running and perhaps significant parts. Les.

"Glynis" could go. This new half-hour entry is a wacky situation comedy with a promising running story about the crime-solving antics of a mystery story authoress and her attorney husband. As evidenced on the preem, British actress Glynis Johns, as the wife, and Keith Andes, as the husband, have the polish and appeal to build audience loyalty.

The opening yarn was not particularly original, but it played as a satisfactory whodunit farce. In this one, Miss Johns nabs the murderer of a wealthy eccentric after ruling out his butler as a suspect. It happens, of course, that the butler is the heavy. But in the process of rediscovering this cliche, Miss Johns clobbers all of her allies into insensibility.

The opening script was peppered with laughs and was executed in good comedy style by the principals with an assist from George Mathews, an ex-cop who plays the apartment house manager. Herm.

If the new 60-minute "Richard Boone Show" can remain on the same qualitative level as was evidenced on the premiere last week, NBC-TV will be off and winging with one of the best dramatic offerings of the new season. For the initial presentation, "Statement of Fact," scripted by the gifted E. Jack Neuman, was of a caliber, both in the writing, the production and the performances, to give tv dramaturgy a new and respectable foothold in the programming sweepstakes. Tradewise, it provides a significant footnote in the fact that it projects those panel-quiz entrepeneurs, Goodson & Todman, into the drama arena as bigtime vidfilm contenders.

This is the series that has the unique distinction of introducing a repertory company of actors into a major weekly offering and which, in its initial period of preparation, enlisted the services of the late Clifford Odets to ensure quality scripting. Whoever it was that spotted the Neuman teleplay as the kickoff entry chose wisely and with keen discernment, for not only was it endowed with sharp and sensitively-wrought story values designed to heighten viewer interest and attention as the hour progressed, but provided an eminently satisfying showcase to establish the thespic talents of Richard Boone and to an even greater extent that of Bethel Leslie.

"Statement of Fact" starred Boone as a ruthless prosecutor who extracts a confession of guilt from a beautiful murder suspect. There's a correlation between the girl's own unhappy, frustrated and ill-fated existence as an unloved wife, with that of the interrogator. In the striking parallel of circumstances (in which, for nearly a half hour, the two are pitted in closeup treatment in a fascinating sequence of verbal duelling) it's he, rather than she, who emerges as the more pitiful creature.

It was brought off with authority and conviction, with producer Buck Houghton, director Lamont Johnson, the two principals and the supporting players from the repertory company demonstrating that there's nothing wrong with tv drama that professionals wih devotion and earnest dedication to their work cannot remedy. The remedy was found in last week's premiere of the "Richard Boone Show." Rose.

With "Mister Ed" going to the CBS-TV post for its third season Sunday (29), this "talking horse" situation comedy came up with a timely script for the preem. Writers Lou Derman and Robert O'Brien, who obviously were clairvoyant, conceived a story line in which Ed (the horse) provided tips to Los Angeles Dodgers coach Leo Durocher on how to improve the team.

Whether Durocher can use Ed's tips during the World Series remains to be seen. But at any rate it was a novel warmup for both "Mister Ed" and the series. Sparking the laughs, per usual, were Alan Young as Ed's "trainer;" Connie Hines, Young's wife, and Edna Skinner as the next-door neighbor.

Among others in the cast were Durocher himself and several Dodger players. Naturally, they helped provide an authentic touch to the preem episode. While there's nothing subtle about the humor in "Mister Ed," this Filmways TV production looks set to hold its fans for another season on the basis of the initialer. Varying sponsors include Beechnut Gum, Py-co-pay toothbrushes and Bosco chocolate drink. Gilb.

Bob Hope, who is giving his all for Chrysler this season as host of an anthology series and star of a monthly variety show, teed off with one of his own crackerjack comedy stanzas. It remains to be seen whether the dramatic entries can sustain this momentum, but in any case, Hope's own specials can be counted on to be surefire winners.

Hope's opener last Friday (27) adhered to a time-tested formula. There was, of course, a gag-studded introductory monolog, a roster of strong guest names and a string of laugh-loaded sketches. All of these elements jelled into a very bright hour.

The comedy on the show had a running theme pegged to the three-network programming schedule. A production number, titled "I Can't Wait to Find Out," keynoted the rib which was carried over into a Hope-Tuesday Weld sketch about a couple of married tv stars with competing shows.

James Garner and Hope teamed up for a broad swipe at France's sexual standards via a Telstar pickup of a Gallic tv show. ABC-TV's "Hootenanny" was beneficiary of the biggest plug of all in an extended bit of burlesque which Hope, Dean Martin and Barbra Streisand played some seedy-looking folksingers. In all cases, Hope performed with his customary skill and received excellent support from the other cast members and his battery of scripters.

Straight musical offerings were highlighted by the high voltage performance of Miss Streisand. Her renditions of "Anywhere I Hang My Hat Is Home" and "I'm Gonna Find a New Man" were marked by the dramatic intensity which has made this songstress a new hot property. Dean Martin contributed a smoothly swinging version of his current disk, "Via Veneto." Herm.

The golden corn of "Beverly Hillbillies" looks weedy in "Petticoat Junction." Creator-writer-producer Paul Henning, who's responsibile for those high rated hillbillies, also is creator-writer-producer of "Junction," located on the same CBS-TV network.

While the cartoon characters of "Hillbillies" bounce and the pace is fast, the live cartoonery of "Petticoat Junction" has a slow, ho-hum quality judging from its preem strip. The humor would have made the Arkansas traveler appear sophisticated.

As a commercial vehicle, only a scarecrow, not alive to the Nielsen field, would blindly brush off the rating possibility of "Petticoat Junction." The preem did have that bucolic, way out setting and the people had the grace of turning upside down the unwise pace and values of today's zingy, wasted living. Whether that's enough to catch on is up to those ladies from Dubuque and their partners, the milkmen of Kansas.

Playing their cartoon roles were Bea Benaderet, who owns a hotel, in the middle of "Nowhere, U.S.A." She had three eye-catching, unmarried daughters, played by Jeannine Riley, Pat Woodell, and Linda Kaye. There was a permanent house guest in the form of Edgar Buchanan, portraying Uncle Joe. Supporting cast was ably played in the fantasy form of the script.

Plot involved a high pressure railroad exec out to do away with a long-forgotten trunk line, a line moldy and uneconomic at the home office but necessary and loved in "Petticoat Junction." The viewer knew who would win all the time. Horo.

Preem "Twilight Zone" outing was as dated as an O. Henry short story. Penned by Rod Serling, it was slick without too much depth, sentimental without true emotion ringing out, violent, as a peg rather than a necessary element.

O. Henry even today, though, can be enjoyed, and there were elements in the opening half-hour of "Twilight Zone" which offered moments of interest and involvement. One expects more from Serling, though, when dealing with people.

The only elements Serling added to this O. Henry-like tale, titled "In Praise of Pip," were that of modern-day settings. The drama dealt with a smalltime bookie who makes a bargain with God for his son's life.

The performers were excellent. Jack Klugman, as the focal point, the smalltime bookie who makes the fantasy pact with God, carried more conviction to the role than called for in the script. Connie Gilchrist, in a bit part, was moving as the landlady with the heart of gold. Billy Mumy as young Pip had the quality to make the viewer choke up, as he plays with his father Klugman, one of whom is about to die.

For all that, when the half-hour was ended, the viewer felt he was fed a pat tale, an affliction which bothers the short stories of O. Henry today despite their style and sentiment.

In its fifth season out, "Twilight Zone" is slotted against "Harry's Girls" and "The Farmer's Daughter." Horo.

Racial problems in our national capital were ably and penetratingly explored in an NBC-News speical program Thursday (26) tagged "The Washington Negro." The political, economic and social difficulties facing the D.C. Negro were thoroughly analyzed some months ago in a New York Times series.

But with this filmed documentary, crisply narrated by Chet Huntley, NBC brought the visual points of the situation into sharper focus. The cameras studied the Negro's role in crime, schools, employment, government and housing, among other things.

Referring to crime, Huntley said that 57% of Washington's population is Negro but 85% of crimes are committed by the Negro. Undoubtedly contributing to the problem is the fact that Washington schools have a 39% dropout rate and three-quarters of the schools are badly overcrowded.

While these and other statistics that Huntley freely quoted may have a dry quality, the roving cameras helped project the figures into a vital picture of what the Washington Negro is up against. Well-rounded special also included interviews with such D.C. dignitaries as the Most Rev. Patrick O'Boyle, Archbishop of Washington, and Dr. Carl F. Hansen, Superintendent of Schools.

Neither Huntley nor the dozens of individuals had a surefire solution for achieving a better racial balance in the area. But nevertheless it added up to a forthright appraisal of a grievous situation that cried out for a pictorial probe.

This public affairs special, incidentally, was the first of seven NBC News programs for which Xerox Corp. is picking up the tab. Plugs for the business machine company's product on the initialer were done with restraint and failed to mar the documentary's message. Gilb.

Looks like "My Favorite Martian" could be around for a long time. As early Sunday evening fare in the pre-Sullivan 7:30 to 8 period, this Jack Chertok production starring Ray Walston as the "first Irishman from Mars" got off to headlong start this week. It has a basic appeal for both young and adult alike.

It's a simple yet a crazy premise that has its origins in the early tv "Topper" series, with a dash of "Damn Yankees" (Walston's ex-musical legiter) thrown in. Whipped together for an initial script by John L. Greene under Sheldon Leonard's deft direction, the combination augurs well for the series.

For here is a Martian endowed with ectoplasmic virtues (it appears he's been making the trip to the planet Earth for hundreds of years). He can read minds, can disappear and reappear at will (through the simple expedient of putting his built-in adjustable rabbit ear antenna into play) and in fact has a maneuverability that can send the series into as funny an orbit as the writers themselves will allow.

Since it's already got Walston (and the casting of this singularly fine talent is a stroke of good fortune), the rest quite obviously is going to depend on the writing. When the writing is way out beyond the reaches of credibility, as evidenced in the closing portions of the preem stanza, it will attain the desired hilarity.

The opener fortunately didn't consume too much time in getting the Martian down. And once he expounded his philosophy ("Earth's all right for a visit but I wouldn't want to live here"), it was off and running.

Another asset going for it is Bill Bixby as his down-to-earth foil and companion. A couple of gals are around, including Pamela Britton for the love interest, but if "Martian" can steer clear of these banal aspects, the happier the occasion will be. Rose.

Edie Adams, alternating with Sid Caesar in this time slot for for the same sponsor, came up with cameo-like musical revue for her seasonal opener last Thursday night (26). This type of intime, low-voltage stanza would have been more suitable for a late, late night offering, but in primetime, it was somewhat thin and pallid, suffering from an excess of artiness.

Miss Adams' talent remains, however, incontrovertible. A standout songstress and a fine commedienne, she still needs the right kind of setting and support to carry a half-hour stanza. Some pop songs, a jazz piece and Zsa Zsa Gabor was hardly an impressive total on the preem.

Miss Adams opened with a boppified workover of the standard, "On The Road To Mandalay," a number too hip for the hinterlands and too corny for the hipsters. A followup number with a small combo of singers, dancers and instrumentalists was strictly lounge type entertainment. The Stan Getz-Eddie Sauter reprise of a section of their "Focus" recording was marred by some phony camera effects. The appearance of Miss Gabor on this show was symptomatic of something fundamentally awry. Miss Gabor, chiefly on afternoon or late night guest availabilities, was given nothing to do except be a prop for Miss Adams' "Baubles, Bangles and Beads" number.

One comedy sketch about Elizabeth Taylor's stand-in during the "Cleopatra" shooting was not only a mistimed gag about a situation that has been out of the headlines for weeks, but depended too much on bumps, grinds and leering lines. Herm.

Close your eyes and listen to the sound, and the new Phil Silvers Saturday night entry on CBS-TV is even more Bilko than Bilko. The only difference is that Silvers is now sporting a plant foreman's costume instead of an Army uniform. Otherwise, it's the same Silversisms, the same con artist, shill games and dedication to an dishonest buck, the same nuances and grimaces, even the same cronies but with new faces (except for longtime sidekick Herbie Faye). Anyone who was looking for something new, the smallest evidence of a new dimension in the laugh arena (but name one Silvers fan in his right mind who was!) certainly was doomed to disapointment.

Whether Silvers' new scripters, A. J. Russell and Lou Solomon, can over the long haul give it the zany distinction class and style that was Nat Hiken's trademark on the Bilko series (and comparisons are available since Bilko's still making the syndication rounds) is still in the wait-and-see dept. The initial segment, which found Silvers and his cronies facing extinction by computer installation, was not a particularly inventive either in its delineation or in its gag material. Nor was there any trace of those every-now-and-then little Hikenesque gems. But it was all Silvers and a mile wide.

Which, of course, pretty much wraps up Saturday night 8:30 to 9 for CBS on the national Nielsens. This is predciated on the inheritance of some solid Nielsen points by following Jackie Gleason. Rose.

Ed Sullivan opened his 16th season on tv Sunday (29) with a variety of components that indicated the show's continued strength and durability. Sullivan and staff (Bob Precht, producer; Tim Kiley, director, and Ray Bloch, music conductor) have developed an enviable touch in putting a variety format together and the hour ticks away at an enjoyable pace.

The show opened on a high musical note with the troupe from the current bill at the Royal Box of New York's Americana Hotel. Tommy Dorsey orch, under Sam Donohue's helm, started the ball rolling with a TD standard, "Marie," and then the vocalists came forward for an exceptionally good musical stint. In top form were the TD veterans, Helen Forrest and The Pied Pipers, and of special interest was newcomer Frank Sinatra Jr. Latter's "I'll Never Smile Again" with The Pied Pipers had lots of nostalgia and his "Night And Day" solo showed an okay style although still far from daddy's league.

There was a strained dialog segment between Sullivan and young Sinatra and an unnecessary attempt at comedy with Gloria Bleezarde playing a screeching fan. However, Sinatra managed to get out unharmed.

Last season's fave, the Italian mouse, was back for a bright segment and then Sullivan with a folksy bit via pictures of his recent vacation on Fritz Loewe's yacht.

The show's big gun, though, was Jimmy Durante. Whether he's working with six good-looking femmes in a special material bit about a ballet master or singing solo on "September Song," a disclick on the Warner Bros. label, he remains a master performer.

Show wound up with some neat terp sequences by an assortment of Harvest Moon Dancers.

Introduced from the audience were some members of the N. Y. Yankees, this year's American League pennant winners. Nothing has changed in baseball or on CBS-TV 8-to-9 Sunday slot. Gros.

On paper, "The Great Adventure" is one of the noblest television concepts of the new season, an anthology series that draws its dramatic situations from the nearly 200-year adventure of the United States. On film, however, the premiere opus turned out to be one part history and two parts Hollywood. But for the presumably accurate chronology of events, and for certain factual data that was spooned out in Van Heflin's narration, you couldn't tell it from the slick fiction that the telefilm factories grind out.

That could very well be in the new series' favor where capturing an audience is concerned. Education being the natural enemy of entertainment, "Great Adventure" would have had enough trouble against "77 Sunset Strip" and "International Showtime" even if it lived up to the high-sounding preseason press handouts. If sentimentality, hackneyed heroics and melodrama are what it takes to seduce the family trade at 7:30 p.m., then the candy-coating of history is perhaps forgiveable, even desirable.

The initial story centered on the first practical submarine invented and its trials by the Confederate army (the navy wouldn't touch it) after the battle of Gettysburg. Jackie Cooper played the young lieutenant who still believed in the wartime possibilities of the underwater machine after everyone else had given up on it, and who set out with seven volunteers to try to break the Union blockade in Charleston Harbor. After a number of misadventures and tense moments, the contraption at last has its chance to ram a primitive torpedo into a Yankee ship, and it succeeds, but suicidally.

The treatment smacked of the Hollywood war films—from the youth who tries to volunteer but is turned down because of his age until the final mission; to the officer who doesn't have Cooper's courage or insanity but keeps vigil on the shore; to the final scene of the heroic undersea soldiers answering their ghostly roll call in superimposition upon the plaque that commemorates their deed.

But on the positive side, there was quite a bit of educational fallout—if nothing else the intelligence that the sub was first used in the Civil War, and by the Confederacy. The elementary principles of submarine physics were also explained, and in a natural way which didn't hold up the development of plot. It comes out when Cooper instructs his men on the operation of the ship.

When the plusses and minuses are added up, the verdict is favorable, especially since the production is classy and clearly reflects CBS-TV's respect for the project. Cooper and a supporting cast headed by James MacArthur and Gene Evans all gave creditable performances, and Van Heflin's brief narration—in addition to dressing up the marquee—lent a note of documentary veracity to the story. Les.

Rolling into its seventh year, the "Danny Thomas Show" continues to purr along as a well-oiled situation comedy with plenty of mileage still left in the old frame. In fact, the patina of years creeping over the characters in this series is lending qualities of familiarity and believability which can only increase its durability.

For the seasonal kickoff, this show deliberately showed its age by using bits of film from stanzas tracing back to the early years of this series. The flashbacks were a neat nostalgic peg for Thomas' reminiscences about his tv children as they were six and seven years ago. Rusty Hamer and Angela Cartwright, now teenagers, impressed as highly skilled and charming kid thespers in these old bits.

Thomas looked seven years younger, but his comedy style has not changed. In the preem episode, he was the same loving, excitable father who cannot reconcile himself to the fact that his son is now old enough to drive. It was a good typical family situation which provided plenty of gag openings and a very funny denouement in which Thomas dismantles his car only to find out that it belonged to someone else. Herm.

DANNY KAYE SHOW
With Jackie Cooper, Lovelady Powell, Joe & Eddie; Paul Weston Orch

Director: Robert Scheerer

Danny Kaye made his long-heralded bow in the 60-minute weekly tv sweepstakes on CBS-TV last week and even if it was only partially A-O-Kaye, the video spectrum got a considerable show biz lift. Certainly as a change of pace from the alternating Wednesday 10 to 11 Armstrong-U.S. Steel dramas of past seasons, it's a cinch to invite more impressive Nielsen points and give CBS dominance for the hour.

Since there's going to be an abundance of the Kaye capers this season, it's probably asking too much for a solid hour of the genuine article, even for the premiere showcase.

Perhaps, even, there's wisdom in subscribing to a "spread yourself thin" policy as a teaser for coming attractions, since a comic of the Kaye caliber, with some 35 more shows to go, will be living with that frightening "what-do-you-do-for-an-encore" poser.

The very fact that a Kaye will be around the entire season is in itself a cause for rejoicing. CBS took the risk (which spells out a $12,000,000 program-time gamble) and merits the plaudits. And if there's a lot of extraneous tape and less than inspired moments, as there were on last week's preem and must inevitably be on weeks to come, that 25 minutes per week of good Kaye offers ample rewards.

That's just about how it averaged out for the initial stanza on which Jackie Copper guestarred, with a new-to-network-tv brunet thrush, Lovelady Powell, plus gospel-tempoed Joe & Eddie (Joe Gilbert and Eddie Brown) also featured. Oddly enough the show's big yock came as a surprise quickie even before the opening credits were flashed on the screen-one of those costly costumed blackouts parodying the "Cleopatra" triumphal entrance with Jack Benny in the Burton seat and Kaye coming up the rear as a lackey.

For all the fact that Kaye utilizing seven writers, including such comedic pros as Larry Gelbart, Mel Tolkin and Herbie Baker, their skit contributions gave the hour its most deadening moments. These included a Kaye-Cooper trip on an airplane (the old chestnut about a first ride) and Kaye, Cooper and accordionist Sam D'Andrea in a more-frantic-than-funny routine as as a group of bandstand musicians also doubling for its alternate trio—an excursion into slapstick more reminiscent of the old Milton Berle show.

A third came off more successfully—Kaye, Cooper, Miss Powell, the Johnny Mann Singers and the show's Tony Charmoli-choreographed dancers joining in a "Take Me out to the Ballgame" spoof in the styles of "My Fair Lady" ("My Fair Umpire"); "West Side Story" ("Horsehide Story") and "Music Man " ("Baseball Man").

But Kaye vocalizing on "Consider Yourself", his dueting with Miss Powell in a "Cherry Pie" variation on a "You're the Top" libretto, his teamup with the same Miss Powell on a delightful byplay (set to music) on the improbability of the name of Lovelady and on the aforementioned "My Fair Umpire" bit; the reminiscences on his recent trip to Russia for the windup had the style, the pace and the tempo that holds promise for succeeding weeks. Rose.

JUDY GARLAND SHOW

Sunday nights 9 to 10, probably the most prized time period on the tv networks when viewing is at its peak, now has a new tenant. CBS hopes it's a permanent one. And if Judy Garland as CBS' newest acquisition is of a mind to work every week with the same dedication and zeal that characterized her premiere this week, Bill Paley and his associates should be in clover.

For while the premier could hardly be called the perfect show (being long on nostalgia and short on bounce and zip), La Garland is in a position to whittle down or perhaps even surpass the Nielsen numbers that have been accruing to "Bonanza," her NBC competition.

CBS took a calculated risk with some top coin on this one, for it's no secret that it went way out on a limb in gambling with the whims and moods of the celebrated star, and, as though to all alleviate any misgivings the network or sponsors may have, Miss Garland, with a fine assist from guestar Donald O'Connor and regular Jerry Van Dyke, delivered a 60-minute production that had class and style. (Had the sponsors reciprocated in kind, for the blurbs seemed to come with amazing rapidity, particularly those extolling Betty Crocker, it would have been a far more pleasurable outing.)

It could be that CBS and exec producer Norman Jewison are purposely holding back and exercising a restraint on the show, since a week-after-week showcase spanning three seasonal cycles adds up to a lot of Garland exposure, but that overaccentuation of nostalgia, which invariably cued in Miss Garland and O'Conner for dueting or soloing, was the premiere show's principal weakness. (There's a permanent trunk installed for each week's finale, from which Miss Garland will extract a memento or two for a harkback to yesterday, a device which, for example, occasioned her rendition of "Chicago" as the Sunday night closer). But within its present context, and for all the fact that it could have had a little more rhythm and spark, it was a good show. Miss Garland, youthful and sprightly, was in fine fettle, playing it low-key all the way. In fact the whole show played that way; nothing frantic or blaring, but just a casual easy-going round of songs, dance and banter, nicely backgrounded scenically and musically.

The vocal highlights included Miss Garland's "Keep Your Sunny Side Up" opener and her "Fly Me to the Moon" along with "Chicago." A clown version of "The World Is Your Balloon" (from the Broadway musical "Flahooley") with Miss Garland, O'Connor and Van Dkye working as a threesome, was a pleasant variation of a long-time Garland standard turn. Her tea serving quips with O'Connor proved a delightful bit of the aforementioned low-key business and O'Connor's "Sing You Sinners" production number was typically suited to his trademarked talents.

The projecting of Van Dyke into stellar prominence as a regular on the series, while a well-deserved and well-earned break, awaits resolution in terms of suitable material. Already familiar to CBS viewers through his summertime hosting of the "Picture This" panel show, he's now working in a metier that could be more compatible with his engaging talents (as demonstrated in the zany lip syncing of "Lone Ranger"), but the Van Dyke-Garland banter routine had dubious merit.

Overall it was a tasteful production without ostentation, appropriately paced to the performances. A little more of the uptempoed motif and involvement with show biz today would make it an even better show. Rose.

GUNSMOKE
With James Arness, Tom Lowell, Mabel Albertson, Milburn Stone, Amanda Blake, Burt Reylonds, Betsy-Jones-Moreland, Harry Bartell, Robert Knapp, Ted Jordan, Duane Grey, others

Director: Harry Harris
Writer: Kathleen Hite

The well-mounted "Gunsmoke" hour on CBS-TV preemed for its ninth season Saturday (28) night with a tale bothered by an oversimplified presentation. It was a tale of grandma's boy going beserk with greed and lust of the marrying-kind.

In broad outlines, the viewer was presented with this situation: Tom Lowell portraying a teenager brought up by a kindly, yet strong grandma, rooted in the pioneer tradition of God and the prairie, was poor. He went to pay off a small debt of his family, saw a bundle of money of the creditor, a friend of the family, and in a moment of greed shot him.

Lowell then went to the Dodge City saloon to win the girl he'd been hankering for with his blood-soaked dough, only to be rejected. She wanted a man. Lowell, trailed by James Arness, (Marshal Dillon), ambushes Arness and nearly kills him. Arness, near death, was saved by the grandma of the boy Grandma, whose values are as strong as steel, killed her own grandson, upon learning of his deed, rejecting his bid to escape the law.

The Kathleen Hite script moved. There was sufficient tension and suspense, and moments of warmth and humor. The major flaw was that the teenage character of Lowell never rang true. When he was with his grandma—and that was for the most part of the episode—he was the goodie grandson. O, he tried to steal some extra money to see his saloon gal from the money jar, but such a deed is a far cry from the mess he sank into. The tale of the choir boy going beserk time and again crops up in the newspapers. The cases on the surface appear incongruous. It was the same incongruity which bugged the "Gunsmoke" preem. Writers with deeper insights have dug into such characters and have come up with much more incisive drama.

Mabel Albertson, as the pioneer grandma, projected that stoic conviction required of the role. Arness was his usual winning self. Others in the cast, the regulars and the one-shots, were able. Harry Harris directed with a sure hand.

PASSWORD
With Allen Ludden, host; Lucille Ball, Gary Morton, others
Exec Producer: Bob Stewart
Producer: Frank Wayne
Director: Lou Tedesco
30 Mins., Thurs., 7:30 p.m.
SPEIDEL: R. J. REYNOLDS
CBS-TV (from Hollywood)
(McCann-Marschalk; Esty)

The appeal of "Password" is not so much in the intrigue of the game itself but in how the guestars behave while they're playing it. That's a decided virtue in that it promises, for better or worse, a different personality revelation each outing for show biz fans. Moved to the 7:30 CBS slot on Thursdays this term, the nighttime edition of the show that doubles as a daytime strip still seems in no danger of overexposure.

Last week's seasonal premiere was not one of the more relaxed outings of the show, but it probably had a special level of interest for those who follow the private lives of the stars in that Lucille Ball and Gary Morton were appearing on tv together for the first time since they got married. They were good for fewer laughs than might have been expected, chiefly because the comedienne was tensed up by the game's intellectual challenge. She did, however, pop her eyes amusingly every time she struck upon the right word.

Miss Ball went through the paces as though in shock, but Morton did what he could to treat it all lightly, and on the whole they gave a sympathetic account of themselves as a not untypical married couple. As for the game, it served its purpose; likewise moderator, Allen Ludden. Lee.

NURSES
Wih Shirl Conway, Zina Bethune, Susan Oliver, Don Gordon, Milt Kamen, others
Producers: Herbert Brodkin
Director: Stuart Rosenberg
Writer: Arnold Perl
60 Mins., Thurs., 10 p.m.
WHITEHALL LABS, BROWN & WILLIAMSON
CBS-TV (film)
(Ted Bates)

The dramatics that attend the sociological problem of drug addiction are apparently so limited, and by now so familiar, that it might almost be a blessing if the old tabu were slapped back on the subject just to give it a rest for awhile. Herb Brodkin's "Nurses," which tries to address itself to adult situations, worked over a thrice-told tale last week in undistinguished fashion for its seasonal premiere. And the only thing shocking about it was the unabashed falsity of the script.

Writer Arnold Perl had to resort to a low form of trickery to give his story any semblance of freshness. For 30 minutes of the program the viewer is made to believe that Don Gordon, who portrays a non-writing writer, is an addict. He behaves like one, he steals like one and he seems to be occupied with nothing alse but the pursuit of makings for a fix. At the half point, however, the viewer is dealt the surprise that Gordon is only procuring the stuff to indulge the habit of his fresh-faced, wholesome-looking wife who just happens to be a nurse on Shirl Conway's staff. And that's her undoing, or salvation.

Once Perl has lef the viewer in on his deception, both characters undergo a sudden drastc change for the convenience of the script. Gordon no longer staggers around like a junkie but starts behaving like a civillan who still has good sense, while his wife (Susan Oliver) makes the sordid tranformation. Apart from a number of other improbabilities, it's inconceivable that she could have been so seriously hooked and not been discovered at the hospital where, presumably, they're astute about such things. Furthermore, it is hard to accept Gordon's desperate behavior in the first half when he was not an addict himself.

Under the implausible circumstances, Gordon and Miss Oliver give satisfactory performances, but there's nothing either can do to make their characters come off, and both are victims of a phony and embarrassingly stagey ending. Milt Kamen appears in a single scene as a pusher and etches a nice cameo as an evil weirdo. The script overtly tries to make a case for the recognition of drug addiction as a medical rather than a criminal matter, but the message carries so little weight in a story that is lacking in credence.

THE LUCY SHOW

30 Mins. Mon, 8:30 p.m.

Lucille Ball brought her boisterous comedic antics back for another season with a slapstick half-hour pegged on the overworked "Cleopatra" theme. However, the star puts enough energy into her slapstickery so that even a tired theme gets some pep in her hands.

The flimsy plot whipped up by the show's scripting quartet centered on the amateur theatrical activities of Miss Ball and her femme cronies headed by Miss Vance. With Hans Conried assisting as a Shakespearian ham, the femme goes into an "Anthony & Cleopatra" production, with overlong death scenes, jumped cues, overturned props and a voluntary fire department crew getting in the way.

It added up to the obvious mayhem that "The Lucy Show" fans have learned to expect. Gros.

RED SKELTON SHOW
With Shirley Temple, Beach Boys, Skeltones, others

CBS-TV, from Hollywood

Red Skelton is one of the wonders of the television world. He's endured 13 consecutive seasons in a fickle and unsentimental medium, against all manner of competition, without ever having to alter his style and without losing his standing on the Nielsen honer roll. Last week he kicked off his 14th term with exactly the same format as last year when he ran sixth in the Nielsens, and he left no reason to doubt that he'll be one of the top-rungers again.

The secret is, of course, his unique talent which seems to cut across all viewer lines and satisfy as comedy on several levels at once. Skelton is part cornball, part tragedian, part pratfall specialist and part mime. At one and the same time he practices low comedy and what the discriminating consider to be art. In his seasonal premiere last Tuesday (24) he ran the full range.

Most of the show was given over to a Freddie the Freeloader skit, which was weak in concept and not helped particularly by Shirley Temple's guestar contr ion. It involved quite a bit routine slapstick business and some outrageously old gag lines and puns, but it had a choice moment of choke-up comedy when Skelton shows up as groom only to find he's been invited to the wedding as a guest.

If the show had to depend on this skit for its total comedy impact, there might have been a great loss of viewership next week. It proved only a time-filler and warmup to another of those beautiful panto creations Skelton comes up with, with amazing frequency, in the segment he calls "The Silent Spot." This one involved a timid dolt who goes to work in a construction gang on a high rise building. Skelton's antics with altitude sickness, near loss of balance and idiot ineptitude were all on the hilarious side, and his climactic display as a one-man Willy, West & McGinty was masterfully timed sight comedy.

Miss Temple issued an intermissionary song, which was pleasant enough although noticeably out of sync; and the Beach Boys were satisfying in a couple of production numbers, one of them based on the disclick, "Surfin' USA." But the show, as always, is Skelton's alone, no matter who is guesting. Les.

CHANNEL 10 REPORTS: LET ME TELL YOU
Producer: Tom Dorsey
Writer: Stan Vingle
30 Mins.; Wed. 8:30 p.m.
WBNS-TV, Columbus

Salty personality of Johnny Jones, Columbus Dispatch columnist for the past 23 years, came through in this telementary. Early photos of Jones were combined with movie clips of Jones at his desk, at the Ohio State Fair, his home and at various spots around town.

The Jones career began in show business. He was manager of various theatres here, including the neighborhood Thurmania and downtown Majestic and Southern. He also served as publicity writer and promoter for various civic projects.

Taped comments by Jones were combined with narration written by Stan Vingle. Sample Jones observation (anent Veterans Memorial): "It's an abortion." Summer stock and concerts are staged at the 4,000-seat hall.

Jones' sincere, real feeling for people was praised. The point was made that he didn't start as a professional writer but that he just write as he felt. He commented, wryly, that he might have gone on to the national scene as did Earl Wilson, James Thurber and Milton Caniff, all of whom were Dispatch staffers, if he had been fired.

"Columbus has been good to me," he said. Jones is a native of Jackson County in Southern Ohio. He came here with his widowed mother when he was 10. Fopo.

Jackie Gleason's second season since his temporary retirement from television is virtually along the same lines as last year. He has added and diminished from his cast, but the net results are the same, and it'll make for more entertaining viewing during the season.

Gleason is getting the reputation of a dealer in comebacks. Having rescued Frank Fontaine from obscurity, Gleason is apparently attempting to do the same for Barbara Heller and Sid Fields, both of whom seem like sound performance fodder. It's a process that'll give Gleason stature. Anybody, or virtually anybody can make it with names. But by giving performers who haven't gotten there that needed push, he can attain a different kind of stature as a starbuilder.

Sid Fields is an interesting case. He has been a scripter for many headliners in radio, has written acts for many including Abbott & Costello and has appeared in theatres with a multitude of comedians as a straightman who took over the province of comedy. He did this latter function on the Gleason show's preem with a sketch highly reminiscent of the "No Mustard" bit performed for many years by Abbott & Costello. In fact, it seemed a rewrite of that episode. But it was an entertaining bit and later one may expect the English lesson bit and others that he has been associated with.

Miss Heller, another newcomer to the show, is an expert comedienne, who did two numbers nicely. She's an oddball type with an offbeat type of humor, and works out excellently. The other regulars, Alice Ghostley and Horace McMahon will get their innings later when the "Agnes & Arthur" sketch is delineated. Boy soprano Wayne Newton sounds little different than most teen singers.

The other features are there and add up to good Gleason entertainment. The saloon scene with Fontine, the magazine bit of short episodes, emceed this year by Miss Heller, comprise okay comedy, and of course the June Taylor Dancers and Sammy Spear are the other unchanging components that contriubte to the layout's character.

THE CITY
With Nat Hentoff, others
Producers: Barbara Davidson, Jack Landau
Director: Bob Myhrum
Writer: Hentoff
30 Mins., Mon., 8 p.m.
WNDT-TV, New York

Premiere of this new half-hour telementary on New York's noncommercial channel WNDT gave little indication of its potential, since the producers reportedly plan to "stalk the excitement, pace and controversy of the world's largest metropolis," putting to use the station's mobile unit. Opener was a 100% studio job in the familiar, stylized format of low-cost educational efforts.

With writer Nat Hentoff on the commentary, show traced New York's development through the eyes of various authors and poets. Among a flock of still photos, Hentoff and actors appeared to read the first impressions of the metropolis as set down by Thomas Wolf, F. Scott Fitzgerald, Edna Ferber, Edna St. Vincent Millay, Henry Miller and others, including several foreign visitors through the years.

Future shows will focus on the city from Times Square to the "delly," and should create some human interest. Initialer could be said to have been a good one via its "first" theme. Bill.

ANDY WILLIAMS SHOW

Andy Williams began the first of his 12 scheduled specials for the season last Tuesday (24) with the same casual flair that marked his weekly series last year. It's a pleasing format but lacks pullout potential.

However, Williams has, in the past year, come up with a string of solid-selling disks on the Columbia label and this could be an important asset in drawing viewers to his programming timetable and if he gives out with his disk familiars as he did with "Days Of Wine And Roses" on his preem they won't be disappointed.

The show was the standard mixture of song, comedy and intimate patter. The guesters were used to advantage and Williams, as host, made everyone feel at home. Janet Leigh came off as a cute little trick in her song and dance number; Art Carney was able to put some fun into a so-so sketch about a lunch-wagon slinger trying to push a song; the moppet Osmond Bros., holdovers from last season, were again appealing with their barber shop quarteting, and the Good Time Singers filled the folk-singing need with a handclapper called "Bury Me."

The show is put together neatly but it rests solely on Williams' style and manner. He has the warmth but lacks somehow to make his hour required viewing.

Leave it to the nimble, often witty "Dick Van Dyke Show" to pull a surprise—and leave the viewer talking—just when things were too much in the situation comedy stock groove.

Van Dyke, in a series of madcap errors, became convinced that the baby he and his wife took out of the hospital wasn't theirs. He felt he had some evidence, not the least of which was that the woman occupying the hospital room next to his wife's room had a similar name, and things belonging to his wife and his wife's neighbor were constantly being misdirected at the hospital.

Flashback technique employed slowed pace somewhat. Regulars Mary Tyler Moore, Van Dyke's wife, Morey Amsterdam, Rose Marie, Richard Deacon, Jerry Paris and Ann Morgan Guilbert, though, managed to get some fun engendered. Van Dyke, the harried father, played the situation to the hilt.

If scripters Bill Persky and Sam Denoff left it in that old groove, it would have been okay for the preem, Van Dyke and his series family turning over some old chestnuts for a few laughs. They elected, though, to pull a surprise at the end, which took the episode out of its stock mold.

Van Dyke, near hysterical at the end, invited the couple of the other baby over to his house, so desperate did he become in getting his own baby and ridding himself of the foreign child now being reared in his own house. The other couple, as Van Dyke and the viewers learned as the door was opened, happened to be Negro. The handsome Negro couple joined the Van Dykes in laughing at the situation and Van Dyke, in recounting the tale, had a last line clincher, that his son now in the same school as the son of the other couple, is doing poorly while the other boy is getting straight A's. Horo.

The network TV season for '63-'64 is officially open . . . and Ayer is ready with its annual predictions. Matter of fact, ready for a long time, for most of our own purchases in the new or repositioned shows were made last spring.

Here, for example, is our rating forecast for network evening programming by nights, as we think it will be when the December Nielsens are in.

Our audience estimate for each nighttime network show is done this year on a national basis, and projected to numbers of viewers—by age groups and by sex.

In past years, these Ayer forecasts have been remarkably accurate. The current forecasts are discussed at some length in an editorial feature in Television magazine for October.

"The Defenders," entering its third season, still shapes up as the most thoughtful dramatic show on network television. Week after week, this series maintains an unusually high standard for scripting literacy and production values. Even more importantly, the series has demonstrated that a tv show can be loyal to its subject matter, in this case the law, and still be dramatically cogent.

Although the general level is high, "The Defenders," like other series, also fluctuates from week to week in the calibre of its shows. For the seasonal opener last Saturday (28) Reginald Rose, the creator, contributed "The Weeping Baboon," an interesting, if not standout yarn about a psychotic killer. Because of the nature of the defendant, this stanza tended to bear a strong resemblance to other headshrinking stanzas on television.

Rose's script, moreover, was overly geared as a thespic vehicle. Jason Hopper, as the young killer of his father and brother, was given free rein in a role that called for him to feign insanity on top of his schizo-paranoid tendencies. This called for some pretty wild courtroom behavior, like trying to choke the judge and banging his head on the table, antics which tended to overshadow the dramatic point. Jan Miner, as the killer's mother, also was given one sequence in which to emote at length and in depth. She carried it off in striking manner.

E.G. Marshall and Robert Reed, back again as the regulars, continue to make an appealing and convincing father-son legal team. Both transmit that sense of solidity and veracity which has become the hallmark of this series. Herm.

CRIME AND THE STUDENT: OPERATION TEENAGER
With four convicts; Al Bell, moderator
Producer-Director: Smith J. Brown
60 Mins., Sun. (22), 4 p.m.
WPIX, N.Y. (tape)

For the last 14 months the Texas Dept. of Correction has been combatting juvenile delinquency by sending four young convicts to lecture teenagers in churches and schools on the folly of becoming lawbreakers. One such session before some 2,500 students of Houston's Memorial High School was taped by Corinthian Broadcasting Corp.'s KHOU-TV in Houston.

Distributed by Corinthian's syndication wing, the hourlong program was acquired by WPIX, N.Y., for beaming Sunday (22) as a public affairs special. As moderator Al Bell noted, the lectures are a fresh approach in the battle against teenage crime. It's a pioneer move, he added, and the only state prison effort of its kind.

As each inmate spells out the character deficiencies that put him in prison, the viewer becomes aware of a new kind of drama. The convicts' individual case histories were classic examples of how "crime does not pay." Faced with such a realistic argument against delinquency, there's no reason why borderline teeners won't do a quick snap back to society's discipline. If "Operation Teenager" brings this about, then this syndicated show deserves a top public service rating.

Inmate lecturers, incidentally, were identified only by number and not by name. In addition, their faces were partially shaded when in the camera's focus. Following the prisoners' talks, each of which ran about 10 minutes, a number of students quizzed them on such varied subjects as "do you get any time off for appearing in 'Operation Teenager'"; what is religion's role in prison and "what restrictions would you yourself make on a teenager?"

Occasionally the camera probed the sea of student faces in the high school auditorium. Most pupils were intent upon the speaker, but here and there a teener toyed with a paper airplane, chewed gum or appeared indifferent. Maybe these were the kids who could have profited most by what was being said. Gilb.

(Campbell; Leo Burnett; Benton & Bowles)

CBS-TV's "Route 66" made its fourth season premiere loaded with talent — Nancy Wickwire, Jack Warden, Sessue Hayakawa guesting with series regulars Martin Milner and Glenn Corbett. They provided some flashy performing in a drama set in the Florida everglades that was as murky as a swamp mist.

In the narrative, which floundered between psycho-drama and jungle adventure, the Bobsey Twins of the highway were called upon to parachute into the everglades in search of a national wartime fighter pilot hero (Jack Warden) who had crashed his private plane in the swamp. Sessue Hayakawa had also leaped into the rescue mission. The Japanese actor was the gimmick guy of the plot, and it was not disclosed until Warden was coughing his last during the rescue operation that the two had clashed in an battle, and the meeting in the swamp was the moment of truth for both. Miss Wickwire was Warden's estranged wife appearing in early scenes, which she played with great skill. The death-wishful war hero role was old stuff to Warden, and he gave the show whatever magnetism it had. Hayakawa gave a viewer a little trouble with his English, but the muffled projection may have had the overall effect of sustaining interest.

Various U. S. locations is still a good idea—and one that no doubt calls for an extra production effort. This one, however, offered little in the way of real interest via authenticity not available in the back lots. There was some derring-do also in the rescue sequences as the flashback to Warden's and Hayakawa's conflict was played out overhead without dissolve. Not entirely successful (mainly because of the narrative rather than the production technique), but viewer thanks are due for an imaginative try. Bill.

A western yarn, as straight as a bullet, opened the fifth season of "Rawhide" on CBS-TV Thursday (26) night. In the wake of all those synthetic oaters which have come and gone on tv, "Incident of the Red Wind," title of the preem, was refreshing. It stuck to its sagebrush guns.

Not that gunplay had any major role in the Dean Risner script. In fact, hardly a bullet was fired. The other ingredients, though, were there, a good story, well plotted, simple in form, characters solidly constructed, and a tale spun with professional polish. It had the ingredients which have made oaters popular the world over, and, if producer Vincent Fennelly continues in the same vein, the outlook may be good for an expanded 90-minute "Rawhide" next season. It's understood Fennelly and CBS-TV have been talking about that possibility.

Moved from its Friday night berth, big competition for "Rawhide" this season out in its Thursday night berth is "Dr. Kildare," which starts smack in "Rawhide's" middle at 8:30 p.m. If the oater can get audiences hooked for that after half-hour, the switch to the young doctor will be minimized. On the light side, there's "My Three Sons" and "Jimmy Dean" holding forth on ABC-TV.

Preem episode "Incident of the Red Wind" had that authentic dusty, outdoor quality about it missing from other sagebrushes. Director Thomas Carr didn't allow the setting to be spruced and polished, nor the dust brushed off from the characters. It helped.

Clint Eastwood, second in command to cattle boss Eric Fleming, did a fine bit of underacting. Fleming, as per usual, was his competent self. Neville Brand, guestar, portrayed the heavy with the right menacing nuances. Horo.

Garry Moore show, heading into its sixth season out of Bob Banner's Redwing Productions stable, still shapes up as a sock hour of entertainment. From opener to curtain, this is a slickly professional job. Everything falls into place on this hour with flawless timing and, seemingly, with the greatest of ease.

The show's basic ingredients are all recognizable but they were dished up with a fresh recipe on the preem last Tuesday night. After a snappy opener in which the conventional glad-to-be-back greetings were disposed of cleverly, Alan King, a frequent guest on this series, delivered a yock-filled monolog pegged to the contents of his wife's pocketbook. King succeeded in topping each of his laughs in a model comedy routine.

For change of pace, Metopera soprano Eileen Farrell delivered a superb rendition of a difficult aria from "Porgy and Bess." This was a prelude to a sharp poke at the new half-hour newscasts in which Garry Moore and Durwood Kirby took off on Huntley & Brinkley (from the other network, yet). It was brilliant parody on journalistic inflation of the news, this one being a detailed and portentous coverage of the fact that JFK's shoelace became untied.

Dorothy Loudon and Kirby was featured in a solid, even if somewhat broad, sketch about a couple who live in the middle of a jet airport. The concluding "That Wonderful Year" segment, a salute to New York, was highlighted by the Moore-Kirby-King workover of the "Tinhorn Fugue" from "Guys and Dolls" and a swinging medley by Misses Farrell and Loudon.

A Benny show is a Benny show is a Benny show, and when this impeccable comedian returns to NBC-TV next year, his sound, gags and poise will be much like they were when he left back in the '40s. So it was with his 14th-season preem on CBS-TV with the exception of evangelist Billy Graham as top guest.

The network's Nielsen cadgers have dreamed up some unusual star guests for the premiere shows, but the combo of Benny and Graham could be the farthest out. Benny explained as how the idea of asking Graham to do a guest shot gave him the severe jitters—same jitters he had suffered when asking President Harry Truman if he would do a guest turn (what can a man expect when dealing with the great minds of the century). Anyhow, Graham like Truman, accepted the bid, and it must be said the evangelist was quite effective in the give-and-take with the comedian. The hokum that followed, however, with Graham suggesting that Benny take a new and kinder approach in his dealings with the cast, was overdrawn.

There were other, more purely Benny bits, involving Benny with an upstart show usher, played traditionally and sharply by actor Frank Nelson, and a hootenanny takeoff with Benny and show vets Dennis Day and Don Wilson as a folk trio.

It seems somehow less than occult to predict this slick comedy hour will weather the CBS season and slide to NBC next fall with little more than one of those famed pained expressions from the boss. Bill.

WALT DISNEY'S WONDERFUL WORLD OF COLOR
(The Horse Without A Head)

(J. Walter Thompson)

Walt Disney launched his third season of colorcasting on the NBC-TV web with a solid moppet-angled entry. Produced abroad with an international cast, "The Horse Without A Head," a two-part film, registered as a charming crime adventure story which will maintain this show's strength in its time period.

The film features Jean-Pierre Aumont, as a smalltown police office, and a group of youngsters in a yarn pegged to the recent British train robbery. In this case, it's a French mob, headed by Herbert Lom, which pilots a 100,000,000 franc holdup from the Paris express. The plan involves dumping the money off the train at a small town near Paris. The mobsters, however, did not reckon on a swarm of local kids who accidentally intervene in the pickup of the money.

Title of the film derives from a headless toy horse which is the favorite plaything of the town's youngsters. The toy horse becomes the center of the drama when when one of the mobsters drops a key to the location of the loot into its open neck. This episode wound up part one.

The film has a good-natured, tongue-in-cheek air even in the depiction of the heavies. The youngsters led by Pamela Franklin and Vincent Winters, registered with great charm. In particular, Miss Franklin's command over a pack of dogs was a highly successful device in reaching young viewers who still have control over the dial at this hour. Herm.

The Nielsen champs are off on another bucolic binge and resting snugly on their laurels without a single change other than cousin Pearl's (Bea Benaderet) defection for her own show. The ratings having indicated that the lookers liked what they were getting, creator-producer-writer Paul Henning saw no reason for tampering with the format and Wednesday night's opener carried on from where it left off last May. For those who like this sort of think, and that runs deep into the million, it was a feast after a long starve. It's doubtful that the opposing "Ben Casey" will woo away many of the faithful but a rat(e) race it'll be. Henning had the help of Mark Tuttle on the script and they went on a wild spree pocked with more than the usual run of risible explosives.

Whether by design or happenstance, it was a night for Irene Ryan to shine her brightest and she did it up brown with her domineering run of the household. Unhappy when she's not doctoring, Buddy Ebsen played sick and was put to bed. So were Mr. Drysdale (Raymond Bailey) and guestar, Fred Clark, a medic, all victims of "city germs" by granny's diagnosis. Unable to get her old remedies, such as stump water, dried beetles and lizard eggs she resorted to an ancient ritual, that of clipping their hair nails and burying them in the ground. The victims came away near bald, which was a long reach for Hennings to wrap up the wack and woof of another diverting episode.

The other regulars, Donna Douglas, Max Baer, and Nancy Kulp, performed their usual antics but all secondary to Miss Ryan. Richard Whorf sparked the direction and Perry Botkin's music is one of the show's delights, by now hummed and whistled behind every farm tractor. Helm.

This very square bone-cracking meller is a Sudsville matinee poshed up with production values for after dark display, and its continued rating power would indicate that Nielsen's mumsies have caught their second wind by Thursday night at 8:30 p.m. It is strictly for woman and children, with the one redeeming feature being an occasional guest star, working on an occasional slice of good script, who comes through with a professional bit of curtain climbing.

That was exactly the story with the third-season preem of "Dr. Kildare." For 45 minutes, the story crawled like three episodes from "Ma Perkins," with the added disadvantage of being downright embarassing most of the way. Then guest Janice Rule began chewing up the scenery with a performance that was brilliant within its ripe, ripe context. As the emotionally fragile mate of a leukemia victim who suddenly comes through with great wifely heart, courage and sacrifice, she must have had the parlors of the nation awash with tears. Other guest, Charles Bronson, as the husband headed for his final reward, made a resilient trampoline for Miss Rule's leaps and turns.

Series regulars were happily subordinate. Raymond Massey played crusty hospital chief Dr. Gillespie like he had a severe case of dyspepsia. Young Dr. Kildare, Richard Chamberlain, moved and emoted as though he were shot full of novacaine. Running gag in the opener concerned Kildare's getting out of his intern frock into the mufti of a resident physician. It will be a welcome switch.

Steven Bell was introduced as new intern Dr. Quint Lowry. As a feature player, he will be right in the class of the stet roster.

What might be described in relative terms as "deep inroads" were made re primetime entertainment's human relations. In a scene of the indoctrination at Blair General of new interns, a Jewish handle—Shapiro—was tossed debonairly into the roll call of Anglo-Saxon fee-splitters of the future. And as the young medicos hustled out of the session, there was a subliminal flash of a dark-skinned brother amongst the eager herd. Bill.

For its third season premiere, "Hazel" settled for the old one about the prospective client who gets the dates mixed up and shows up a week early for the dinner party being given in his honor. In this case, the client, an old fusspot executive, finds only "Hazel" at home and, since it is virtually impossible for a tycoon to get the better of a maid in good old American family entertainment, any conditioned viewer knows instantly that old Haze is going to charm the pants off that dyspeptic critter and win him over as a client for her boss. The surprising thing about all of this—and it's enough to make a viewer begin to suspect that he's either getting soft or senile—is that in spite of everything it comes out funny and entertaining.

No doubt one of the principal reasons why a gag situation as creaky as this one is still salvageable as the title character. Miss Booth playing Hazel is roughly tantamount to John Barrymore playing Henry Aldrich, but probably no one could play it better. The other members of the Baxter clan presided over by the maid are Don DeFore, Whitney Blake and Bobby Buntruck, and they all handle their roles amiably. Philip Ober scored on this outing as the outclassed VIP, as did Virginia Gregg as his snooty wife. Russell Collins registered as DeFore's anxious employer. Tube.

"Candid Camera" got off to a breezy, funny start for its fourth season on CBS-TV Sunday (29) night. As long as Bob Banner Associates and Allen Funt Productions retain their inventiveness, as was evidenced on the preem, they would seem to have nothing to worry about when the Nielsens are tabulated.

The bits of business included a man-in-the-street interview on who is Lyndon Johnson, Metop star Robert Merrill singing incognito in a barbershop, a montage of film on people at a Kansas country fair, four-year-olds responding to musical rhythms and, for a promo gag, Ed Sullivan responding to "Smile, your're on camera."

Allen Funt, on camera, explained that most of the people interviewed knew the name of the Vice President of the U.S. In quick cuts, the hidden camera showed some of the people who, no matter how they tried, couldn't link the name with the office. One man excused himself by saying "I'm a New Jerseyite." Another man, informed that he was an important person, couldn't think who he was, but generously said "God bless him."

Merrill, doing the barber bit, sang for his customers to varying reactions. One man's face beamed and he told Merrill he could earn more singing; another annoyed at Merrill's vocal display got up from his chair; another, hearing an aria sung in Italian, asked Merrill if he knew any Irish tunes.

Four-year-olds responding to rhythms offered some moments of fun. Footage, underscored by proper music, of people at a country fair, proved amusing.

Kirby was okay as host and actress Suzanne Storrs joined Kirby and Funt in the presentation. Miss Storrs seemed there solely for decorative reasons. Horo.

ITC doing other shows with top drawer talent.

Nidorf forecasts that out of necessity group operators will follow the Westinghouse Group W lead, producing shows for their own stations and for a selloff in syndication in other markets in the U. S., as well as abroad. The programming muscles of Corinthian, Triangle, Storer can only grow with time, he feels.

Nidorf acknowledges that because ITC is a wholly-owned subsid of Associated Television of England, it places ITC in a unique position. Series of nine "Jo. Stafford Specials," prior to their entrance to the U. S. market, had been sold in every foreign country, he said, racking up a gross of $100,000 per hour outing. When it was brought into the U. S., the specials already had been paid off. Then, there was that one-shot on CBS-TV and the eight other specials put into syndication, with Foremost Dairies and Ohio Bell buying regional spreads. Nidorf estimates that another $100,000 per special will be earned in the U. S.

He cites these figures to indicate that this is the type of money to attract other productions for first-runners and other talent. Not every one, he points out can win a network berth and agents of talent who shut their eyes to the syndication possibilities are playing it blind.

"The Saint," sold in 47 markets, the only first-run hourlong series, isn't any ball of fire, he acknowledges. Nidorf, though, says ITC will have other first-run hourlong series and that he's betting heavily on the cycle of an upturn in the demand for quality first-run product.

In their particular areas, he also reflects, the thinking in a measure of UA-TV, Official Films, Westinghouse and others, in the midst of a tight syndication market.

AN EVENING WITH NAT KING COLE
With Ted Heath and orch, the Cliff Adams Singers, Reunald Jones, John Collins, Charles Harris, Leon Petties
Producer: Yvonne Littlewood
45 Mins., Sat., 8:50 p.m.
BBC-TV, from London

Taped during Nat King Cole's summer visit to Britain, this amiably relaxed show admirably presented him as singer, pianist, and host. Declared aim was to be "homey," and Yvonne Littlewood's production achieved it, although Stanley Dorfman's geometric set was rather too stark for this context.

Cole's mastery of ballad-delivery was well to the fore, and his song-along took in a shrewd mixture of old and new disk hits. After a false start with the unsuitable "Aren't You Glad You're You?," Cole got into his effortless stride with a fine "Unforgettable," and, from then on, didn't put a semi-quaver wrong. Highlights were a haunting "When I Fall In Love," which would turn any distaffer to jelly, and "That Rainy Day."

Variety was introduced by a piano interlude, with Cole joined by a trumpet-and-rhythm group in a reminiscence of his early days as a jazz tyro. The piercing horn of Reunald Jones shone in this segment, and numbers like "Paper Moon" and "Sweet Lorraine" conduced to that old nostalgic feeling.

Final part of the show had Cole strawhatted and accompanied by the gleeful Cliff Adams Singers, squatting all around, in languorous ditties like his hit "Lazy-Hazy-Crazy Blaze of Summer" and 'Ramblin' Rose."

With Cole chatting cozily throughout, the show was thus pleasingly complied. Main jarring note came from Ted Heath, who presented Cole with a special U.N.O. disk to celebrate his charity waxing for the World Refugee Fund. This was all very well, but the surprise expressed by Cole was so obviously predetermined that it looked like a gimmick—and was.

The arrangements allotted to Ted Heath's string-augmented outfit stemmed from Joe Zito, and were suavely polished throughout. Otta.

FIRST NIGHT
(The Strain)
With Ray Barrett, Peter Vaughan, Glyn Owen, T. P. McKenna, Michael Coles, Jack MacGowran, Carmen Munroe, Neil McCarthy, John Junkin, Harvey Ashby, James Donnelly, Roy Stewart, John Kelly, Guido Adorni
Producer: John Elliott
Director: William T. Kotcheff
Writer: Alun Owen
55 Mins., Sun., 9 p.m.
BBC-TV, from London

Replacing the nondescript, barrel-scraping "Sunday Night Play" skein, and not before time, "First Night" promises tv preems by notable scribes, including Arnold Wesker, Nigel Kneale, David Turner and Bernard Kops. It's the first tangible result of BBC-TV's acquisition of drama boss Sydney Newman from the commercial web, and, if this initialler is anything to go by, the skein may easily achieve the authority and the ratings that Newman won for ABC TV's "Armchair Theatre." The series has an able producer, John Elliot, and the opener, "The Strain," was a sizzler. Main drawback to full poopularity may be the foolish timing that makes it start before the end of the commercial web's Palladium top-spot.

Writer Alun Owen returned to the Liverpool locales and accents that give a vigorous tang to his themes. Frank Angelo (Ray Barrett), boss of a protection gang, came out of jail to find that his territory had been taken over by a former henchman, Jack Christie (T. P. McKenna). It was Christie who had tipped off the cops, in the person of Mr. Michael (Peter Vaughan), and got Angelo put away. He had every reason for revenge, and Owen's script built up sharp and powerful tension as the rivals met. Angelo trying to exert his old command.

Watchful Michael, eager for another conviction, waited for Angelo to put a foot wrong. And the priest (Glyn Owen), a boyhood buddy, tried to persuade him to skip town. Climax was Angelo's capture by the Christie gang, whilst the cop let it happen and the priest desperately sided with the underdog.

The ingredients, although old-hat, were mixed splendidly, and helped by William T. Kotcheff's brilliantly wiry direction, which played every scene for kicks. Performances, too, were first-rate, with Ray Barrett, Peter Vaughan, and T. P. McKenna scoring as the chief trio, and Glyn Owen only hampered by the more conventional line of the priest. Acrid support came from such well-chosen thesps as Michael Coles, Neil McCarthy, and Jack MacGowran. Otta.

PANORAMA
With Richard Dimbleby, Robin Day, Michael Barratt, Michael Charlton, John Morgan Editor: David Wheeler
45 Mins., Mon., 8:25 p.m.
BBC-TV, from London

BBC-TV's top pubaffairs skein returned from its summer siesta with a little sleep in its eyes. There were a few changes in presentation under editor David Wheeler, such as an open-plan studio set, which was not used to full advantage as yet, and a jaunty new signature tune that seemed derived somewhat from "I Got Rhythm" and hardly weighty enough for the show.

The reporting team has acquired a couple of new recruits. The first, Michael Barratt from Australia, opened the segment with a telling account of Birmingham, Alabama, tensions. He conducted skilful interviews, especially with a group of white extremists who wanted to pack the Negroes back to Africa and were generally alarming in their youthful intransigence. Governor Wallace was also neatly needled, his trick being to throw the questions back at Barratt, by claiming that segregation had been British colonial policy, too. He took pride in his Anglo-Saxon stock, which made him, he claimed, stubborn, and talked about the race crisis entirely in terms of State rights, which seemed pretty evasive in these parts.

A nebulous discussion with three cagey Trop M.P.s about election dates and MacMillan's leadership proved little except that a politician doesn't like to commit himself until he's sure of the winning side. Robin Day pressed for straight yesses and noes, and extracted one.

Similarly disappointing was John Morgan's account of Czechoslovakia, in the throes of de-Stalinization. He discoursed amiably with a group of intellectuals, but the result did little to illuminate the topical issue and the camera team was content to record rather than illuminate.

Finally, Dimbleby closed the show by swallowing a transistor, which proceeded to emit a squeak of various pitches to show the temperature inside his stomach. This was amusing, but did not compensate for a certain diffuseness and lack of bite in the program as a whole. Otta.

THE BILLY COTTON BAND SHOW
With Russ Conway, Adam Faith and the Roulettes, Alan Breeze, Kathie Kay, the High-Lights, the Leslie Roberts Silhouettes, Ellis Jackson
Producer: Michael Hurll
Writer: Jimmy Grafton
45 Mins. Sun., 7:25 p.m.
BBC-TV, from London

Billy Cotton, whose showbiz history goes back 40 years has the only band that has outlived fashion. It was a contemporary of the outfits led by Harry Roy, Bert Ambrose, Lew Stone, and Roy Fox—to mention a few—and it has survived because Cotton himself is an old-style comic in the "Mother Brown" tradition and his players have always been picked because they can fool as well as blow.

This is the basis of this distinctly corny show that has returned to the schedules with its husks showing. A certain air of fabricated jollity was obtained, more by energy than talent, and Jimmy Grafton's script was funereal. Little was changed in the familiar format, which looks in need of a revolution. Resident singer Alan Breeze, for instance, came up with "When is a Sausage a Sausage"—nuff said. The whole band joined in a palsied musical version of Dick Turpin's ride to York. These attempts at reviving the music-hall audience all lacked the necessary vigor.

Guesting was Adam Faith—to bring in the short-pants. He delivered a couple of typical numbers as if his jaws were having trouble—but was otherwise suitable for his fans, if unlikely to increase them.

The Leslie Roberts Silhouettes capered diligently, and the gimmick of blacking them out, so that phosphorescent patches remained, playing instruments, was still effective. But the most potent contribution came from elderly colored tapper, Ellis Jackson, whose feet were as agile as oldsters would remember them when Cotton was doing the cinema circulits in the '30s the act was the same, too.

Michael Hurll's production was efficient. Question remains—how powerful is a memory? For there ain't much else. Otta.

BEST OF FRED
With Spike Milligan, Peter Sellers, Vallendine Dyall, Kenneth Connor, Graham Stark, the Alberts, Johnny Vyvyan
Director: Robert Fleming
Writers: Spike Milligan, John Antrobus, Maurice Wiltshire, Dave Freeman
30 Mins., Wed., 9:15 p.m.
Associated-Rediffusion, from London

When the commercial web got its license to print shares and programs way back in 1955, it indulged in a series of surreal comedy shows, derived from the "Goon Show" radio skein. These, with such titles as "A Show Called Fred," "The Idiot Weekly Price Twopence," and "Son of Fred," made no impact in the ratings. Explanation was that they were ahead of their time. This half-hour tried to prove that the public had now caught up with them by allowing director Robert Fleming to pick his favorite bits from the original shows. They were linked by Spike Milligan and Valentine Dyall, as two bearded old cronies recalling the historic past of 1956.

Added bait was the frequent appearance of Peter Sellers, who has since progressed to wider screens and international fame. Upshot was an up-and-down affair, bizarre in parts, fitfully hilarious, and throughout concerned with extending the possibilities of tv cameras, with visual gimmicks. For instance, a thesp would answer a serious question while an errant hand played noughts-and-crosses on his forehead. Or Sellers, as a cop, went along to an employment bureau to hire a criminal, because he had not caught anyone for a couple of years.

This kind of honor can either split the sides or fall flat on its nether regions. Percentage in this revival was roughly 50-50. It still demanded a receptivity that a mass audience cannot command, and the pace of the radio originals was inevitably slowed up. But it remained a valuable reminder of both Milligan and Sellers, and of the talent of the first director, Dick Lester. Otta.

A feedbag of the American image, as reflected in pleasant mag fiction, is offered in the "Andy Griffith Show." The life is that of a small town, where people are tender and simple, meanness, vice and complexities foreign. It would be an understatement to say that "Winesburgh, Ohio" is un-American, in terms of reference to the "Andy Griffith Show."

Scripter Harvey Bullock, who did the opener for the new season, followed the formula which has proven so popular. It was hokey, but it also had moments of warmth, tenderness and wisdom, even though the images and pictorial forms were as old as the pleasant mag pieces of yore. As to Sherwood Anderson, he struck other dimensions of small-town Americana and time is on the side of Anderson's version, although "Griffith" remains nice to look at—like an old Currier and Ives print.

Preem had the boy Ronny Howard kill a bird with his new slingshot and the episode rotated around his sadness and retribution. Griffith remained wise and tender; Don Knotts supplied a few comic moments; and Frances Bavier lent apple pie to the situation. As long as people like to look backward sentimentally and escape the complexities of life as it has been lived and is being lived, for the most part, "Griffith" will go on and on, both nighttime and daytime on CBS-TV. Horo.

PORTRAIT OF A CHORUS
With Robert Shaw, guests; Bill Jorgensen, narrator
Producer-Writer: Dennis McGuire
60 Mins.: Sun., 10 p.m.
PARTICIPATION
KYW-TV, Cleveland

The outstanding success achieved by the Cleveland Orchestra Chorus is a tribute to Robert Shaw, its associate conductor. In the span of almost eight years, he has created so favorable an image that his group has been used by the State Department to sell Americanism behind the Iron Curtain and Latin America. With George Szell and the Cleveland Orchestra, the chorus has probably become the nation's top classical entourage. Hence, when KYW-TV chose to present "Portrait" at peak weekend time, it was not only performing a keen public service, but it was bringing to its wide audience an opportunity to know more intimately a scintillating home product. To a great extent, the program succeeded. It failed, however to reach its total objective by a simple fact—failure to peak at the critical period of production.

The program opened with an effective balance of scripting and filming. Bill Jorgensen carefully threaded his intro through well-filmed sequences of the 240-voice chorus doing warmup exercises, and visual acknowledgement that there would be interviews of members at their daily jobs. The interviews that followed were well done, interesting, and all underlined the close and warm relationship between conductor and chorus member who serves for the sheer love of singing. There was also an exacting exposure of Shaw's capability to joke, to criticize, comment, work with and, above all, to project his sincere dedication for perfection in his choral work.

Having established the ingredients that make for this fine chorus, the program merely touched on several vocal offerings. It failed to proffer a full-throated score—the final evidence that would have made the product. The only other rub — injection, unannounced, through either fade or word, of the commercials that punctuated the stanza. Mark.

VARIETY

"Irony and the fallible hero are two extremely rare commodities in the simplified and purified version of the world one generally encounters in the telefilm drama.

"'East Side/West Side' appears to be endowed with both of these uncommon dramatic nuances, which alone should be cause for rejoicing at the receiving end of the sets. Judging by the opener, the show is sound at the core and that heralds a bright future for it.

"George C. Scott stars as a New York City social worker who, it is happily obvious on the premiere, will not be one of tv's miracle-working heroes.

"It is the series' good fortune to have such an accomplished actor as Scott in the pivotal role. The premiere featured some fine, chewy emoting by Carol Rossen as the complicated prostie-mother. Regulars on the show are Elizabeth Wilson and Cicely Tyson. Realism seems to be the goal and the concept should not waver in the execution.

"Key staff figures in the molding of this promising initial endeavor were writer Edward DeBlasio, director Jack Smight, cameraman Jack Priestly and composer Kenyon Hopkins." Tube.

BOSTON GLOBE
Percy Shain

"After so much shoddy or flawed merchandise that has clogged the airlanes for the last 10 days or so, it is heartwarming to get a whiff or something honest and valid for a change.

"'East Side/West Side' combines the sting or realism with the artistry of professional staging in the best theatrical tradition to provide an engrossing hour with both social significance and emotional wallop.

"On the basis of its opening chapter Monday night, it's off to a faster start than 'The Defenders,' its distinguished colleague of the New York film colony, and you know how that one fared after it caught hold.

"The dialog was sharp, the performances superb in the unfolding of this tragic story of which so much could be said on both sides.

"Here's a series with universality of theme that promises to wrap you in its broad arms as it probes the vital, down-to-earth problems of everyday living."

LOS ANGELES TIMES
Cecil Smith

"'East Side/West Side' stars George C. Scott, as nimble a performer as treads the electronic stage and he gave a restrained and intelligent performance which was a tremendous pleasure to watch . . . Miss Rossen was splendid as the wayward mother . . . The cast under the expert direction of Jack Smight was equally faultless."

THE HOLLYWOOD REPORTER

"George C. Scott's talent will serve the series superbly . . . Edward DeBlasio's caustic script is vitally alive to the tiniest nuance . . . Jack Smight directed the opener for shattering emotional impact . . . no weak links in chain of castings by Alan Shayne and Michael Shurtleff . . . Carol Rossen revealed enormous talent as the girl . . . deglamorized photography rates highest praise for Jack Priestley .

SAN FRANCISCO CHRONICLE
Terrance O'Flaherty

"'East Side/West Side' promises to be one of the few honest ventures among the continuing dramatic series . . . It was worth an hour of anybody's time. George Scott performs the role of the social worker in a welfare agency with great skill . . . Carol Rossen portrayed the complicated girl with a mixture of sensitivity and toughness . . . The other players were equally effective."

INDIANAPOLIS TIMES
Richard K. Shull

"Of all the new characters who've invaded the living room . . . none has come on with more impact, more depth, more ability than Scott, who made his debut last night as the star of 'East Side/West Side' . . . And the production values of the show were like wow."

THE SAN DIEGO UNION and COPLEY SYNDICATE
Donald Freeman

"'East Side/West Side' . . . exploded on CBS the other night with a strong, meaty episode that marks this new entry as the seasons big power house. It packed a wallop, this one did . . . Mr. Scott is an actor of enormous strength and almost overpowering decisiveness . . . and if Carol Rossen isn't nominated as the years best actress there is no justice. Edward DeBlasio rates a salute for his script and David Susskind and Daniel Melnick's production brought it to steaming life . . . The quality is unmistakably there."

DES MOINES REGISTER
Ogden Dwight

"In addition to being well acted by the star and Carol Rossen as well as seventeen other players, the drama benefitted from convincing location photography, and the almost tangible clutch of 100% sincerity . . . 'East Side/West Side' will equal or surpass the success of the 'Defenders.'"

THE DENVER POST
Del Carnes

"There is a good deal of material shot on location, thereby capturing the feel and atmosphere of New York . . . sensitivity in writing . . . George Scott a fine actor."

MIAMI HERALD
Jack Anderson

"'East Side/West Side' has a great opener. The new CBS drama series is the best written, best-acted new entry of the season thus far. The drama was skilfully written by Edward DeBlasio, and Carol Rossen in the role of the mother was superb. And, as he has amply demonstrated before, Scott has few peers in his profession. His performance is so moodily realistic . . . that he looks as if he had literally been recruited from New York's welfare department to do the job."

TV: Social Worker W

'East Side, West Side' Has Network Debut

By JACK GOULD

THE tide turned last night. "East Side, West Side," the premiere on the Columbia Broadcasting System network, is the season's first new series of promise. In its first show there was sensitivity, substance and style.

George C. Scott, the admirable individualist who scornfully rejected another proposed television series on the ground that it was hackneyed rubbish, accepted the lead in "East Side, West Side"; it is not hard to see why.

The role is civilized and off the beaten track; he plays a social worker who is not expected at the end of an hour to tie up humanity's problems in a handy package. The part's concept also can provide the continuity necessary to weekly TV and still allow an almost limitless range of theme; it may work well.

The initial installment was entitled "The Sinner" and involved a prostitute who was strong enough to take good care of her child and weak enough to remain in her profession. What might have been only idle sensationalism did not prove so in Edward De Blasio's script.

an actor who knows how to listen, whose face confirms rather than contradicts an author's words.

Carol Rossen was most effective as the prostitute and the smaller parts were interestingly cast. "East Side, West Side" is being filmed in the metropolitan area and the photography of Jack Priestley was superb, with Jack Smight's direction capitalizing on the opportunities thus offered.

"East Side, West Side," which is a production of David Susskind and Daniel Melnick, has ambitions to restore to television many of the writers who have not been active because o fthe medium's limitation on subject material.

It could be one of the more forthright projects of the season, a long overdue opportunity for the New York stage community to bring a liberal and adventurous tone to video drama.

UNITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL
Jack Gaver

"A notable plus for 'East Side/West Side' is that the New York-filmed series has unaffected style and the smell of realistic realism, a phrasing that is not as repetitive as it may appear. I am thinking of the usually unrealistic "realism" of Hollywood, where most writers are insulated against common unpleasantness and are steadily influenced by the video pseudo-realism of writers who are similarly insulated.

"Another huge plus for the series is, of course, Scott . . . He is a gentleman, a real one, with a definable face unlike Hollywood's faceless wonders; and he has irony, skepticism, humanity and toughness . . . The final scene, in which Miss Rossen must turn over her baby in her apartment to the authorities, was exquisitely done . . ."

NEW YORK WORLD-TELEGRAM
Harriet Van Horne

"If your taste runs to the slice of life that is jagged, meaty and just a little high, then 'East Side/West Side' is cleaver-cut for you . . . There is much to commend it, beginning with George C. Scott in the leading role."

BALTIMORE SUN
Donald Kirkley

"'East Side/West Side' . . . began where the so-called golden era of TV drama, often symbolized by 'Playhouse 90,' ended. 'The Sinner,' by Edward DeBlasio, was an excellent thing in itself, as well as a clear guide to the future of the series. All the omens were good.

"Here, presented under the leadership of George C. Scott, David Susskind, Daniel Melnick, and others in Talent Associates, is the first program in years to break away from the superficial stereotypes noted in nearly all of fictional TV. Here is something for the mature viewer who wants to see the theatre come to grips with reality and watch actors skilled in he best tradition of the stage."

NEW YORK DAILY NEWS
Kay Gardella

"With Scott's strong image superimposed on the screen, and Kenyon Hopkins racy background music, 'East Side/West Side' comes on strong. It's a challenging opening, breezily touring Manhattan at subway speed . . ."

PHILADELPHIA INQUIRER
Harry Harris

"Monday's premiere of 'East Side/West Side' . . . reflected the determination . . . not to serve up just another bland TV series. "The Sinner" called a spade a spade and a call girl a prostitute . . . the CBS series promises to be redolent of authentic sights and sounds, and in Scott it is endowed with an actor of attention-riveting skill and intensity."

BOSTON TRAVELER
Eleanor Roberts

"'East Side/West Side' made its debut . . . last night in a powerful smashing drama that raised the question of whether it was humane to take a prostitute's child away from her because she was an outcast in the eyes of society. Strong stuff, yes! But if future episodes live up to the quality of 'The Sinner,' this series about a social worker will be one of the season's finest offerings . . . George C. Scott, as the social worker, gave a powerhouse of a performance and his acting alone should make this series a standout."

NEWARK EVENING NEWS
Tom Mackin

"It would seem from last night's debut of 'East Side/West Side' that CBS has a major dramatic series on its hands. Surely, if story, direction, dialogue and acting—mostly the acting—are the yardsticks to measure artistic success, this filmed entry must rank head and shoulders over any regular, meaningful drama that has been unveiled so far this season

This kind of story is seldom seen on television. Yet it rang with truth, and it had the essential ingredient of superior drama. It made a viewer think."

WASHINGTON POST

SUSSKIND COMMITS EXCITING NEW SERIES

"That David Susskind has gone daffy. He and coproducer Daniel Melnick talked the CBS Television Network into backing a show called 'East Side/West Side' and all three must have known that the show violates every sacred tenet for television success. By all that Warner Bros. holds dear, 'East Side/West Side' just must not attract a large and loyal audience.

"First, there's the hero and George C. Scott just won't do. Susskind ought to know that television heroes are supposed to look as though they were all cut from some master pattern: Short straight noses, direct from a plastic surgeon; gleaming smiles, courtesy of of a dental laboratory; and bristling crew cut hair, from who knows where.

"Instead, the hero of 'East Side/West Side' is a hooknosed and disheveled master with impeccable credentials, earned in movies, in television and on the stage. Scott has a mind of his own and in this television series, he plays—of all things—a social worker.

"Director of photography Jack Priestly has continued his love affair with the City of New York.

"'East Side/West Side,' is the most sensitive, most moving and most promising television series of the new season. Scott carries enormous conviction."

CINCINNATI ENQUIRER
James Devane

"Anyone who's still complaining about TV's lack of an adult outlook on life obviously hasn't been paying attention to his home screen. Consider 'East Side/West Side' . . . The drama had intelligence and taste and it didn't fool around in discussing both the woman's lack of a marriage license and her occupation. And it didn't end her problem in a rosy glow . . ."

NEWSDAY
Barbara Delatiner

"'East Side/West Side' go. off to a promising start . . . the series had enough outstanding qualities to produce an engrossing hour . . . made an auspicious bow . . . the new series could be the best of the season . . ."

P&G Blurbs Top the 'Terrible 10'; 'Range' Ratings Vs. 'Precise' Numbers —On Other Madison Ave. Fronts

By BILL GREELEY

The League Against Obnoxious TV Commercials, a national org with headquarters in Brentwood, N. Y., headed by Karl H. Grossman (national director) and Steven R. Finz (exec veepee) seems to be picking up support with close to 3,000 members now in 36 states. League's newsletter, published six times a year, lets members ballot for "The Terrible 10," the top 10 worst commercials on the air. Same time, the letter takes time to praise the good campaigns.

Reflecting member voting, the letter scores Procter & Gamble as the No. 1 offensive video advertiser. To quote: "Procter & Gamble, the company which spent $111,000,000 in 1962 on television advertising, or a little more than $2 per household — more than any other firm in the nation, has again made a grand slam showing in members' balloting of obnoxious commercials—necessitating an extension of the Terrible 10 list to include a few of the oboxious spots produced by other firms."

P&G blurbs knocked by the League's members include—in order of obnoxiousness — Crest, Gleem, Salvo and, as letter states, "etc. ad nauseum." Only blurb breaking up the P&G monopoly, says the letter, is Anacin. Others on the Terrible list are Bromo Seltzer, Ajax, Blue Secret, Bayer Aspirin, Carter's, Doublemint and Excedrin.

Same time, the League points to members' choices for "The Decent Few"—Xerox, Volkswagen, General Electric, Du Pont, Hamm's, Pittsburgh Plate Glass, Chum King, Alcoa Aluminum, Zee Tissues (Coast) Hallmark, New York Times (east coast), Nationwide Insurance, Jax (southern beer) and Gulf Oil.

League has heard from Volkswagen's marketing manager Paul R. Lee (agency is Doyle, Dane, Bernbach), who wrote, "I should like to thank you personally, and for my company, for considering Volkswagen commercials among The Decent Few. Needless to say, the Volkswagen organization is in complete sympathy with the aims, attitudes and philosophies of your organization.

"You asked why our commercials are on 'such an adult and imaginative level' and why we haven't resorted to 'hard sell' in our commercials. Let me try to sum up our attitude in these few words: Volkswagen believes that the most important thing to be said about its advertising is that it is believed. It is believed because it is honest; it tells only the truth, and, in fact, it tends to understate the case. Volkswagen does not believe in either hard sell or soft sell. I have never seen a proper definition of the term 'hard sell.' I only know that it invariably results in misleading statements, dishonesty, obnoxious repetition, and an appeal to the lowest common denominator (or even worse, what the advertiser thinks is the lowest common denominator).

On the other hand, term 'soft sell,' when applied to advertising, invariably refers to advertising that apparently does not sell at all. Volkswagen believes that its advertising job is to tell the simple facts and advantages of its products in an intelligent and tasteful manner."

League is planning a picket of P&G's offices in Cincy and New York, and has membership cards and bumper stripes available to members.

Ruth Jones Gets 'Precise'

The "precise" numbers doled out by the rating serives "have a virtual stranglehold on the broadcasting industry," declares vet time buyer Ruth Jones, now supervisor of network and station relations and J. Walter Thompson agency.

This strangelhold, says Miss Jones, is true in the program decision area as well as the buying and selling of time. "The important point, it seems to me, is that the current system is far from 'precise.' While some researchers might argue that 'range' reporting (statistical variation reporting) is only accurate when based on a perfect sample, perfect response, perfect tabulation etc., it seems logical that 'ranges' are far closer to the truth than the present 'precise' figures.

"As it now stands, a 9.7 is for the most part treated absolutely superior to an 8.9 in our industry, regardless of the size of the sample."

Miss Jones expressed her views in a letter to Don McGannon, president of Group W and prexy of the National Assn. of Broadcasters Rating Council, which was formed earlier this year in the wake of the rating scandals. Letter was sent following her attendance at a recent meeting of the Rating Council as an observer for the American Assn. of Advertising Agencies (which refused an invite to join the Council along with the Assn. of National Advertisers). She's also chairman of the 4A's Broadcast Media Committee.

To the argument, forwarded during the meeting, that time buyers would take the spread figures and average them out to a fixed number anyway, Miss Jones argues that an arbitrary statement can't be made as to what buyers would do, since the interpretation of figures depends on what the buyer is trying to achieve in executing a campaign.

"There is almost an inference that time buyers are inexperienced and are not equipped to use 'ranges' intelligently, and this is why a 'precise' figure is better for them. First of all, as you know, there are hundreds of professional trained time buyers who want to look beyond a precise figure, and even if it were true that there are many untrained buyers, this would be the best argument for 'range' reporting . . . Television and radio reports are produced in great volume in many individual markets and are used daily by people with no research training. Thus it is logical that publication of 'ranges' would serve as a constant warning of the fallibility of the figures."

Other advantages of giving the ratings a point spread on each show says Miss Jones, would be to allow for programming innovation and experimentation by broadcasters, both on a network and local basis —"It would allow new programming ideas to take form, build audiences and not be subject to immediate decapitation when the first unfavorable ratings appear.

"On the business side, it will enable broadcasters to present their true qualifications and images to buyers—good management policies, good local, live programming, good local film programming, good public service, good commercial practices, etc. It would provide leeway for analysis of which stations do the best all around job in the community.

"Further, as you know, as soon as any reports come out, there are violent fluctuations in switching schedule to schedule and from station to station in many markets. 'Ranges' would have to lead to greater stability and even elimination of such erratic schedule switching.

And, says Miss Jones, as the Advertising Research Foundation argues, range reports would lead to competition among the rating services for closer ranges, with the result that they would be using larger samples. 'Range' ratings also would, she says, go a long way towards arresting the "deplorable" station practice of hypoing programs and promotional efforts to distort the audience picture during rating periods.

"After two years of concentrated effort by a Congressional subcommittee from an objective viewpoint, the strongest recommendation of the committee is that 'range' reporting is a most important answer to the numbers racket and the well-being of the broadcasting industry," she declares. "According to the trade press, some Congressmen on the subcommittee have taken a strong position that legislation may be forthcoming if 'range' reporting is not adopted voluntarily by the NAB."

Viva Com'l

London, Oct. 1.

A major innovation in the sphere of tv commercials manifested over the weekend when Vauxhall Motors launched its latest model, the Viva.

Crawfords ad agency booked the client a six-minute commercial over the entire indie network — 14 markets — on Sunday (29) afternoon, thus taking up one minute short of all the ad time allowed in one clock hour.

Commercial makes tv history inasmuch as it is the first time a plug of such duration has been seen over the whole network, but it is not the longest vidplug, however. A seven-minute commercial pioneered by International Olive Oil went out in the Television Wales & West area earlier this summer.

WOLPER HOURS GET 47-CITY SYNDIE RIDE

Eight additional sponsors have purchased the six David Wolper hourlong documentary specials. With this addition, the Wolper-United Artists Television specials now have been purchased by advertisers in 47 cities.

Latest roster of advertisers include: Jersey Farms Dairy and Home Federal Savings and Loan for Nashville, First Pennsylvania National Bank and Trust Co. for Philadelphia; Illinois Bell Telephone for Springfield, Ill; Bank of New Orleans, for New Orleans; Citizens Federal Savings and Loan for San Francisco; Prudential Federal Savings and Loan for Salt Lake City; and Montana Public Power for Butte, Billings and Great Falls.

Hourlong specials, due to be unreeled this season, include: "December 7, The Day of Infamy," "The Yanks Are Comings," "The American Woman in the Twentieth Century," "Ten Seconds That Shook the World," "The Rise and Fall of American Communism," "Berlin, Kaiser and Khrushchev."

Army Buys 'Battle Line' For O'seas GI Viewing

Official Films' new half-hour series, "Battle Line," has been sold to the Armed Forces Radio & Television service for showings in 35 military installations overseas.

Produced by Sherman Grinberg, with Official prexy Seymour Reed as exec producer, "Battle Line" is a recap of major battles of WW II with author Jim Bishop on the narrative and participants from both sides of each conflict on the commentary.

London Agencies

London, Oct. 1.

With the commercial contractors' new, two-tier rentals now known—and it is practically axiomatic that all save the Welsh indie WWN will reapply for a further franchise—just about the biggest question in London agency circles at the moment is: "Will rates go up?"

As yet, the tv companies are not in a position to answer. Facts and figures are being worked out but it may be some time before the contractors—given they are reappointed—will be prepared to let anything slip out. Agency men, meanwhile, are tending to look on the gloomy side. They remember the neat way in which the Television Advertising Duty—a 10% tax designed to siphon off some contractors' profit—was passed on to the advertiser.

Says one ad exec: "Even without this extra burden of increased rentals, the tv companies were putting up their rates. (audiences were going down, too!) It seems they won't hesitate to put them up again—which is safe enough when you have a commercial tv monopoly. They may lose some smaller advertisers but peak time will still probably be oversubscribed."

Mather & Crowther, who already handle the Associated-Rediffusion account, now become agents for Central Rediffusion Services . . British Vidfilms' Future Hinges On Two New Shows

London, Oct. 1.

Two telefilm series set to bow on the commercial web at the end of the week could prove to be the deciding factor in "life" or "death" of a large part if not all of the British vidfilm industry. They are "Sentimental Agent" and "Espionage".

Shows, both emanating from the Associated TeleVision stable, are vitally important because ATV topper Lew Grade—who hitherto has had great faith in telepic production—has got to make up his mind in the next few weeks whether to continue with this costly line of activity or whether he should leave it to the Yanks.

Success of either show could swing the vital decision to the affirmative but, equally important, audience reaction to the newies may well condition the branch of film production that ATV takes in the future.

"Sentimental Agent," produced under the ITC banner with Leslie Harris in the exec producer's chair, marks ATV's latest try at landing a wholly-British telepic which will excite the U.S. market a la "Robin Hood" in days of yore. A spinoff of the "Man Of The World" series, "Agent" stars Carlos Thompson in what has been described as a tongue-in-cheek action-adventure show.

And if the wholly-owned ATV distributor, ITC, can secure a choice deal for the hour show in the States, chances are Grade will give the word for the go-ahead for more locally-originated film. On the other hand, with an annual rental approaching $13,000,000, the high cost of running a dual operation in London and the Midlands, the greater economies of tape production and other considerations, the exec may seek other avenues of production.

One alternative to the go-it-alone ATV film making code is the courting of Anglo-U.S. co-production. This is where the importance of "Espionage" lies, for it is the first co-production involving a U.S. network and a British tv contractor. Both NBC, which partners ATV in the project, and the local company will be subjecting the show to the keenest o.o. and if the series makes it technically as well as professionally, a large chunk of the groundwork in bringing about U.S.-U.K. web partnership will be done.

With so much riding on these two shows, ATV has given them both prime time slots on Saturday night in the London area. "Agent" is skedded 7:30-8:30 p.m. and "Espionage" from 9:10-10:05 p.m. where they will face stiff competition from BBC-TV in the shape of "Wells Fargo" and features, respectively.

If "Agent" holds or betters "Fargo", it will be a further incentive for Grade to increase his current $14,000,000 investment in tv films. If "Espionage" proves itself against repeat features (albeit still strong audience pullers), then British rating success will be added to other advantages of Anglo-U.S. co-production, such as automatic exposure in both countries, more money available for production, and lower production costs (if filmed outside America).

Exactly who-does-what-to-whom in this country will soon be on record. The TAM ratings emerge, just days after the programs beam out. And soon, the ATV topper will make his decision.

Everything Is 'Bubbling Under' At BBC Radio

London, Oct. 1.

BBC Radio may be a monopoly in itself but it is faced with some pretty stiff competition in the shape of the tv networks. Fact that nowadays somewhere in the region of 27,000,000 people listen to sound broadcasting at some point during the day is, according to Dick Marriott, BBC's assistant director of broadcasting, a pointer as to how alive the three networks are.

Obviously, audience sizes are hit when video stations are going full blast but there are still well over 1,000,000 people in this country without tv and quite a number who for one reason or another are not peeking (for instance, motorists), thus providing a total audience enough to justify the Corporation keeping its sound trasnmitters open.

But radio really comes into its own when the small screen is dark, Marriott indicates. Accordingly, the Corporation is pushing for an extension of hours both before the present 6:30 a.m. start and after the current pre-midnight close.

In its fall schedule, therefore, while it is negotiating with the Musicians Union, Phonographic Performance Ltd. (company owned by record makers which collects royalties for use of records) and other bodies for the increase in "needle time" necessary to establish the proposed extension of hours, BBC has decided to make a play for the post-tv audience by producing a midweek 10:30-till-midnight light music show called "Music To Midnight."

Big-dealing the new spread, BBC Radio is enlisting top comperes to handle the shows including Allan Dell, David Gell, Bob Wilcox, Rodney Burke among others. Top British bands and singers will also be enlisted.

Among a wide range of new light entertainment programs destined this fall for the most popular of BBC's three radio channels, the Light Program, the radio chieftains have plumped for use of comedians, etc., which have made the big audiences via their tv exposure.

For instance, Harry Worth, who is one of video's top-rated comedians is getting his own radio series. Similarly, Ken Dodd has been paged for radio dates as well as his tv shows. Other tv names like Leslie Crowther who hit the tv bigtime in "The Black and White Minstrel Show," now has signed for a weekly 30-minute radio show.

On instructions from Marriott, the Radio networks are to get a good deal more "salesmanship" or "showmanship" in their presentation. From now on announcers will introduce themselves, be more chatty.

Most significant areas of programming on all three radio outlets like news (regional and national), magazine shows and road condition broadcasts are to be extended. The recently-formed light music department — an offspring from the light entertainment limb —is now clicking into action, says Marriott, and will come up with a series of "experimental" programs during the fall season which may spark new spheres of thinking in presentation of disk and music programs.

While everything is "bubbling under" at BBC Radio, Marriott states that he's not out for a drastic new look. People, he contends, do not want drastic changes. The way BBC Radio is playing it is to be "constantly changing" thus bringing about any major changes by degrees.

British TV's 'Closed Shop' Easeoff; Indie Producers Start Moving In

London, Oct. 1.

While the local independent producer is still not anything like a major contributor to the tv network schedules, it is felt in sections of the trade that the situation may be changing. At the moment a half dozen or so indie outfits have compiled programs — both documentary and entertainment — which have been sold to the networks. But others may be moving into the field soon, especially when BBC-2 gets going and starts to burn up between 25-30 hours of product per week.

It would not make sense for the webs to lose their control of programs, nor would it be economically feasible for BBC and the big commercial operators to let their own studio production run down in favor of programming produced outside. Nonetheless, producers report a certain easing of the "closed shop" attitude toward program ideas and/or pilots.

For instance, BBC has picked up the pilot of World Film Services' "The Uneasy Crown" documentary skein on the crowned heads of Europe. BBC has given the indie production outfit—which will live or die depending on the sale of this skein—an undertaking that it will pick up some more of the projected 13 hour films if reaction to the pilot is good.

Another freelance production outfit, Grosvenor Films, helmed by feature producer-director Tony Young and Wendy Ranielli, has successfully sold a "goon" film series to BBC for screening this fall.

Hitherto feature producers Independent artists (Julian Wintle and Leslie Parkyn) have registered their intention to devote a lot more of their activities to the tv series market. Underwritten by United Artists, they are prepping a second series of "The Human Jungle" which they first made with ABC-TV picking up the tab. Contractor has indicated its willingness to pick up the second run of the show for the U.K.

Associated TeleVision, which fostered the most successful of all British independent producers, A. P. Films producers of "Supercar," "Fireball XL5" and, now, "Stingray"), has also pacted to take documentaries from the Independent Television Reporters International, body comprising some top British tv Journalists.

Another freelance vidnews outfit is Radio and TV News Ltd. set up by ace local tv newsman Kit Plant which services regional stations with certain news coverage. Ex BBC producer Denis Mitchell is now freelancing documentaries to Granada-TV and ATV. Jack Howell's does the same for TWW (he came up with Oscar-winning "Dylan Thomas" short).

On the horizon, one leading Yank talent agency is feeling out the ground for packaging light entertainment vidshows, made with local talent but an American producer. An Intertel (VTR) Services, a mobile facilities unit comprising four video cameras and two Ampex machines, is planning to move into program production at the end of the year.

Latter company intends to produce shows aimed at the domestic market, but with U. S. performers in the lead roles. And the mushroom breed of small production companies that sprang up to produce tv commercials when the commercial web came into being, are now beginning to graduate into program production.

Longtime producer of shorts John Halas has already been on the air with his cartoon shorts "Haba Tales," "Foo Foo" and "Snip and Snap." Richard Williams, who has advanced from plug production to the making of award winning films like "Little Island" and "Love Me, Love Me, Love Me" is also preparing to turn his attention to tv program making.

GALLUP TO WGAN

Portland, Me., Oct. 1.

George H. Gallup, former CBS radio account executive, has been named station manager of WGAN.

Gallup succeeds Francis H. Farnum Jr., who resigned as manager and v.p. of the Guy Gannett Broadcasting Services to join an engineering firm.

High-Flyin' Rivalry

Chicago, Oct. 1.

Two radio stations here, WBBM and WGN, are competing in the air as well as on the air, and their acts of one-upmanship are beginning to clutter the skies. WBBM began broadcasting traffic reports from a helicopter on Labor Day on a larger schedule than WGN, which had been alone in the market with trafficopter feeds for about five years.

Immediately WGN, through an arrangement with Cook County Sheriff's Police, put a second traffic spotter up, this one a Cessna Skyhawk which patrols the outlying areas of town. Not to be outdone, WBBM has just announced its leasing of a second whirlybird. This one won't broadcast, but will relay info to Bob Richardson who pilots the main ship and is WBBM's new voice from the sky.

Renee Valente TA Exit; Goes on Own

Renee Valente, veteran production exec at Talent Associates-Paramount Ltd. and longtime associate of David Susskind, resigned from the company last week and set up her own production company, Red Goose Inc. She's partnered in the latter venture with John Wray, tv director, and Burr Smidt, set designer.

Miss Valente exited Talent Associates over a policy dispute involving the future direction of the company. Susskind has indicated that Talent Associates will place increasing stress on film, while Miss Valent is an advocate of tape.

Miss Valente's company has already lined up a commitment from Gene Kelly for an hour special. The company is also rolling with a property, "One Life To Live," directed by Karl Genus. Another project involves the production of a one-hour-a-day children's show based on a click Canadian series, "Randy Dandy." Red Goose is planning to use only the top figures of the Canadian series and supplement them with U.S. performers. Miss Valente is also eyeing the feature film biz and has lined up front money for a production titled "The Hitchhiker."

Red Goose will also provide a service of arranging all below-the-line elements for anyone creating a tv show.

Two-Platoon System For CBS-TV Sun. News

For the first time this Sunday (6), CBS-TV's 11 p.m. news show will have two separate origination points, one for the west coast and the other for the remainder of the country.

For the Coast, Charles Kuralt will front the Sunday night newscast, while Harry Reasoner will be on hand, as per usual, for the remainder of the country. The Coast feed grew out of CBS News prexy Dick Salant's conviction that more news should emanate from that growing region.

In another development, Reasoner has been selected for a newly created assignment as a roving correspondent for CBS News. Reasoner's reports will appear primarily on the new half-hour Walter Cronkite evening news show; he will also cover major stories for other CBS News broadcasts, including the new "CBS News with Mike Wallace."

Elgar to MPO

MPO blurbery has absorbed Peter Elgar Productions with the hiring of Peter Elgar as an exec producer and director.

Elgar joins the industry's biggest grossing commercial film house with 30 years experience behind him, mainly in the field of blurbs, industrials and documentaries.

ABC INT'L LINKED TO ARAB NETWORK

ABC International Television, in conjunction with five Arab countries, has set up an Arab Middle East Network consisting of stations in Syria, Jordan, Kuwait, Iraq and Lebanon. Tele Orient, in Beirut, Lebanon, is an associate of ABC International and is the flagship station of the new network.

ABC International will provide international program buying and sales representation. Don Coyle, ABC International prexy, said many more stations are expected to participate in this network within the next few months.

The web was launched recently at a presentation in Beirut attended by over 500 businessmen, advertisers, governmental officials and station reps.

Brit. Execs Have 'Blind' Faith In U.S. TV Entries

London, Oct. 1.

Within the last few weeks two American series, "The Danny Kaye Show" and the Richard Boone dramatic anthology skein, have been bought "blind" by British tv'ers. The Kaye show is going to BBC and the Boone series to Associated-Rediffusion, major London independent.

Importance of these sales, as seen by one American telefilm distrib, lies not so much in the fact that the customers didn't see a pilot —nor, incidentally, did the American webs—but that the British tv exec is now gaining confidence in American product before it is given the acid test of U. S. exposure.

That neither Kaye nor Boone have been "proved" by Nielsen and yet have been sold to leading British tv webs is the result of a new awareness in these parts of "what cooks in the U. S." This has been brought about by the increasing trend in transAtlantic treks which is seeing more and more key British programming personnel grabbing a couple of weeks away from the local studio to o.o. the Yank production scene.

According to one London-based, American vidfilm salesman, as little as five years ago, hardly a handful of local tv programmers crossed the pond personally to see what the Yanks were doing. But in the last three years has come the dawn. Now, it is marked essential for the big operators to get their program buyers, heads of departments and other top notchers off to the U.S. to see the bow of the new shows, if not earlier to see the pilots.

For instance, it is only in the last two years that Gordon Smith, BBC-TV's show buying exec, has been to the States. And the Corporation's tv program controller Stuart Hood has also been over. BBC-1 program chief Donald Baverstock goes over this month.

From the commercial network, John McMillan, current program chieftain (and soon general manager) of A-R, now makes the trip at least twice a year. Elkan Allan, McMillan's light entertainment chief is also heading Stateside any day now to catch the new shows. Even regional stations like TWW (Television Wales & West) have opened the purse strings and are sending a delegation to scan upcoming product, including the company's chairman Lord Derby, exec producer Wyn Roberts and ad-pub director Frank Brown.

Result of this ever-increasing flow of program-orientated traffic has been that domestic tv'ers are finding themselves not only aware of trends, bombs and suchlike, early, but are making close personal contact with American program makers and putting themselves in a position where they can judge as early as any American exec which way the wind is blowing.

In the opinion of a U. S. trade source, it was a direct result of a pre-selling season trip to the U.S. that A-R took the Boone series without a pilot because the company was aware of the feel of the series and of the talent of the people involved.

THIS IS THE TELEVISION SERIES FOR 1963

"Richard Boone unveiled his new TV repertory theatre Tuesday night in a brilliantly-executed drama . . . a powerful acting duel between Boone and Bethel Leslie. It was played with a polish and perfection rare in television. Undoubtedly, this is THE television series for 1963-64."

CECIL SMITH, Los Angeles Times

POWERFUL THEATRE DRAMA

"This was the week when a powerful theatre drama left its mark on the small screen. Richard Boone put the theatre drama there . . executed with polished television production mastery."

ARLENE GARBER, Hollywood Citizen News

"AT LEAST FOUR EFFORTS WORTHY OF EMMY CONSIDERATION"

"No one dares say after this auspicious debut that true legitimate theatre cannot be adapted to the filmed television medium. I personally noted at least four efforts worthy of Emmy considerations . . . this series has to be kept on the air!"

HANK GRANT,
Bell-McClure Syndicated & Hollywood Reporter

UNUSUAL CONCEPT CARRIED OUT WITH DISTINCTION

"The serious dramatic season got underway at last with the opening drama on 'The Richard Boone Show'. It was performed with authority . . . the concept is unusual and the opening hour demonstrated that it will be carried out with distinction."

TERRENCE O'FLAHERTY, San Francisco Chronicle

ADULT! HARD-HITTING! PROVOCATIVE!

"During week in Hollywood these cliches were used to describe a dozen shows. So far only one has measured up to them, 'The Richard Boone Show'. Performances by Boone and Bethel Leslie were superb. Show combines entertainment with excellent acting."

FRANCIS MURPHY, Portland Oregonian

A REAL WINNER

"The new Richard Boone show was a real winner . . . Boone himself was absolutely great."

DICK ALEXANDER, Arizona Daily Star

derous and his manipulation of the thesps over-emphatic.

But the show really misfired because Leo Lehman's script was feeble. Instead of reporting for work, Mr. Andrews (Robin Bailey) loitered at the railroad station, making mighty suspicious remarks to officials, giving his business trappings of briefcase and bowler-hat to the luggage office. He gave the impression of kicking over the traces of routine and opting for freedom. This worried his boss and his wife, who hurried to the terminal to see what was wrong with him. They arrived in time to watch Mr. Andrews meet a gal, and take her away for a bit of fun.

Robin Bailey tried hard as the mysterious Mr. Andrews, but he was polished and suave in the wrong way; the part needed a comic pathos he could not supply. The rest of a well-chosen cast were also induced to overplay their paltry hands, and the show fizzled out in anti-climax, the ending certainly having surprise, but lacking punch. Otta.

HOTEL DE LUXE
With Jeremy Sanford, narrator
Producer, Anthony de Lotbiniere
45 Mins., Tues., 9:20 p.m.
BBC-TV, from London

A matter of hours after a High Court judge had ruled this documentary fit for screening—following moves by the London Savoy Hotel to restrain it—BBC-TV transmitted the film which, by that time, had garnered pagefuls of publicity.

Though the hubbub was not sought by the programmers, the headlining served to build up the film as a major expose of life below stairs in a leading London hotel. As it turned out, the film was certainly themed on the staffers of the Savoy but, as an expose of the magnitude suggested by the Savoy's attempts to get it blocked, it was an anticlimax. Inference of an off-screen BBC announcement following the show was not objecting to the major part of the film but wanted it brought out that the Savoy provided canteen facilities for all employees, and accommodation for some of them, in order to counteract low wages.

While hardly one of the most revealing documentaries of our time, it was a competent glance at what makes a joint like the Savoy tick and, of course, it brought out the striking contrasts in scenery surrounding the "clients" (as the Savoy calls 'em) and the kitchen boys.

Surprisingly, the script and commentator seemed to register surprise at the fact that the downstairs sink wasn't as lush as the bedroom ablutions. Pictorially, the working equipment looked practical, whatever innuendoes the script contained in choice of words such as "medieval." The general impression was that the Savoy is a well run establishment.

Factually well-stocked, the program was ably put together, photographed and edited. Details and anecdotes concerning the hotel's history were skilfully deployed and there were some unseen but fascinating interviews with employees who seemed to have one thing in common—a pride in the "personal service" for which this particular hostelry is known. Watt.

Capitalistic TV

idiot track. He likes the cartoons, though.

Daytime tv has been something of a diversion. There is none in Poland, as he carefully explains (tongue in cheek), because his country is not a capitalistic country, but a working man's country, and people are working daytime (video runs from four to midnight when the proletariat is home from plant and field).

But aren't there housewives in Poland? That question sets him to thinking, he replies, that American tv is all for the housewife—and children—isn't it?

Polish tv? For a long time, he says, it was inundated with Disney nature films—you know, the ones where the weak but good monkey makes out in the end. And "Sign of Zorro" was a big hit, but kids confused the cloaked hero with political broadcasts. He once saw scribbled on a wall: "Zorro will beat the OAS (French-Algerian underground)."

For the straight record, there's weekly live drama on Polish tv, local shows and local stars, variety and news.

Are the latter like U.S. tv news shows? "Identical." Polanski sort of proves this with an uproarious parody of the Russian Premiere's shoe-banging bit at the United Nations as viewed on television. Polish tv also has feature films, all four or five years old, but the medium is bankrolled by set tax (as is radio)—"very cheap." Medium is growing very rapidly, and while the one-channel hq is in Warsaw, other cities have local stations that program about 20% on their own.

While explaining the ins-and-outs of Polish television, the director is slurping down a giant dish of capitalistic ice cream. Does Poland have ice cream? "Poland is all ice cream."

More Scandal For German TV

Mainz, Oct. 1.

West Germany's troubled Second Television Network, which has been on the air for only six months, already has a new headache—repercussions following the firing, or sudden exit, of the chief of the entertainment division, Karlheinz Bieber.

The station has been beset with lack of funds, unhappy employees quitting, and now it's been hit with an extremely bad press as the rumors continue to fly about just why Bieber exited within one day from his job, although his contract had a year to run, and why the station announced that it was a "friendly" end although everyone knew it wasn't.

Bieber denied charges that there had been anything unfair about the $10,000,000 in contracts that he had granted to 30 independent producers to make shows for the new station, although rumors were rife that certain producers had been favored.

In the denials, it was pointed out that of the 14 firms who had contracts of over $250,000 for individual productions, Arthur Brauner's important CCC Films of Berlin placed third, behind Munich's Intertel.

Meanwhile, it was also reported that the wife of the Second Net's Program Director, Ulrich Grahlmann—a pretty blond actress named Ruth Wilbert, who was recently a beauty contest winner acclaimed "Miss Bavaria"—would coincidentally be appearing in her first major film role in Berlin's CCC productions.

The director of the Second TV Net announced that he could see no objection to this, since the film was not being made for his station.

And at week's end, the rumors and reports had reached such a peak that the Second German TV sent out a special press clarification—warning that if any further untrue information was spread, "action" would be taken against the informants and publications spreading the rumors.

breweries, Leonard declares: "If Mr. Morris could have his way he would put both of these industries out of business—industries which every calendar day send $47,076 to Washington, not counting income taxes or any of the other myriad taxes which they pay."

"Of course Mr. Morris would go further. He would then dry up all of Texas after he finished with Bexar County and when he had accomplished that purpose he would have deprived Washington of an additional $74,536 per day in revenue from the legal sale of beer.

"I underline "legal" because alcoholic beverages are going to be sold by somebody, but prohibition pays no taxes."

Leonard said he "could easily guess," that Morris' application for the station "carried some connotation of a religious purpose. In doing this he gives no standing and no right of being to the opposite tenets toward alcoholic beverages held by the Jewish people, the German people, the Czech people, the Latin American people and in fact a great majority of the population of our state."

No date for a hearing on the Brewers' petition to deny the call letter KDRY to Rev. Morris has been set.

Rev. Mr. Morris said he preferred to make no comment until he as been notified by the FCC of the protest. He said he is proceeding with the construction of his studios in Alamo Heights.

He said he expects to go on the air with his new radio station about Oct. 10.

ments on an appropriation bill in 1951, more than 10 years ago," he remarked.

The main point in both cases, he continued, "is the simple proposition that the agencies such as the Federal Communications Commission do not have any powers not expressly granted to them by Congress.

"If the basic rule of law . . . has changed or its going to be changed, the Congress is thereby undertaking to delegate powers to independent agencies never intended to be delegated under the Constitution," he said.

Rogers urged speedy Congressional action on his bills "so as to make it crystal clear that further attempts to encroach upon the powers of Congress will not be tolerated."

Rogers took over the Communications subcommittee chairmanship after Rep. Oren Harris (D-Ark.) decided to step down and devote his time to running the Investigations Committee and the parent House Commerce Committee.

Harris remains an ex-officio member of the Communications subcommittee but it is from his vantage point as Commerce Committee chairman that he can oversee Rogers' sudden rise to prominence.

because it should be right up the alley of younger viewers who control the sets at that time of night. Other stations who have snapped up the syndicated package ought to be following suit.

Among the flickers unspooled on the premiere were a bullfight sequence re-edited to get the matador gored, another clip accompanied by a director's comments during filming (which came out sounding like a Bob Newhart routine), and a 1918 Tarzan segment (re-dubbed "Tarfoot of the Apes") starring Elmo Lincoln. Host Hans Conreid, an excellent choice for the assignment, also conducted what amounted to a fractured interview with guest Rose Marie.

In sum, the main trouble with "Fractured Flickers" is that the fracture is compound instead of simple. This sort of aproach to humor may be inspired in a publicity packet, but it leaves something to be desired in more artistic endeavors. Tube.

Benny & Griffith Daytimers on Tap

Daytime rerun rights to Jack Benny remain at CBS-TV and the web is expected to begin telecasting the 100-odd episodes of the show sometime in the beginning of the '64-'65 season. Deal for the Benny reruns predates his move over to NBC-TV next season in a prime time berth.

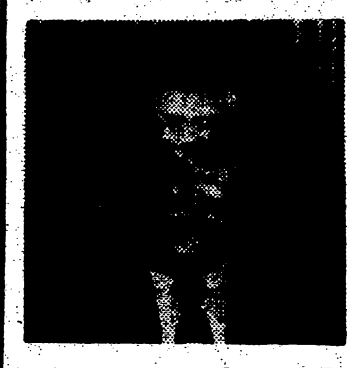
Also waiting in the wings for a daytime rerun ride is the "Andy Griffith Show." That show, too, is due for daytime rerun telecasting next season, perhaps starting in October. Daytime rerun showcasing will have no effect on the first-run nighttime Griffith Show on the same network, sponsored by General Foods.

The slotting of the two vidfilm series is yet to be worked out. Early forecasts put Benny in the 10:30 a.m. period, though. If there is a midseason daytime casualty, web has "Millionaire" in its vaults for another rerun spin. It's understood contractually Benny and Girffith can't start until next season.

WPIX's Aussie Segs

WPIX-TV, New York independent, has bought an Australian kid show, "Adventures of the Terrible 10," half-hour comedy show remeniscent of the "Our Gang" shorts.

"Terrible 10" is reportedly the most popular kid show down under and also in Canada, and WPIX will slot it at 12 noon Saturday. Station also continues into the new season with the English cartoon show, "Super Car."



Picks by Smith Seldom Mith

"Now Mr. Smith," the film salesman purrs, "not only will this series double your audience, it will triple results for sponsors."

Sitting behind the desk, sifting fact from fiction, weighing what competition is doing, drawing from his long experience with the unique likes and dislikes of Milwaukee, is Baylen Smith, Program Manager of WISN-TV. Outside his office door is the usual line of people—the prop manager with a request, an announcer with a question, a director with a production problem and his secretary with a phone call from a lady who would like him to speak about TV to her PTA group. (He will.)

But at the moment he is performing his most important task, making a judgment about what will or will not go on the air. That he seldom chooses wrong is evidenced, in part, by WISN-TV's very favorable position in the Milwaukee market.

Smith came to WISN-TV in April of 1956 bringing with him a broadcasting background that included writing, directing, producing, selling and merchandising. Just before joining the station he was with Bert Claster Productions where he helped in the origination of "Romper Room."

Usually harassed, seldom showing it, easy to get along with, hard to fool, Baylen Smith is another of the talented people who make WISN-TV click.

KSL-TV, Salt Lake City, says it's not preempting CBS-TV's "East Side, West Side" to carry Four Stars off-web syndicated hour, "Dick Powell Theatre," as stated in a VARIETY story in the Aug. 28 issue. Mountain time's lapse of two hours from eastern standard time would put 9 p.m. beyond the network feed. KSL blooper was carried in a roundup of preempts cited by Four Star Distribution in a rundown of scheduling of Powell by stations across the country.

250G Granik Suit Vs. Brit. Granada

Ted Granik, producer and creator of the tv show, "Youth Wants to Know," has filed a $250,000 suit in New York Supreme Court against Granada TV Productions Ltd. for the English firm's failure to pay off on an alleged settlement regarding the show's use in Great Britain. Latter has moved for a dismissal.

Granik claims he created the show in 1951, and in '55 met with a Granada officer and director re the use of the show in England. Negotiations were held over a period of time, says the complaint, with Granada agreeing—without a written contract — that they would compensate Granik if he disclosed details of the production. The producer supplied kinnies, says the complaint, and the English company unlawfully appropriated the property without royalties, license or compensation.

Granik's complaint declares that in 1959 he had started suit against Sidney L. Bernstein, board chairman of Granada at the time, which ended in a settlement underwhich Granada agreed to pay a set amount, but failed to do so.

ERA OF CRISIS
With Jeff Schiffmen, Steve Powers, guests
Producer: Tony Brunton
Writer: Schiffman
60 Mins., Sun., 7 p.m.
WICC-WJZZ-FM, Fairfield, Conn.

Subtitled "Civil Rights in Southern Connecticut," this hour documentary was based on seven 15-minute "Reporter-at-Large" sessions prepared by the WICC news division, one of the largest and most dynamic among eastern radio indies.

Giving listeners in this metropolitan area an impressive aural closeup of the Negro situation close to home, the success of interviews comprehended a broad spectrum of civil rights leaders through Connecticut—mayors, educational heads, Negro leaders—as well as such national figures as President Kennedy, Martin Luther King and Malcolm X. The reportial effect of Fieldman Steve Powers' interview approach, as opposed to a discussional treatment, contributed importantly to the life-likeness of the job.

It is unfortunate that such major journalistic undertakings are scheduled at such a radio offtime as Sunday evening. "Era of Crisis" is, certainly, a superior example of news department product.

BACKSTAGE AT THE GUTHRIE THEATRE
With Tyrone Guthrie, Oliver Rea, Sheldon Goldstein Producer: Goldstein
Director: Tom Ruben
30 Mins.: Mon. (23), 9 p.m.
NORTHWESTERN FEDL. SAVINGS & LOAN
WLOL-FM, Minneapolis, (taped)

This was the 21st and final program of what has been a highly successful once-a-week "Backstage at the Guthrie Theatre" series. It brought before the "mike" stellar cast and administrative members to enlighten the public on all of the venture's phases. This was during the now famed classical stage repertory company's just-ended initial 20-week season.

The radio series began and ended with the preem season's start and finish. Its success may be measured by the fact that it'll resume next May 5 when the Guthrie Theatre launches its second season, one of 22 weeks, two more than the first.

On the strength of what was afforded by this last program with guests Sir Tyrone himself and Oliver Rea, artistic and administrative directors, respectively, plaudits must go to director Tom Ruben and to producer-moderator Sheldon Goldstein.

It was Ruben, a WLOL executive, who smartly conceived the idea of the series and played a major part in putting the programs together. Goldstein, a U. of Minnesota tv and radio stations' director and speech instructor, worked with Ruben in shaping the praiseworthy format and also appeared on the programs as interviewer. The two together decided what questions would succeed in generating the most audience interest.

This final program stood forth as informative and engrossing for stage drama fans. It boasted the kind of spontaneity which accrues when guests are unaware in advance of what they'll be asked. The manner in which the questions were shot at them and the way these queries were answered brought smoothness and, at the same time, fast pacing. It was the sort of conversation conducive to interest and enjoyment particularly for Guthrie Theatre followers.

On this final program Sir Tyrone and Rea made known next season's plans along with aims, policy and endeavors which were not disclosed in the former's recent bylined newspaper article on these subjects. Both also had something to say about some of the things which transpired the opening season and problems that have arisen. They expressed gratitude, too, for the public's support.

With this series WLOL not only helped itself (all programs had a commercial sponsor). It also performed a laudable service for the theatre and a noteworthy service for the community. This latter inasmuch as leading citizens' financial contributions made possible the project which culturally and economically stands forth as a magnificent asset for the Twin Cities. It's a project that attracts many transients and, thus, helps biz generally and also one that lands much valuable publicity nationally and internationally for Minneapolis and St. Paul.

parallel or duplicate that of the NAB Code.

In fact he sounded like NAB president LeRoy Collins (who also was on the dais) when he said: "I recognize the sincerity and good work of the National Assn. of Broadcasters . . . and that many fine licensees have no problems of over-commercialization. I recognize the . . . self-regulation . . . by the subscribers to Codes, and of the progress being made."

Henry also made it clear that his chief interest focussed on the clutter, not on their content. On this score he told the audience, "Except for matters such as fraud and deception, problems of content should be handled by forces inside the industry."

And since the networks and their owned stations now subscribe to and abide by the very code that Henry praises, it was clear to those on the dais that the networks and their stations are definitely among Henry's "fine licensees" which "have no problems of over-commercialization."

It's The Little Guy

From this point on, and throughout the remainder of his speech, the network heads on the dais enjoyed watching Henry tilt other broadcast windmills as he threatened the little broadcasters—the independent tv stations and small radio stations—with a deadly rain of regulatory fire.

Henry's television targets were specific: "the 'subtle, hook switch and stuff' of the Late Show. The viewer is baited with solid programming the first 20 minutes, switched to double and triple spotting once he's hooked, and stuffed with commercials every five minutes thereafter."

But his chief target wasn't tv—it was radio.

In castigating the radio stations, whose FCC logs reveal they are exceeding the most liberal NAB code commercial time restrictions, Henry asked: "Can it . . . be beyong the pale to ask whether, in the case of radio, a rule which allows a maximum of 18 and an average of 14 minutes of commercial time in any one hour would prevent stations from giving reasonable service to advertisers? Must radio stations really devote to commercials more than 30% of their peak listening hours in order to live healthily, if not handsomely? . . . I would therefore ask—indeed, I would appeal to every knowledgeable person within the industry for hard, concrete information which will allow the Commission to reach a fair judgment."

It became clear (to those on the dais) that when Henry said: "Over-commercialization is . . . where the public interest at some point clashes with private interests," that the "private interests" he is really after are the small and fringe tv stations, together with literally thousands of radio stations.

Thus Henry demonstrated to the tv "fat cats" that, as he said at the outset of his speech, he has "nothing but the friendliest feelings . . . for . . . many fine broadcasters."

Meantime, a controversy has started between Henry and broadcasters he regards as less than "fine." For example, the New York Daily News, owner of the indie WPIX, lost no time in editorializing against Henry for censoring the commercial and curtailing free enterprise.

It appears a new kind of FCC vs broadcasters "Sound and Fury" is in the making. Since it does not involve the tv networks, Henry's dais friends hope and trust it will keep him and his FCC colleagues occupied for a long time to come.

WHN 2-Yr. Deal For N. Y. Mets

WHN will carry the New York Mets (National League) baseball games for the next two years. Team's radio coverage for previous two years was on WABC.

A WHN spokesman says the station was approached by J. Walter Thompson ad agency to take over the radio play-by-play. JWT reps Rheingold beer, main bankroller of the Mets. Final pact (with options) was signed between George Weiss, Mets prexy, and John Moler, prexy and general manager of the Storer station.

WABC, which had contracted on an annual basis for the coverage, said that it again this year submitted its proposals for another season, but was turned down.

WHN, under the call letters WMGM, was for many years carrier for the New York Dodger ball games before the team went west. Station a.a. this fall has the schedule of the New York Jets American Football League games.

will include some of the ideas which Minow propounded while he was FCC chief.

In the area of job opportunities, Minow-Laurent will recommend that all broadcasters adhere to the Fair Employment Practices Commission code as a precondition for getting a license.

The book will also urge the networks to give substantial economic incentives to sponsorship of public service programming. One idea that has been kicked around is the proposal that sponsors be given one free hour for every hour that they pay for.

The book will also accent Minow's theories about educational tv. In this connection, the former FCC head has urged the educational broadcasters to make a tremendous effort to devise an American history program which would utilize every possible dramatic and documentary device. Minow has estimated the cost of such a project at about $10,000,000 a sum that could be raised with the help of civic-minded corporations individuals, and foundations.

Minow-Laurent will offer no panaceas for what ails the broadcasting industry. The book will reiterate Minow's belief that the real alternative to governmental regulation is the opening up of the tv spectrum to many more station operators. As long as the supply is limited to some 500 to 600 stations, governmental regulation cannot be avoided. If, however, enough stations were in the field, regulation by the market place would be possible.

Irish TV

when a customer is fiscally weak or ailing.

Such an offer is particularly attractive to the 1,000,000 viewer commercial network which, producing nearly half of its 50 hours of programming per week, is very conscious of the need to keep costs way, way down.

Major snag gumming up the works so far as the Irish-British transactions go, however, is an Equity clause demanding 25-30% repeat fees for programs shown in Southern Ireland which, according to Equity, is outside the U.K. Sheridan hopes to start some sort of movement over here to get the clause altered in such a way as to include Southern Ireland screenings in artists' initial fee.

making a deal for the latter, however.

There's increased emphasis this year on what Thrower calls "special category" programming. Besides the Susskind show and the Chi symph series, WPIX will have the usual monthly specials produced by its own public affairs staff, the Wolper specials, two weekly half hours, "Local Issues" and "Congressional Report," slanted to the are, "Probe," will continue with the expanded news program instituted this year.

Station's kid block, stripped from 4 to 7 p.m., has been a problem what with tough competition from WNEW-TV this year, and, following a national trend, WPIX has taken emphasis off the straight runoff of cartoons et. al. to stress the personality. Emcees in a new lineup are Eddie Lawrence, Chuck McCann and John Zacherley. There's new product for the strip also, including Trans-Lux's "Hercules," the "Jungle Jim" feature films and "Bomba" (retitled "Zim Bomba" for Pix airing). And new producers, with Terry Bennett, formerly of WBKB, Chicago, and Chet Dowling, formerly with WJAR-TV, Providence, forming a new kid-block production team.

With the new slate locked in, Thrower is the man to know that 17 hours a day (no web feeds) is a helluvah lot of programming, and, he says, "Just keeping up with the inventory and getting it off within the limits of contract and so forth, is quite a job in logistics in itself."

Then there's the job of reminding Madison Ave. that the baseball season is over (Yank's coverage), and they can once again latch on to those prime time avails.

comedy series. "Perry Mason" follows and goes back-to-back with the new "First Night" dramatic series of written-for-tv plays.

But while the Corporation has confined itself to significant changes only in the drama output—i.e. "First Night" and "Festival"—the commercial web has sparked several new shows both midweek and at weekends.

On Saturdays, for instance, ATV premieres "Sentimental Agent" (against BBC's "Wells Fargo"), "The Charlie Drake Show" against "Comedy Playhouse") and "Espionage" (against features). From ABC-TV, the weekend-only indie operator. Al Read gets his big break in a comedy skein called "Life And Al Read" which appears to be main contender for Sunday afternoon honors.

For its North and Midlands operation, ABC-TV has picked up "The Greatest Show On Earth" which it slots in the key Sunday berth at 7.30 p.m. ATV at weekends in London has elected to pick up "Beverly Hillbillies" which it slots after the "Armchair Theatre" — "Drama '63" series on Sunday nights.

Otherwise, like BBC, the commercial boys are trusting to the established hits like Associated - Rediffusion's "No Hiding Place," Granada-TV's "Coronation Street," ATV's "Emergency Ward 10" and ABC-TV's "The Avengers" and several others to provide a Monday-to-Friday and weekend anchor which they hope will stand the strain of Corporation's hit-'em early tactics.

Cleveland — Ken Bichl, one-time KYW news editor who was a key factor in the recent AFTRA - Westinghouse strike, joins the WHK news staff replacing Dave Buckel, who switched to WEWS, succeeding Joel Daly, who moved into the news spot at WJW-TV formerly held by Warren Guthrie.

KTTV'S UNPRECEDENTED 6-YEAR NABET PACT

Hollywood, Oct. 1.

KTTV and National Assn. of Broadcast Employees and technicians yesterday (Mon.) signed an unprecendted six-year agreement, which has been ratified by NABET.

Station said this is the longest term pact for engineers yet negotiated in the broadcast industry. It calls for immediate salary hikes; inclusion in the company pension plan for union employees during the pact period; improvement of sick leave benefits; streamlining and improvement of grievance machinery and severance pay for terminations resulting from automation.

Period of pact is from last July 1 to July 1, 1969. Robert E. Pauteli, director of personnel for Metromedia, which recently acquired KTTV, headed station's negotiation team.

programs should be the keynotes on radio.

During prime evening tv time, 8 p.m. to midnight, he felt radio reached a small but discriminating public who should get deeper emissions of a higher and more challenging intellectual content. These would be aimed at people who have no tv as yet, and so deserve programs as good and full as video, plus those dissatisfied with some tv offerings.

There will be one major station that will be on 24 hours a day and cover all of France. Programs will be styled for all types of listeners, from rural to urban and young to more mature. There will be pop and classical music interludes, info and regional tidbits, and in the evening two different programs aimed at young people with a more entertaining motif and a more serious offering for the more mature.

Charlotte — Johnny Evans, 20-year veteran of broadcasting took over the WBT Radio mike to kick off WBT's new 24-hour continuous broadcasting service. Christened "Tempo 'Til Dawn," Evans show fills the midnight to 5 a.m. segment of WBT's broadcast day with pop music, news, weather and traffic vignettes.

Water's Too Cold, So Capitol Shifts From Surfing to Hot-Rod as Sales Peg

Now that the summer season is over, Capitol Records is switching its music emphasis from the surf to the road. The diskery is going on an allout kick to follow the surf music fad with something it's calling Hot Rod music.

As it did with surfing music, Cap is banking on The Beach Boys and Dick Dale to get its motor music campaign rolling. Cap's decision to start its engines roaring for Hot Rod music was based mainly on the success of several singles by The Beach Boys and a pickup album called "Shut Down." The LP, title tune of which was one of the Beach Boys' single disks, has racked up sales of over 150,000 since its release June 3.

To put its Hot Rod campaign in high gear, Capitol will have five Hot Rod albums on the market within the next two weeks. In addition to "Shut Down," the label's initial motor-music catalog will consist of "Li'l Deuce Coupe" by The Beach Boys (again the title comes from a clicko single by the instrumental-vocal, group), and "Checkered Flag" by Dick Dale and the Del-Tones.

Rounding out Cap's new motor LPs are two the label made in conjunction with Hod Rod magazine. They are "Hot Rod Rally," featuring all original tunes by three groups never recorded before, and "The Big Sounds Of The Drags," a "sound" album recorded live at major drag meets around the country.

Voyle Gilmore, artists & repertoire veepee at Cap, anticipates a faster takeoff for Hot Rod music than that of surf music. "Surfing music finally became big, but it took a year to build it," Gilmore said. "This was simply because surfing was virtually unknown outside of Southern California. Hot-rodding, however, is practically the national pasttime among teenagers."

Cap's distributing organization will promote the Hot Rod music message to teeners via special ad-publicity gimmicks. Deejays will be given kits containing a 12-inch Hot-Rod music sampler LP, a T-shirt imprinted with a caricature of a hot-rod driving deejay, and a dictionary of hot-rod jargon. Latter will be similar to Cap's lexicon of surfing terms, which already has had three printings. The dictionary was prepared by Capitol with the cooperation of Hot Rod mag, with which the diskery has maintained close liaison for the launching of the campaign.

RCA's 60% Of Italo Disk Mkt.

Rome, Oct. 1.

Between 50 and 60% of the Italian disk market has been taken over in recent years by RCA Italiana, according to company prexy Enrico Galeazzi. He made the assertion at RCA's 10th anniversary ceremonies held here last week at the RCA plant outside Rome.

Occasion was marked by presentation of 10-year medals and awards to group of first-day employees, including Galeazzi himself Frank M. Folsom, board member (here from New York who was credited with "having started it all."

Ceremony, attended by several hundred employees, Eternal City VIPS, and visiting officials, as well as many of RCA Italiana's artists, was concluded by a detailed inteesting and humorous exposition of musical achievements — and a presentation of the new Dynagroove system — by RCA veep & g.m. George R. Marek and spanning the past 10 years.

First Dynagroove disks to go on sale in Italy Oct. 1 will be the Leontyne Price rendition of "Madame Butterfly."

ASCAP Meets Oct. 30

The American Society of Composers, Authors & Publishers has scheduled its next general meeting Oct. 30 at New York's Waldorf-Astoria.

Members who want to propose amendments at the meeting are required to file, in writing, with the board of directors at least eight days in advance of the conclave.

THE SPRINGFIELDS IN SURPRISE SWAN SONG

London, Oct. 1.

The Springfields, one of Britain's top vocal groups, have disbanded. They played their last date together at Blackpool on Sunday (29). The trio made the surprise decision a few days ago.

Tom Springfield, who founded the group in 1960, plans to devote his entire time to composing, and arranging. He will also form an orchestra. His sister, Dusty, is rehearsing a stage act and, Mike Pickworth (who completed the two) will also do a solo act as Mike Hurst. Each has a recording contract with Philips and their various careers will continue to be handled by agent Emlyn Griffiths.

ASCAP Grossed $25,820,000 For 1st 8 Mos. of '63

Los Angeles, Oct. 1.

Gross revenue of $25,820,000 was racked up by American Society of Composers, Authors & Publishers for first eight months of 1963 ending in August, N. Y. exec George Hoffman reported to local members last week at semi-annual sesh held at BevHilton Hotel. Of this, he said, $21,094,000 is earmarked for distribution to members. ASCAP treasurer Jack Bregman was detained in N. Y.

Hoffman disclosed that salaries and expenses of union's home-office and 23 branches for the period amounted to $2,381,000 and $2,344,000, respectively.

Discussing revenue melon, Hoffman stated that first such distribution was made in April. It totalled $6,703,000, including coin set aside for foreign distribs. Second, sliced in July, was $7,364,000. Third, due in October, hasn't yet been completed but Hoffman told members it's expected to exceed the second payment.

Official pointed out that overhead is figured at 18.3% of income, which means that out of every $100 in take $81.70 is marked for distribution.

"We are working on the income from foreign distribution now," Hoffman informed the 400-plus members who attended meeting. "It will be approximately $3,200,000 and should go out the first week in December."

Prexy Stanley Adams, who accompanied Hoffman to Coast for meeting, reported the "current progress" on jukebox bill, now before Congress and also discussed the problem of public domain tunes being used with minor changes and with no credit given the original composers.

"This is a moral, rather than a legal issue," he said, "but we are going to try to correct it in the revision of the copyright law."

Columbia, S. C., Tooters To Stay on With AFM

The financially troubled Local 21 (Columbia, S.C.) will not pursue the doctrine of disaffiliation from the American Federation of Musicians. Although it was reported in VARIETY last week that members of the Local's exec board had voted for disaffiliation, Paul La Rosa and William Jackson, 21's president and secretary, respectively, contend that the Local will remain in the Federation and will look for ways to meet its fiscal obligations.

The Federation is sympathetic to the problems now besetting Local 21 and this week a representative from AFM president Herman Kenin's office will be in Columbia to assist in ironing out the Local's difficulties.

The Local's financial plight stems from the AFM's recently proposed $6 per capita tax and the loss of the 10% traveling tax collection.

Additional dates for France, Germany, Italy, and Sweden are being filled in by the Associated Booking office.

Col Ups Glancy To A&R Veepee

Kenneth Glancy has taken over the newly-created post of veepee of artists & repertoire at Columbia Records. The appointment will now bring Leonard Burkat, director of Masterworks a&r, and David Kapralik, director of pop a&r under Glancy's supervision.

Irving Townsend, veepee of Col's Coast operations, will coordinate a&r activities in the Hollywood recording studios under Glancy's direction. Previously, a&r divisions on both Coasts reported to Goddard Lieberson, Col president.

Prior to his new assignment, Glancy was veepee of the Columbia Records Sales Corp., directing the label's sales and merchandising programs through distributors and branches. He took over this spot in February, 1963, after a number of major promotions including general manager of Columbia Record Distributors in 1958 and veepee of Columbia Record Distributors in '60. He has been with Col since '50.

As veepee in charge of a&r, Glancy will now be responsible to Lieberson for all a&r operations within the U.S. and the coordination of these activities with other departments of Col and Epic Records, Columbia's subsidiary label.

British Cleffers, Pubs In Hassle Over Film Score Royalty Fees

London, Oct. 1.

The cleffer-publisher wrangle over who should get what from film score royalties—an issue which stopped the annual meet of the Performing Right Society—is developing into an all out war between the two music biz factions.

Following a circular put out by PRS presenting both sides of the case the Music Publishers Assn., the Songwriters Guild and other industry associations are working furiously to sway opinions of PRS members (all of whom have been asked to take part in a proxy vote in the issue).

MPA has published a document that states: "Certain composer members of the PRS wish to establish a ruling that irrespective of any contract between composer and publisher the fees for unpublished background music shall be paid 100% to the composer."

PRS' Rule 5(g) currently stipulates that unless a publisher "works on" a background score, he is not entitled to any of the composer's royalties.

MPA "rally to arms" missive continues: "The publishers are asking the PRS to honor composers' and writers' agreements entered into with publisher (regarding background scores). As the majority of these contracts for composers (to write background music for films) depends largely on the publishers' efforts, the publishers contend they are entitled to share the performing fees earned. This is accepted by most other performing right societies throughout the world."

MPA also contends that the cleffer is a free agent and thus need not sign away any of his fee to a pubber. But if he does so, the Association thinks the PRS should honor the contract and pay the

Report Justice Dept. Weighs Antitrust Move Vs. BMI; FTC Probes SESAC

Washington, Oct. 1.

Officials of the Department of Justice refused today (Tues.) to comment on widespread reports of an impending move against Broadcast Music Inc. At the same time, the Federal Trade Commission revealed that it has begun an investigation of SESAC's broadcast licensing practices.

Although the Justice Dept, remained closemouthed on BMI, reports were circulating that the performing rights society may be subject to an antitrust consent decree. BMI is owned by a number of independent broadcasters.

Meanwhile, the FTC disclosed that it has followed up several broadcaster complaints about SESAC with an investigation. The Government agency's New York office has been ordered to get the probe underway, officials said here.

"Quite a few" of the complaints against SESAC, the FTC said, came from small broadcasters.

Hints of the FTC investigation first leaked out in a letter from a Commission lawyer to Clarence Jones, prez of WQIZ Radio, St. George, S.C. Jones said he was threatened with a $4,200 suit unless he signed a five-year, $20-per-month license to cover SESAC music. The suit, Jones asserted, was based on SESAC's claim that it had monitored WQIZ for a month and heard several songs licensed by the society.

In a letter to Jones, FTC attorney Anthony de Phillips said the Commission "has been and is presently conducting an investigation of SESAC Inc. involving alleged practices substantially similar to those about which you complain."

The SESAC probe was initiated by the division of general trade restraints of the FTC.

The Justice Dept.'s move against BMI is somewhat similar to investigation into the activities of the American Society of Composers, Authors & Publishers which resulted in a consent decree.

GEORGE LEE TO HEAD WB RECORDS IN EAST

George Lee has been set as director of eastern operations for Warner Bros. Records. He'll function in artists & repertoire being responsible for the signing of new talent, supervising recording sessions, purchasing masters, as well as maintaining liaison with the WB exec staff on the Coast. In addition he'll handle administrative activities of the company in the east.

Lee has been active in the diskery-music publishing fields via affiliation with Jacques Kluger in Zodiac Music and Palette Records, and with Robert Mellon's publishing operations. At one time, he was a singer with Stan Kenton's orch.

UN All-Star LP In Industry Ride Via Singles Push

"Three Billion Millionaires," the album sponsored by the U.S. Committe for United Nations, is headed for a push in the Broadway legituner style. Songs from the album's score are being picked up by record companies for a singles push and production numbers are being set for visual exposure. (The title refers to the 3,000,000,000 people in the world with a legacy of freedom.)

The album, an original record production, is the work of Robert Allen, who wrote the music and handled the musical production, and Peter Farrow and Diane Lampert, who wrote the book and lyrics. Proceeds from the sale of the LP will go to the U.S. Committee for the United Nations and UNICEF. United Artists Records, which is handling the distribution of the package, has an initial pressing of 20,000 copies ready to go into market within the next two weeks.

There's a possibility that the album may be transferred in its entirety into a tv special but in the meantime, many of the performers in the LP's all-star cast have put the songs in their repertoire and are filming sequences to be shown on their respective tv shows.

Starring in the album are Jack Benny, Carol Burnett, Wally Cox, Bing Crosby, Sammy Davis Jr., Judy Garland, Danny Kaye, George Maharis and Terry-Thomas.

On the disk end, such labels as Epic, Columbia, Capitol and RCA Victor are prepping a singles push on several of the songs from the score. Among the tunes headed for a singles pullout are "One More Land" (six recordings have already been set), "The Tower Of Babel" and the title song.

The all-star package was a year in preparation and the cash outlay came to only $25,000 because all the stars donated their services.

The album was produced and narrated by Arnold Michaelis. Ray Ellis conducted the orch and handled the orchestrations. In addition to composing the score, Allen acted as artists & repertoire man on the recording sessions.

Col Lines Up New Swiss, Far East Links

Columbia Records has lined up new licensing arrangements for the distribution of CBS Records in Switzerland and the Malaysian Federation. Negotiations for the two new associations were completed by Harvey Schein, veepee and general manager of CRI International.

In Switzerland, the new CBS affiliate is Phonag AG with headquarters in Winterthur, near Zurich. The company is supervised by Hellmuth Bischof and Hellmuth Kolbe.

Checker's 456G In O'seas Swing

Chubby Checker racked up grosses totaling $456,000 during his tour of Ireland and the Continent. The tour began July 19 and continued until Sept. 8.

High point of Checker's tour was in Vienna where he gave one concert before a sellout crowd of 18,000 for a gross of $30,000.

Checker began his tour in Ireland where he performed in two cities each day for 14 consecutive days. The shows were put on in dance halls rather than in theatres as originally planned to meet the demand for tix. Total gross for the 14 days was $95,000.

In Hamburg, Germany, Checker gave two performances on two consecutive days at the Star Club, resulting in $12,000 gross. This was followed by two sellout shows at the Opera House in Scheveningen, Holland. Gross there was $11,000.

Checker next toured Sweden for six days, appearing in outdoor amphitheatres and arenas. He drew an attendance of 50,000 for a $100,000 gross. In Italy he appeared in two night clubs, grossing $18,000. He then played 12 concert dates in Switzerland and Germany drawing 93,000 people and grossing $190,000.

At the end of the tour, Checker went to Berlin to record two singles in German, which will be released exclusively in Germany. The songs are "Autobahn Baby" and "Troo-La-La." He then went to England, where he also recorded and appeared on two tv shows.

Col Sets Swan

Walter Swan has been appointed operations manager at Columbia Records' L. A., distributorship, succeeding Mert Paul who has become manager of Col's new Minneapolis branch.

He'll be in charge of the internal operations of the branch and will assist Paul Peppin, credit manager, with credit control.

Gary's 'Star,' Clay's 'Greatest,' Martino's 'Rose,' Muller's 'Move,' De Cormier Singers Top New LPs

JOHN GARY: "CATCH A RISING STAR" (RCA Victor). John Gary has been earmarked for an allout push by RCA Victor and his debut disk shows that he rated the attention. He's an attractive balladeer with a straightforward style that gets to the meat of the song in an effective and charming way. He's a natural for femme approval but the stags in the listening crowd will go for the clean and winning delivery. The debut disk offers a variety of ballad moods and he catches hold with each one. The package is an effective opening shot in the diskery's buildup campaign for Gary and it's sure to pay off in all respects.

CASSIUS CLAY: "I AM THE GREATEST" (Columbia). This could well turn out to be a sleeper comedy hit. Backed up by occasional bits of music, sound effects, a chorus of actors and with the help of a cooperative studio audience, heavyweight fight contender Cassius Clay here essays considerable verbiage on his favorite subject—himself. One could tire of such a redundant message but the LP is saved from this fate by clever production and the spirited style of Clay. It turns out to be a fun session which could catch on and take off. There's considerable sharp material involved, and it has been smartly packaged for maximum impact.

AL MARTINO: "PAINTED, TAINTED ROSE" (Capitol). Al Martino's disk comback via Capitol began several months ago with the clicko single, "I Love You Because," and followed with the best-selling LP with the same song title. His most recent single click is "Painted, Tainted Rose" and the LP following with the song as a lure is sure to follow his previous single-to-LP pattern. In addition to the current hit, Martino tackles a flock of standard material with his big ballad belting style and wins hands down. It's a high-powered package with plenty of programming material to choose from: "Harbor Lights," "You Always Hurt The One You Love," "To Each His Own" and the currently popular "More" are among the spinnable entries. Peter DeAngelis' orch supplies the strong backing for his hearty pipes.

WERNER MULLER ORCH: "ON THE MOVE" (London). This is one of the newest packages in London's "Phase 4" stereo series and the audio buffs will find it hard to resist. Although the sound engineers are given full opportunity to pull off their audio tricks, Werner Muller remains in control of the proceedings and keeps in melodic perspective. His orch is rich and colorful and each section comes to the fore with force but only if its emergence has meaning and not just for sound kicks. The repertoire peg is on the global music scene which gives Muller a wide melodic range with overall spinning appeal. Among the tunes recommended for programming pullout are "I Love Paris," "Vaya Con Dios," "Calcutta," "A Foggy Day" and "Arriverderci Roma."

THE ROBERT DE CORMIER FOLK SINGERS: (Command). The folk music field is wide open, especially to a vocal group coordinator like Robert De Cormier. Under his direction a folk group and a folk song take on new meaning and a vitality that pulls attention. "The Hammer Song," "Where Have All The Flowers Gone" and "Bella Bimba" are some of the familiar items that are given a new excitement and will lead buyers to the package.

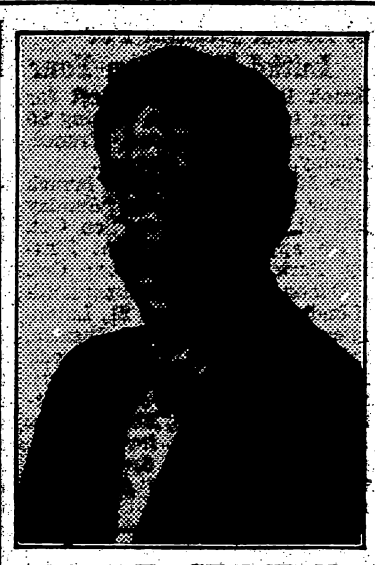
BROOK BENTON: "BEST BALLADS OF BROADWAY" (Mercury). Although Brook Benton has made his way in the single-disk field as a fave of the teen set, he's a vocalist of standard stature as evidenced by his handling of the dozen legitunes that make up this Broadway representation. He's a topflight balladeer and the material prepared for him here by arranger-conductor Luchi DeJesus gives him every opportunity to show his stuff. The material is tailor-made for the "good music" programmers, of course, but even those whose spinning is pegged for the juve ear will find "Make Someone Happy," "I've Never Been In Love Before," "Till There Was You," "Hello Young Lovers" and "Love Look Away" suitable to their tastes.

SAMMY DAVIS JR.: "TREASURY OF GOLDEN HITS" (Reprise). For his latest disk outing, Sammy Davis Jr. has re-recorded a collection of tunes most readily identified with him. Morty Stevens, who provided the arrangements, conducts the session and the result is a solid effort by the singer. Included are such as "Hey There," "That Old Black Magic," "Birth of the Blues," "And This Is My Beloved." Davis gives 'em a big, stylish treatment. Stevens' work also shines. It's a fine set for Davis and should also provide programmers and consumers with lots to approve.

JACKIE DE SHANNON: (Liberty). The folk song writers never had it so good. In addition to getting lotsa mileage out of their material from the authentic guitar pluckers they're now picking up interesting interpretations from rocking soul singers like Jackie De Shannon. Her style stretches the folk idiom a bit but she puts it into a groove that the hip teeners can dig. "Blowin' In The Wind," "If I Had A Hammer," "500 Miles" and "Puff (The Magic Dragon)" have all received plenty of disk action but Miss De Shannon's way makes 'em all worth hearing again.

JUNE CHRISTY: "THE INTIMATE MISS CHRISTY" (Capitol). Working with a simple backing of guitar, bass or drums, June Christy has lotsa opportunity to showcase her intriguing vocal phrasings. It emerges as an intimate package that will please her fans and pick up new friends along the way. Standout sides for the programmers are "Misty," "Spring Is Here" and "Fly Me To The Moon."

BURL IVES: "THE BEST OF BURL'S FOR BOYS AND GIRLS" (Decca). Culled from Decca's expansive library of Burl Ives material, this disk is aimed primarily at the kid market. It succeeds nicely as a moppet platter. Tunes are selected for maximum fun value, and Ives gives 'em performances which match the potential of the material. It's a slickly-assembled set which should be another solid catalog item for Decca's durable Ives collection.



LAWRENCE WELK
Has Another Hit Dot Record!
"BLUE VELVET," B/W "FIESTA"

Tunes include "Blue Tail Fly," "Polly Wolly Doodle," "Shoo Fly," "Kentucky Babe," "The Ballad of Davy Crockett" and others.

BILL PURSELL: "CHASING A DREAM" (Columbia). Bill Pursell solidified his position in the romantic mood music field several months ago with "Our Winter Love" and from now on it appears to be an easy ride for him if he sticks to that genre. He does just that in this new roundup of moody melodies making it a natural for a big programming spread. His rich keyboard styling gets an added boost from Grady Martin's orch and together they make much of the likes of "More," "Autumn Magic," "Summer Is Gone," "Chasing A Dream" and "Pride."

LEON BIBB: "ENCORE" (Liberty). One of the leaders among folk vocalists, Leon Bibb displays another fine set of tunes in the popular genre. His expressive style is nicely captured, backed by Stuart Scharf on guitar. An audience adds to the spirit of the session as Bibb mixes his repertoire with various tempos and types of tunes. Mostly sticking to a balla groove, the singer gives emotional readings of his material which often weave a hypnotic effect on the listener. He's a skillful artist, and this polish is ably showcased in this disk which should enjoy lotsa attention.

Col Cuts CBS-TV Score

A soundtrack album of the new CBS-TV series, "East Side, West Side," will be issued by Columbia Records. Music is by Kenyon Hopkins and is published by Edward B. Marks.

Band Biz Still Alive & Clicking

Peter Duchin, Repeating At St. Regis, N. Y., Sees Potential In Juve Hoofology

Reports of the death of the band business have been greatly exaggerated. That's the sentiment held by young orch leader-pianist Peter Duchin, Decca Records execs, who record the Duchin orch, and the management of N.Y.'s St. Regis Hotel, who has booked the orch for its second September-June run at its Maisonette Room. The band opened at the Maisonette last week.

Success of the Duchin orch, which was formed only two years ago, attests to the fact that a band can still come out on top these days. The factors working in a band's favor are 1) people still want to dance; 2) more good tunes that can be out into danceband books are becoming popular, and 3) there are more "good music" radio stations available to help in the exposure buildup of the band's disk work.

According to Duchin, such teen dance crazes as The Mashed Potato and The Monkey don't have to be limited to the juve set if they are worked out with a proper dance tempo. The beat is basically jazz, he pointed out, and it's attractive to the society set as well as the blue-jeaners. On the good song level, Duchin mentioned that more new tunes with big melodic lines are breaking through these days and can be added to his book. Such songs as "I Left My Heart In San Francisco, "Days Of Wine And Roses" and "As Long As He Needs Me" are examples of the new songs that have gone into the Duchin book.

On the disk level, Decca is prepping release of Duchin's fourth LP later this month. According to Harry Meyerson, of Decca's artists & repertoire staff, who helms the Duchin dates, the disk aim is to duplicate the sound and the beat of the live dates. The purpose is to get people dancing again and from the Duchin pull at the Maisonette last year and the long list of society and or debutante parties being lined up for Duchin by the Ashley-Steiner-Famous Artists agency, it's evident that dance bands are still very much alive.

Nippon's 'Sukiyaki' Singer Due For U.S. Dates

Tokyo, Oct. 1.

Plans are in the works to get Kyu Sakamoto, Japanese singer, a U.S. and European spread. The singer, who clicked in the American disk market several months ago with the Capitol release of "Sukiyaki," has signed a deal with General Artists Corp. for representation in all media throughout the world outside Japan. The agreement is for three years with options for two years.

Immediate target for Sakamoto are tv shots in New York and Europe next January. Further plans will be pursued as soon as he can learn enough English to work in night clubs and pix.

Sakamoto recently made a brief trip to L.A. to videotape some songs for two stanzas of the "Steve Allen Show."

'Here's Love' Keys Col's Xmas Drive

The preem of the Meredith Willson musical, "Here's Love," on Broadway tomorrow (Thurs.) will mark the opening shot in Columbia Records' 1963 Christmas campaign. The tuner, a musicalization of the "Miracle On 34th St." pic pegged on a Macy's Santa Claus, will be put into the original Broadway cast album groove by Columbia.

On the classical side, Col will again roll with the Mormon Tabernacle Choir in a teamup with Leonard Bernstein and the N.Y. Philharmonic. Recorded recently in Salt Lake City during the Philharmonic's recent tour, the package marks the first time that the orch has been coupled with the Mormons. It's also the first time the symph will have an entry for the Christmas catalog. The set will be titled "The Joy Of Christmas." Another Masterworks entry is longhair organist E. Power Biggs in a collection of carols called "Music For A Merry Christmas."

Col's pop push for Christmas will include LPs by Andy Williams, Robert Goulet, the New Christy Minstrels, Andre Kostelanetz and Paul Taubman. In addition, Col is adding to its electronically rechanneled for stereo catalog of monaural bestsellers, two longtime bestsellers: Ken Griffin's "The Organ Plays at Christmas" and Norman Luboff's "Songs Of Christmas."

Col's big Yule guns in recent years have been "Christmas Sing Along With Mitch," "Holiday Sing Along With Mitch" and Johnny Mathis' "Merry Christmas." All have sold over 1,000,000 LPs. Last season Col clicked with "The Magnificent Sound Of Christmas" featuring the Philadelphia Orchestra and the Mormon Tabernacle Choir. The package sold over 800,000 copies.

CAEDMON PACKAGES NBC'S 'VAN GOGH' TRACK

The soundtrack of "Vincent Van Gogh: A Self-Portrait," a prize-winning NBC News tv special, will be issued as an LP by Caedmon Records. Lee J. Cobb is the voice of Van Gogh and Martin Gabel is the narrator.

The package will contain an eight-page color portfolio of paintings and drawings used in the tv program. Claus Virch, curator of paintings for the Metropolitan Museum of Art, has written notes for the album.

Lou Hazam wrote and produced the program, which won such honors as the George Foster Peabody Award. He also wrote and produced, the NBC News tv special, "Shakespeare: Soul Of An Age," which Caedmon released last year.

CLGA 1st Annual Concert Tunes Up 36G For Treasury

Los Angeles, Oct. 1.

There were 60 Academy Award "Oscars" and 310 nominations represented in Wednesday night's (25) Composers and Lyricists Guild first annual "Music From Hollywood" concert at the Hollywood Bowl, an affair so packed with powerhouse musical talent that it could only have been presented as a Guild attraction.

Surprisingly, with 14 of Hollywood's top tunesters conducting their own outstanding film and television music, the Red Doff-produced show, staged by exec director and emcee Johnny Green and scripted by John Block, moved with smooth, slick precision.

Only goof of the evening, in fact, was on the part of Green who almost forgot to introduce the "Grand Old Man" of the Guild, composer Max Steiner, from the audience, whose "Tara," from "Gone With the Wind," and "Theme From A Summer Place" were conducted by Percy Faith.

Composers and Lyricists Guild of America first annual concert, Hollywood Bowl, Sept. 24, 1963; $10 top.

With composers repped in person, lyricists were repped on the impressive program by Mahalia Jackson, singing a Morton Gould arrangement of Dimitri Tiomkin's and Paul Francis Webster's "Green

Chi Negro Local 208 Mulling Dowry In 'Shotgun' Splice with White Local 10

Chicago, Oct. 1.

Negro Local 208 of the American Federation of Musicians will hold what will probably be its last annual meeting next Sunday (6), and the prime subject of the meeting will be how much of a dowry it can get in a "shotgun wedding" merger with the big and predominantly white Local 10.

Herman D. Kenin, international prexy of the AFM, has give the two locals until March 1, 1964, to merge, and the jockeying for an advantageous bargaining position has already begun in earnest. It's more than just a local issue, since the AFL-CIO will no doubt use the integration of the two Chi locals as an example to pressure the remaining 38 segregated musicians' locals in the country to integrate.

In the welter of charges between the two locals in recent weeks, the tenor has changed perceptibly from the social issues involved in segregation to the problems of combining unequal vested interests in a business merger. Stripped of a lot of sloganeering, it appears that the key factors at issue are how many of the officers and board members of the Negro local will end up in paying non-elective jobs in the merged local. Even more to the point, for how long of contract, for how much money, and with what kind of guarantees.

It is obvious that Local 208 does not intend to trade 61 years of separately successful unionism for the cause of integration. They are quick to point out that they did not choose segregation, but were forced into it, and that it is the same AFM that is pressuring them to give up their identity that gave them a segregated charter in 1902.

In the area of public relations, Local 10 prexy Barney Richards has a substantial headstart in creating the best atmosphere for his side in the coming negotiations. Local 208 prexy Harry Gray has been reluctant to spell out his position, apparently figuring that vested interest, legitimate as it may be, has a crass sound alongside the current tide for integration and equality.

As a result, Gray's vague statements about assurances of equal employment opportunity under a merger and adequate Negro representation have cast him in the image of dragging his heels in the integration move. A Local 10 lawyer replied: "Gray believes in equality, but he wants his members to be a little more equal than the others.",

Last week, Gray proposed that former Local 10 prexy James C. Petrillo be called in to mediate the merger. Richards, who defeated Petrillo for the presidency last January, turned thumbs down on the proposal.

Local 10 continued its war of attrition by organizing 200 Negro musicians for a rally last week "to correct the present evils of Local 208 and at the same time avail ourselves of the benefits of belong-

John G. Briggs Jr., author, musicologist and former music critic for the N. Y. Post and music editor of NBC, has been named program commentator for the Philadelphia Orchestra. He'll assume duties formerly handled by Philadelphia music critics Max de Shauensee and the late Edwin H. Schloss.

A senior writer on the pub relations staff of Smith, Kline & French, Briggs will write the Orch's program notes in addition to his duties with the Philly-based pharmaceutical firm.

Louis Hood, publicity chief of the Philadelphia Orch, has resigned to become manager of the Opera Society of Washington, D. C., for the 1963-64 season, starting today (Tues.).

Liberty Records On Sales Block

Liberty Records is on the sales block. In a letter sent to stockholders last week, Lester Avnet, president of Avnet Electronics which owns the diskery, indicated that a sale is in the offing.

Avnet stated that the company's earnings for fiscal 1963 were adversely affected by unexpected and unsatisfactory results of the Liberty Records subsid. He said that substantial increases in selling, general and administrative expenses due in part to the opening by Liberty of its own distribution outlets were the principal causes of such results.

He also stated, "Your management is of course giving consideration to the steps to be taken to reverse the company's experience with Liberty Records, including the possible sale of such subsidiary. At the present time negotiation with respect to such a sale are being carried on. However, no assurance can be given that any such sale will be consummated."

Avnet purchased the Liberty label about two years ago on a stock transfer that gave three shares of Avnet for five shares of Liberty. It was a multi-million dollar transaction. Several months ago Liberty purchased the Imperial label in a $1,000,000-plus deal.

Inside Stuff—Music

"Sweet September," the British import composed by jazz pianist Bill McGuffie, is getting a hefty disk pickup in the U. S. The tune has already snared six recordings with the Sylvia Syms vocal treatment being rushed out on the Columbia label. Other diskings are by Artie Butler (20th Century-Fox), Carl Edmonson (Fraternity), Bill Evans (Verve), Pete Jolly Trio (Ava) and Jimmie Haskell (Capitol). The tune, originally an untitled instrumental segment in a forthcoming British film, is being published here by B. F. Wood, a Mills Music subsid. The song was first recorded by The Shadows for the EMI label and is due for release here via Atlantic Records. Stanley Mills, who heads Wood, had a lyric added Stateside by Peter Stanley and Lorraine Phillips.

Currently Stanley and Marty Mills are in Europe combining a vacation trip with discussions on the tune. They are huddling with the pic's producers, Gala World Productions, in London, for worldwide promotion and increased use of the melody in the film. While abroad the Mills boys will visit the various Mills Music branches in London, Paris, Rome, Milan, Madrid and West Berlin, as well bring some of their songs to the attention of European artists and record firms.

Frank Loesser, composer of "How To Succeed in Business Without Really Trying," will receive the 1963 Music Award of the State Fair of Texas. He will come to Dallas Oct. 7 to catch a performance of the musical comedy, which opens Oct. 4 at the Musical Hall, and will be presented with the award on the evening of Oct. 8 in the Cotton Bowl. Loesser is the fifth American musician to be recognized by the State Fair for significant accomplishments. Others who have received similar awards are Meredith Willson, Mitch Miller, Richard Rodgers and Arthur Fiedler.

Vincent Sherwood, music publisher's selling agent, has arranged with Lawrence Welk's Vogue Music through Frank Abramson, firm's New York manager, for the distribution of two editions of "Blue Velvet" for the Hammond organ. One is for the "Hammond Chord Organ" and one for "Hammond Pre-Set Console & Spinet" in the "Sing Along With Hammond" series. The arrangements are being made by John Warrington. The clicko single of the tune is by Bobby Vinton on the Epic label.

An item in last week's Tin Pan Valley inadvertently credited James Franklin of Mel-o-Tone Records as "being responsible for several song hits including 'My Happiness'." For the record, the "My Happiness" copyright has always been owned by the song's lyricist Betty Peterson Blasco through her Happiness Music Corp. and Davis has never had any connection with the song's promotion, ownership or writing.

Elliot Horne's 'Hiptionary' Digs The Whole Scene With Crazy Lingo and Doodles

Elliot Horne gloms the global gig in "The Hiptionary" (Simon & Schuster; $1.95). He's the cool world's Walter Lippmann and essential, too.

The 79-page paperback is a potpourri of essay and lexicography from Horne and some happy cartooning from Jack Davis. As an essayist, Horne is cynical about some aspects of the world's orchestration and hopeful about others. As a jive lingo specialist, he's emerged as the Eric Partridge of the hip. His essays are spiced with a way-out patter and a keen eye. Fortunately, the book is set up so that a glossary is aligned with the text to assist the squares in digging the Birdland banter.

Many of the jive phrases compiled by Horne may sound like sanskrit but the book may help bring them into cocktail party use. Some of them may even become a permanent part of the language.

Horne, incidentally, is with RCA Victor's press department. His working communiques come out of Webster's not "hepsters." Gros.

Peppino Di Capri, Italy's Top R&R Envoy, Wows Pizza Set in N.Y. Bow

Peppino di Capri, Italy's top rock 'n' roller, played to a near capacity crowd in his American debut at New York's Carnegie Hall Sunday afternoon (29), but they overflowed the stage at the end of the concert overturning a 10-foot flat and forcing the singer to flee to the safety of his dressing room. He played to a full house that evening at Brooklyn's Academy of Music bringing the day's two-concert take to $1,800.

The singer is a slight, curly-haired 20-year old who effectively combines the American rock 'n' roll style with the classically nostalgic approach to Neapolitan melodies. Working the second half of the concert, he sang 12 numbers, ranging from "Speedy Gonzales" and Twist tunes to "Voce 'e Notte" and other Italian ballads.

The crowd drowned out first chorus of first song with roars of approval for his presence. Comprising mostly young Italians and Italian-Americans, the audience was throughly familiar with Peppino & His Rockers (tenor sax, guitar, electric bass, drums, and di Capri on piano), shouting requests after each number.

He has an easy, pleasant voice and uses it best in ballads as his group plays a hard rock accompaniment. In addition, he is a confident performer, with varied visual bits going, erratic gestures, Twist antics and the ability to work as well on his feet as at his piano.

The first half of the program was a musical variety show featuring The Gondoliers, Cladia Villa, Nino Testa and Didi Van Eyck. All were backed by a 10-piece band led by Adato. Closing the first half was Cutai, in clown costume, who sang traditional and rock 'n' roll songs self-accomping on mandolin.

Peppino di Capri is doing a 10-day concert tour here with promotion pegged at the Italo-American trade. His New York dates were sponsored by Eberto Landi.

Latter circular strongly urges PRS members (comprised, incidentally, of both songwriters and publishers) to vote against alteration of Rule 5(g) on grounds that to amend it would be greatly in the interest of the publishers but completely contrary to the interests of writers.

Proposed amendment to Rule 5(g) is that it should be varied so as to permit authors to grant publishers up to a third of their royalties from film scores irespective of whether they are effectively published.

AFM May Greenlight Tooter Swap Between Japan & U.S., Ballard Avers

Tokyo, Oct. 1.

The longstanding frustration of Japanese musicians seeking to play in the U.S. may soon be relieved. Encouragement was given here by Stanley Ballard, secretary of the American Federation of Musicians, visiting Japan for a week on the first leg of a global vacation jaunt.

"We're perfectly willing to work out an exchange agreement with an organization representing Japanese musicians," Ballard said. "We have done this with England, in several instances with France, once with West Germany and recently with Mexico. With these exceptions, nobody has made a proper request."

Although his tight Tokyo schedule kept him from huddling with reps of the Japanese musicians' union, Ballard did contact several local promoters through whom correspondence will be initiated here for harmony with the AEF. "Our policy at all times," Ballard said, "has been a willingness to work something out. President Herman Kenin of the AFM and I both favor a more liberal policy regarding the exchange of musicians.

"The world is growing smaller," Ballard observed. "Where you could put up a fence 20 years ago, you can't do that today. If musicians have the talent, you've got to let them in."

Ballard's comments add up to the most heartening view of this knotty problem that Japanese interests have received so far. The attitude here was moving toward bitter resignation, made less palatable by the sight of hundreds of Yank tooters working in Japan in recent years.

Several pending situations have accented the problem. Co-owner Lenny Green of New York's Basin Street East has been trying to book a Japanese big band called the Sharps and Flats into the nitery. Lionel Hampton, when touring here earlier this year, expressed serious interest in using Japanese musicians in America. And Russ Gary, a Yank bandleader now batoning a 17-piece Japanese outfit, is plotting a U.S. swing for next year. All of these possibilities, of course, require AFM sanction before they can come to fruition.

Thus far, Japanese musicians performing in the U.S. have been few in number and mainly those who play indigenous Nipponese instruments. Several others have been permitted to work such limited situations as jazz fests and concerts. In a few other cases Japanese musicians have "infiltrated" the U.S. as students and tuned up once safely landed.

But for general, practical purposes, the AFM has not been approving requests for the import of Japanese musicians. According to Ballard, this is simply because the matter has never been properly broached. "Up to the present time they have been trying to handle it through individuals," he said. "But we can only deal with organizations. After all, a union such as ours can't start working with 1,000 individuals. We just don't have that kind of machinery."

Ballard cautioned, however, that musicians would require confirmed assurance of employment in the U.S. before they could be welcomed. "If not, it would be a rough situation," he said. That requirement, he cited, is perhaps the key hurdle in a successful exchange agreement. It is a fact of musical life that, while many American musicians can be booked overseas, there is meager demand for foreign non-concert musicians in the U.S.

In Hong Kong, Singapore and Ceylon, from where he has received requests for meetings, and possibly in other locations, Ballard will confer with local union officials.

In addition to being international secretary of the AFM, he is treasurer of the Western Hemisphere Secretariat of Free Entertainment Unions, affiliated with the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions. The concern of this organization is to promote the cause of free and democratic trade unionism, as opposed to the concepts of communism.

SICILIANS TO ACCOLADE ANKA WITH GOLD DISK

Paul Anka is schedule to attend a public celebration in Taormina, Sicily, on Oct. 3 honoring him with a golden record for his 1,000,000 records sold in Italy.

Arrangements for his appearance there are being worked out by his personal manager, Irvin Feld, and Dario Soria, RCA Victor's v.p. of the international department. Anka is currently on his fifth international personal appearance tour through key cities in Europe and Africa.

In addition to gold disks for 1,000,000-sellers in the U. S., Anka has copped similar awards for disk sales in Japan, Australia and Canada.

UA's Sardi's East

Bruno Sardi has taken over as eastern regional sales manager for United Artists Records. At the same time, regional sales manager Bob Kryl, has been shifted to Chicago to concentrate in the midwest and south.

Sardi has been national promotion director at Colpix Records for the past two years, and prior to that was a sales representative for the Capitol Records Custom Sales Dept.

JERRY LEE LEWIS TO MERC IN 50G DEAL

Memphis, Oct. 1.

Mercury Records has inked a five-year pact calling for a $50,000 guarantee with Memphis' Jerry Lee Lewis. His manager, Frank Casone, set the deal with Irving Green, prexy of Mercury who planed to Nashville to complete arrangements. Also on hand for the signing was Shelby Singleton, Mecury's a&r rep.

Lewis severed with Sun Records after some seven years. The singer-pianist just closed at Las Vegas' Thunderbird and the Vapors, Hot Springs.

Lewis, who will record on the Smash label for Mercury, has already cut several singles and albums for Merc. Singleton and Green directed the recordings, which also will be released to Philips of Holland through Mercury.

Brit. Decca Nets $4,043,200; EMI Earns $6,720,000

London, Oct. 1.

Britain's two major diskeries, Decca and EMI, published their annual profit statements Friday (27). The former, despite a slight dip in net earnings, is increasing its divvy distribution, while EMI, higher sales and profits notwithstanding, is sticking to last year's payout of 17½%.

Decca's gross sales, including exports of $27,440,000, amounted to $78,400,000, an inprovement of $1,120,000 over the previous year. Profit before taxes was slightly better at $8,282,400, but after the taxman had had his cut, the balance of $4,043,200 was $106,400 down on 1962. The divvy equals 37 per share.

EMI's sales hit $84,360,000, and pre-taxation profit totalled $14,168,000, compared with $13,440,000. Net after tax was $6,720,000, a slight boost over 1962. The report indicates that earnings of Capitol Records in the U.S. increased from $186,000 to over $700,000. The U.K. record division maintained its progress.

RAI-TV's Under-18 Singer Quarantine Stirs Beefs; Other Rome Music Notes

Rome, Oct. 1.

RAI-TV's "quarantine" of all under-18 songsters continues to be one of the most-commented topics of the early fall season in Italo musical circles. The Italian television network's edict—never openly announced but reportedly already in force—has directly affected one of Italy's top stars, Rita Pavone, whose planned springtime video show has been dropped by RAI-TV.

Ironically, the diminutive singer recently turned 18, but the ban stands just the same: as her manager, Teddy Reno, says: "She is, but she doesn't look it." Both leave for the U.S. Oct. 14 to record songs and tape some tv appearances.

Another quarantined singer, Mina, whom RAI-TV ostensibly has banned so far for some well-publicized events in her marital life, has been forced to accept foreign video and p.a. offers. She has been especially active in Spain, Germany, and France. Once Italy's undisputed top seller and attraction (she still gets hefty salaries for nitery appearances), she has seen her platter sales drop in recent months, though "La Ragazza dell'Ombrellone Accanto" (Italdisc) should get her back into circulation.

Capsule Disk Reviews

Other new releases: Domenico Modugno sings Alexandro Roth's "El Pecador" as though he'd written it himself (he wrote Italo words only), with "Non ho Saputo Legarti a Me" (Cetra) a weaker backstopper, though inimitably Modugno-styled for good reactions. Jack Hammer's "Hey Jack" (Karim) is an adroit modernization of the "Traviata" drinking song which will raise cries of sacrilege but sell well just the same.

Vasso Ovale continues in the teen groove with "Pieta" and Amami Subito" (Pathe), both well-arranged and delivered. Vira Vocia's "Se Mi Vuoi" (Sprint), shows promise in her misty voice, but recording is somewhat unclear. Egle and Alfredo Sacchetti tackle a trying task in Italianizing "Hey Paula" (Columbia), and effort is patently not up to original, despite the local desire for the lingual leap.

Marina Moran is effective in "Eden Roc" (Cetra) and "La Ragazza Color Caffe" (ditto), usable bossa-novas, though she can handle more distinctive fare. Connie Francis has a new winner for the local trade in her revival of "Malafemmina" (MGM), a Neapolitan perennial.

Prep San Remo

The next San Remo songfest, slated for January '64, will feature guest appearances by w.k. artists and singers from several countries. To quell any doubts and hesitations at the start, San Remo organizers have passed the word that these p.a.'s will be strictly non-competitive, and hence not potentially "dangerous" in any way, competish being restricted to Italo songsters. It's hoped that this year, a large foreign delegation will come in (under sponsorship of their Italo outlets), to give Riviera fest added lustre.

Ezio Radelli's Cantagiro, a two-week tour of Italy by a group of young singers competing for daily ratings and eventual all-round triumph (Peppino di Capri won this year), will go Continental in '64. Next year's Cantagiro will include stops in Spain, France, Germany, Belgium, Holland, Britain, and Greece as well. Probable name: "Canta-Europa" (Europe Sings).

"Little" Peggy March recorded two songs in Italian at RCA during her recent visit here, as well as other English languagers. During her local visit, she was escorted by her Italo opposite number, Rita Pavone, who in turn will be her guest when Miss Pavone visits the U.S. in October.

Nico Fidenco, one of top sellers here this summer with "Se Mi Perderai," has extended his RCA Italiana pact through 1968. He plans a series of records based on recent hit film soundtracks.

Roberts, who will continue to serve on the SWG council and will carry on as general council member of the Performing Right Society, joined the Guild in 1949, two years after its formation. He became chairman in 1958.

Bad Time, Distractions, No Kids Mar Gotham Bow of Moscow Circus But Its Talent a Superb Star Roster

By ROBERT J. LANDRY

Soviet Russia reputedly has 80 circuses. There may be 25 in the United States. The Russian total could exceed all the circuses, numerically, in the world. Certainly the show presented at Madison Square Garden by Morris Chalfen under the Cultural Exchange Program, the Moscow Circus, is as fine a galaxy of top-liners as ever assembled.

The point, of course, is that this is a one-ring outfit, stripped down to solid skill and sinew, sans parade, elephants, pageantry or fantasies of ancient sultanates. Very much, it could be described, a "circus for adults."

The Garden is not ideal for such a one-ringer. The action is confined to the 9th Avenue end, with the talent and animals working through a single egress-ingress. Close side chairs, with almost no knee room and with little concession to the derriere muscles constitute an ordeal. Three-quarters of the central floor space is also a sea of portable seats, insufficiently ramped with complaints aplenty heard as to poor sight lines.

The New York opening on Tuesday (24) was on the same night as the latterday all-out campaign at Philharmonic Hall to make the symphony season start a dressy society event with $25 champagne supper following. Also a legit show, "Bicycle Ride to Nevada," was preeming. Add that the children were back in school, that the Moscow Circus came in under discouraging newspaper publicity restraint, and that $6.50 is not a cheap tab. The Garden was far from sold out for the opening and the performers from Russia complained that the first audience was cold compared to Philadelphia.

Yet the Moscow Circus is, not to hedge, a great entertainment, from start to finish. Certainly appreciation was sincere, though the cramped quarters, a certain physical "remoteness" for great sections of the 10,000-odd patrons all were psychological handicaps.

Respecting the press campaign, under the Bill Doll office, the cryptic comment of one journalist may stand as a sufficient analysis: "Try getting Hearst space for a Russian circus!" Nor did the budget provide for heavy display ads or posters.

Sum it up this way: there were just too many Manhattan distractions in late September. The Moscow Circus got a share of the total newspaper space, but proportionate to the pressures on the editors. The date probably could not have been more unfortunate from the standpoint of the visitors. Meanwhile Boston, Pittsburgh, Chicago, Milwaukee and Minneap-

General Electric's Revue Plays One Town, 4 Weeks; Marilyn Ross Headlines

Marilyn Ross is heading an unusual industrial revue, one which will remain four weeks in one community, Louisville, with the dealers brought there to see the entertainment. This reverses the typical procedure of business-serving shows which usually pass from one sales headquarters to another.

Present setup was devised by the recently - merged Wilding-Dramaturgy production house. About 18 people are involved including four chorines. Special lyrics and book were written by Michael Brown.

Paying the tab is General Electric.

H'wood 'Hoot' Big 49G

Hollywood, Oct. 1.

"Hootenanny at Hollywood Bowl" drew 13,000 patrons for a gross of $49,000 here Saturday night (28), a solid profit all around. Talent lineup included The Gatewood Trio, Joe & Eddie, Smothers Bros., Rooftop Singers and The Brothers Four.

Lou Robin and Al Tinkley promoted under aegis of National General Corp.

Tokyo Copa 'Hostesses' Provide Worldly Touch For Mitchell Boys Choir

Tokyo, Oct. 1.

The authorities looked the other way when eight lads from the Mitchell Boys Choir played this city's Copacabana for two nights. The club, like most large niteries here, is well-stocked with gals euphemistically called "hostesses."

The sweet-voiced youths, aged 10 to 14, performed at the Copa without incident. Promoter Eddie Sereno, who presented the group for three weeks in Japan and 10 days in Manila, said the Copa management had asked for a letter of non-objection from the U.S. Embassy before booking the act, which was not advertised in advance.

Although the Japanese lawmen have authority at the location, of course, it was thought that such a letter might make it easier if there were complications. The letter was obtained. The young singers gave several songfests at the Embassy. All of the other performances by the youngsters in the Far East were either in concert or at U.S. military clubs. At the latter spots, they went especially big, being booked for return dates. The Mitchell boys were accompanied by pianist-musical director Vincent Morton and manager Henry Iegler.

Next in for Sereno will be Jimmie Rodgers.

N. M. Fair Chalks Up Record Gate

Albuquerque, Oct. 1.

A record gate, last-minute cancellations by two western names, and an extension of days for next year's show all marked the 11-day 1963 New Mexico State Fair, which ended here last Sunday (22).

Warm, pleasant weather helped the expo set a new attendance peak, with 542,800 clocked through turnstiles. Figure is an increase of about 12,000 over previous high—set in 1962.

The two names, due for headliner spots with nightly rodeo events in Tingely Coliseum, notified fair management about 36 hours before skedded appearances that they wouldn't be in. One was Doug McClure of NBC-TV's "The Virginian," originally set for one show on Saturday (14). He had been contracted for $2,250. He was replaced by western actor Dale Robertson, who was paid $2,500 for the solo job.

Other cancellation was Red Foley, hillbilly video name, who had been set to double on bill on Sept. 17-18. He told fair management he was ill and didn't show. Minnie Pearl, "Grand Old Opry" fave, carried the performance alone. Pairing had been set for $6,400, but Miss Pearl settled for $2,500.

McClure's contract had been negotiated by Bob Lewis of Lewis & Lewis Agency in San Antonio, which has supplied many headliners for fair here in past few years. McClure reportedly had a similar date in Hawaii on same day (14).

Other acts on the nine-day rodeo competitions included Anita Bryant, Jimmie Wakely, Rex Allen and Andrews Sisters. Nine nights of rodeo pulled about 59,000 per-

Kate Smith, who has been out of action for some time, will return to the boards with a concert at Carnegie Hall, Nov. 2. Singer, who held a top position in radio and recordings, for many years, will be making her first non-benefit stage appearance in many years.

Miss Smith's longtime manager, Ted Collins, is arranging for a fullscale orchestra and chorus to back Miss Smith at this event.

Dallas, Oct. 1.

State Fair of Texas, opening its 78th annual 16-day run Saturday (5), has a strong entertainment line up that expo officials hope will top the 1950 all-time attendance record of 2,801,305. Last year's turnstile count was a hefty 2,780,173 and the gate fee is the same this fall—$1 for adults and 50c. for kids under 12.

Country's largest state fair, with a new front entrance and added ticket booths, has a permanent investment of over $40,000,000 in its 200-acre showplace just two miles from midtown Dallas. The 1963 expo, Oct. 5-20, will have an "Exposition of Our American Heritage" theme, to be carried out in scores of special events and activities.

Top show lure is the touring national company of "How to Succeed in Business Without Really Trying," starring Dick Kallman and Willard Waterman, which opens Friday (4) for 24 performances in the air-conditioned, 4,120-seat State Fair Music Hall. There's been a phenomenal advance sale, with tickets scaled at $5.95-$1.65.

"Ice Capades," the 23d edition of the John H. Harris touring icer, again gets 24 showings (13 nights and 11 matinees) in the Ice Arena, a 5,000-seater, with tickets scaled from $4-$2.25 for adults. Children's scale is $2-$1 for Monday-through-Thursday matinees. The blades show, a regular at the expo, annually draws more than 100,000 patrons.

Special free acts again are numerous. Under a big tent near the midway will be the Colossal Free Circus, presented by Dr. Pepper Co. and Frito-Lay Co., with

D.C. Emcee Assaulted Him, Dick Gregory Sez

Washington, Oct. 1.

With the chauffeur of Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy named as a witness to the incident, Dick Gregory claimed the emcee he hired for his week's engagement at the Howard Theatre here hit him with his fists, apparently in an argument over money.

Gregory went to the police and swore out a warrant for the arrest of James McPhail, accusing him with assault.

Gregory claimed he tried to avoid McPhail's blows in the backstage incident at the Howard. McPhail is a local man.

Gregory said he had been with Attorney General Kennedy prior to going to the theatre Thursday (26) when the fight allegedly took place. Kennedy had his chauffeur take Gregory to the Howard, where the driver is said to have seen the incident.

A jury trial on the charge is set for Oct. 30 before Washington's Court of General Sessions.

World's Fair Amusement Sector Land Grabbed Up; Deegan Predicts 10,000,000 Advance Ticket Sale

All available land space in the Lake Amusement Area where the paid admission entertainment of the N. Y. World's Fair will take place starting April 22, has been sold out, according to Judge Samuel I. Rosenman, who is head of that area. In addition, some water space has been sold, for a full schedule of amusement activity at the Fair.

Announcement was made by Judge Rosenman at the board of directors' meeting Thursday (26) on the site of the pitcher's mound of the Shea Stadium, where the New York Mets will play starting next season.

The optimistic reports at the confab were continued with the announcement that all available space in the transportation section has been leased and all available space in certain desireable sections of the industrial section have been allotted.

In addition, Thomas J. Deegan, chairman of the Fair's executive Committee declared that he expected advance ticket sales to hit 10,000,000 ducats by the fair's preem. Already more than 1,000,000 have been sold with United Airlines making the largest purchase of 100,000. Line gave Deegan a $135,000 check to cover this purchase. It was also expected that the Fair would be in the black by the end of the first year, and sufficient money would be left at the end of the two-year run to rehabilitate the Flushing Meadows Park into one of the largest municipal park systems in the world.

The Fair's prexy, Robert Moses, answered critics "who never build anything" and promised that the Fair will be opened in time.

Thus far, work is progressing satisfactorily in virtually all departments, according to reports submitted to the directors. There is some apprehension about one section of road being completed in time, but otherwise the huge complex of traffic arteries are proceeding as per schedule.

Thus far, the amusements in the Lake Area, are the Amphitheatre to be operated by Meyer Davis, Leon Leonidoff and Thomas R. Rudel; the Texas Pavilion with its Music Hall where a history of American musical comedy will be shown; the Ringling Bros. Barnum & Bailey Continental Circus, Le Poupees de Paris, a puppet show which was a hit at the Seattle World's Fair last year; Dancing Waters, Walter's International Wax Museum, the Santa Maria, and others. The biggest performer employer is expected to be the Davis-Leonidoff-Rudel show.

USO Unit Off to Spain; Professionals Resuming After Summer Amateurs

"Rythmn Revels," USO Unit Number 1512 flew out yesterday (Tues.) for Spain. Its a five-week hop including military installations in Tangiers, Morocco and, returning, the Azores and Bermuda. Company comprises seven persons, the standard complement nowadays. They were routined by, but not accompanied by Bert Wishnew and will present a 75 minute entertainment.

Karen Ryce, acro-dancer, Ronnie Haydeh, girl vocalist, Joane Star, tap dancer and Rod Rodgers, comic head the acts. Jack Powell, the vet vaude blackface drummer, will also do a specialty act besides doubling under conductor-pianist Bernie Thall. Seventh member of troupe is Peter Corey on trumpet.

Under reduced budgets for USO, professionals hit the military centers in season only. Summertime talent is most collegiate amateur who travel for subsistence alone, sans salary.

Philly Group Buys Million Dollar Pier

Atlantic, Oct. 1.

Million Dollar Pier, once the resort's top amusement spot, has been sold to a Philadelphia syndicate for a reported $1,600,000. Seller was Associated Realties Corp., a company formed by the late Capt. John L. Young and the Crossan family of Philadelphia which operated the structure for years.

Head of the purchasing syndicate is Robert Saligman, president of the Queen Knitting Mills, Philadelphia. Included in the buy are a group of boardwalk stores and apartments opposite them as well as a 200-foot wide strip of land extending from the boardwalk to Pacific Ave.

Sale was negotiated by Rudolph J. Bushell, v.p. of Albert M. Greenfield & Co. of Philadelphia. Bushell said that amusement enterprises now occupying the pier and operated by the Beach Amusement Co. under direction of Max Tubis and Harry Schwartz won't be affected. The land, he said, will probably be used for a motel development.

The pier, built in 1906 by Capt. Young, once extended some 1,700 feet into the sea. It has a 200-foot frontage on the boardwalk. A huge hippodrome was in the centre of the pier and for years top vaude names played it in season.

George Hamid, owner-operator of the Steel Pier, leased the Million Dollar Pier in 1938 and operated it until he bought the Steel Pier in 1943. Three fires, two in 1948 and one in 1949, closed the Million Dollar as a pier.

The front part of the structure, where a grand ballroom once stood, has been rebuilt as an open air amusement spot with a miniature golf course and various "skill" concessions. The hippodrome houses exhibits, restaurant facilities and more concessions.

Murchison Jr. New Prez Of Island Resort Complex Near St. Petersburg, Fla.

St. Petersburg, Fla., Oct. 1.

Clint Murchison Jr. has been named president of Tierra Verde Corp., luxurious island compound on the outskirts of St. Petersburg. The corporation, as well as Tierra Verde City Inc., location of Guy Lombardo's swank Port-O-Call nitery, was headed by Louis Berlanti, who died Aug. 17 in an aircraft crash. Berlanti's son, Fred, was killed in the same accident.

Announcement of the new prexy, also stated that Centex Construction Co. of Dallas, Murchison-controlled building organization, will be incharge of Tierra Verde. "Exciting undertakings and entirely new concepts" are said to be slated for the development.

Effect of the change on Lombardo's club, if any, has not been announced. Meanwhile, a National Labor Relations Board hearing into charges of unfair labor practices by the management at Port-O-Call has wound up in nearby Tampa.

A long procession of witnesses for Local 104 of the Hotel and Restaurant & Bartenders' Union was heard. The dispute began on the evening of March 28. Just as a formal Governor's Ball was getting underway at the bistro. A decision is not anticipated for several weeks.

Christian Arabs' Lovely & Booming Beirut: Luxury, Culture, Gambling

By TRUDY GOTH

Beirut, Oct. 1.

This Lebanese metropolis is the boomtown of the Middle East for a variety of commercial and political reasons. A predominantly Christian country of Arabic antecedents, now independent after the years as a French protectorate, has many charms, including seacoast and mountains, fine hotels, a vivid and varied cafe life, a gambling casino far larger and more sophisticated than offered by Monte Carlo, Beirut has much of the culture and wealth of the Near East without its political tensions.

All of the foregoing spells out a considerable activity in high brow and lowbrow amusements. Each year there is the stunning spectacle of the music festival set in the splendid Roman-and-before ruins of Baalbeck. Here play foreign symphonies, ballet companies, great dramatic repertory groups on the steps of the Temple of Bacchus or before the Temple of Jupiter with the tallest columns ever erected by man.

Beirut proper is a smart and smartly-gowned city. Its society is fascinating because it mixes Christian, Moslem and Jewish elements along with Europeans and tourists in numbers. A visit to some of the private homes is sufficiently dazzling.

After Nasser's coming to power, much Near East trade started to shift from Cairo to Beirut with its free, gold-backed currency, trade privileges and nearness to oil lands. Lebanon was formerly called in travel agents' literature "Little Switzerland" because of its 7-10,000 feet altitude mountains which offer beautiful skiing with ski lifts, hotels and a mile long run at 9,200 feet. Now the country is better known as "New Switzerland'" because of its numbered bank accounts and bank secrecy.

Lebanon today is unique among Middle Eastern countries in having a Christian majority—but the Moslem population is a large one, multiplying fast and the result a cultural patchwork. Some of the Beirut families are exceedingly rich and some of their houses are le dernier cri in elegance.

Mme. Aimee Kettaneh, the president of the enormously successful Baalbeck Festival, a strikingly handsome woman, has brought off many difficult proj-

Cincy Okays $10-Mil. For Convention Hall

Cincinnati, Oct. 1.

After many months of planning, the green light is on for a municipal convention hall. Authorized by City Council, it will be in the block bounded by Elm, Plum, 5th and 6th Sts., on the fringe of the downtown shopping, theatre and hotel district.

Cost of land rights and building is limited at $10,000,000. There will be a 3,000-seat auditorium and vast exhibition space. Completion is expected within four years.

It's the first step in a core development program, which is expected to take in a zone including Keith's Theatre within five years, and another zone including RKO Albee in a more distant time.

Waikiki Tourist Chill May Warm Rival Resorts' Biz

Honolulu, Oct. 1.

"Visitor dissatisfaction" with Waikiki may boost the economy of the so-called neighbor islands (Kauai, Maui, Hawaii) by some $50,000,000 a year in 1970, a U. of Hawaii report indicates.

Traditionally, Waikiki has grabbed 90% of the money spent in the state by hotel visitors. The report notes that the outer island boost is contingent upon construction of more hotel rooms.

As it is, West Maui already is emerging as the "Waikiki" of the neighbor isles, with new resort facilities there topped by the Sheraton Maui and Royal Lahaina projects. Kona, Hawaii island, is runnerup.

Billy Eckstine Scores In Tokyo Concert Inked As 'Accommodation' for Crix

Tokyo, Sept. 24.

Billy Eckstine showed himself still the masterful song salesman in this curious two-concert outing at the 706-seat basement auditorium of the main Kosei Nenkin Hall. Working with plenty of oldies to gain greater rapport with his Japanese audiences, he captured an audience that was less than half of capacity (reportedly better the second night) with his big, scooping baritone on both ballads and jump numbers.

From the time he stepped onstage with his signature, "Everything I Have Is Yours," through the closing "All Right, O.K., You Win" bluesy bouncer, Eckstine demonstrated why he has been able to remain among the top names for most of his 30 years before the mike. Complementing his rich, trade-marked voice were a touch of fancy footwork and a fine bit of trumpet blowing capped by a Satchmo impresh that brought hefty mitting from the gathering of Nipponese—mainly press reps and show biz pros.

While Eckstine tried some hip lyrics on "Ma, She's Makin' Eyes At Me," did some rocking on "Little Momma" and didn't resist "I Left My Heart in San Francisco," he leaned primarily on his long line of disclicks and a medley of Ellingtonia. A beguine treatment of "In the Still of the Night" was especially effective, with the singer getting solid support throughout from conductor-pianist Bobby Tucker, drummer George Avalos and the Keichiro Ebihara orch.

Opening the bill were Joe Chisholm and his wife, terper Bunny Clarke—an ingratiating pair. But since Chisholm has become basically a singer after previous identification as a hoofer, it was less than show-wise to card him with Eckstine.

Looking like a sepia Sinatra and warbling in a straightforward manner, Chisholm did a wide range of tunes, most from the current nitery catalog. He has an easy style, given a vaude flair by the use of a straw hat and cane. After displaying his vocal credentials, Chisholm boosted his appeal by adding a soft-shoe throwback to "Me and My Shadow" and sent the house chuckling by cunningly rendering some Nipponese folk numbers while twirling a baton. Miss Clarke is a looker who comes on for an interesting modern dance turn on the calypso, "Sitting By the Ocean."

Edihara, one of Japan's foremost alto men, warmed up the house with a soulful "What Kind of Fool Am I" solo.

Asked about the poor house, promoter Tats Nagashima, who presented Eckstine for three weeks in Japan, Okinawa and Taipei, admitted that the promotion

Joseph Valachi, the Senate committee's own Little Caesar on the witness stand, is inspiring the usual jokes. Quips Henny Youngman: "Valachi awakened in a dead sweat. He'd forgotten to renew his Blue Cross Policy."

Tito's Tourist Pitch For Yugo

By TOM VAN DYCKE

Split, Oct. 1.

Marshall Tito has given the green light for an all-out drive to get the hard currency his country needs by transforming Yugoslavia's Dalmatian coast into an all-year playground for tourists. He stands a mighty good chance of putting it over.

With Europe's economic recovery a fait accompli and unstable weather throughout most of the continent, sun-seeking vacationers have so jammed France's Cote d'Azur that today even the least known hamlets have been crowded to the bursting point, with prices skyrocketing beyond belief. As much can be said of the Italian Riviera while Spain's Costa Brava, once the mecca of the medium-priced tourists, is now jampacked and overpriced. Even the Italian Adriatic resorts have reported doing complete capacity all the way from Trieste to as far south as Rimini.

On the other side of the Adriatic, the story is quite different. Tito's Dalmatian coast has everything going for it. For one thing the Littoral is breathtakingly beautiful with wild savage mountains coming right down to the beaches, which are plentiful. The climate is superb, winter and summer alike. Hotels on one of the offshore islands announce that any time it rains, prices are cut by 50% and, should it snow, no tab at all.

But the prices of accommodations are beyond belief. Stopped at the newly opened glass-built Hotel Marjan which has a swimming pool, two cocktail lounges, one al fresco, and a beautiful restaurant. A ninth floor room, with bath, shower and glassed-in balcony goes for $7.50 a day. And even this price is reduced by 10% after the first of September. Food is excellent and extremely moderately priced. Lobster mayonnaise, mixed grills-cum-shishkebab, salad, dessert, Turkish coffee and drinks and the tab for two comes to just about $6, service compris. Hotel men all talk English and menus, even in small villages are printed in English, French and German in addition to Jug. Since restaurants, hotels and shops are all nationalized nobody tried to put the gyp on for anything.

In order to bring the hard currency (local money is the dinar, pegged at 750 to the buck) Tito has ordered six new luxury type hotels built from Dubrovnik, called "the Pearl of the Adriatic," to Rijeka, erstwhile Fiume. And to let the world know of this paradise, two companies were shooting travelogs in Eastmancolor to be distributed gratis to picture houses throughout Europe.

For tourist distractions in addition to scenery and beaches, there is terriffic fishing and an extraordinary ancient walled city within Split where Diocletian had his pad (he was allegedly born in Split), plus the customary water skiing and boat rides to the nearby offshore islands. Incidentally the government has transformed one of these islands, Sveti Stefan, into a hotel with its narrow streets serving as corridors. Fabulous to say the least.

For the last three years Split has had an annual theatre and music festival with this year's stanza being devoted in the main to Italian opera. However for next

London's Establishment In $184,000 Bankruptcy

London, Oct. 1.

Having lost more than $184,000 in less than three years, the Establishment Club has gone into voluntary liquidation. The spot, however, will be continued by Raymond Nash. His offer at a creditors' meeting to pay preferential creditors in full and one third to others was accepted.

The club, which opened in October, 1961, launched the current satirical vogue in Britain. It was founded by Nicholas Luard and Peter Cook. The latter is now appearing in on Establishment show at the Stroller's, N.Y.

Lenny Bruce appeared at the Establishment last year. But attempts to bring him back for a return engagement were thwarted by the Home Office, which refused to grant him right of entry into Britain.

Vaughan-Basie Unit Ends 3-Week SRO British Tour With Four London Dates

London, Sept. 24.

Winding a three-week tour of Britain with four dates in London, the Sarah Vaughan-Count Basie show, which has played to SRO houses at practically every stand, pulled more than 2,150 customers to the 2,860 seat Odeon, Lewisham in South London.

It should be explained that Miss Vaughan and the Basie crew had previously played Croydon, in the near vicinity, and jammed the house for two performances, thus siphoning off much of the South London potential. According to agent-promoter Harold Davison, the Lewisham bash was the lowest attended of the whole trek. At three-quarters full it gives some idea of how British jazz fans will turn out for a couple of American legends.

Vaughan-Basie Show

Living up to her rep here, Miss Vaughan scored with "Maria;" "I Feel Pretty," "Misty," "Over The Rainbow," "Tenderly," "I Can't Give You Anything But Love" and others. Her own peculiar arrangements with their strong jazz-blues feeling fell on willing ears and drew thunderous applause.

Backing the thrush was the adept Kirk Stuart Trio whose efficient accompaniment through several difficult numbers added to the Vaughan magic, and at the same time made a pianissimo contrast to the blast of Basie.

Basie's orch, which opened the 140-minute show, was well in character with a dozen superbly arranged numbers. Highlights were "Swinging Shepherd Blues" featuring flautist Frank Wess; "Blues In Hoss Flat" with the brass section in top form and a spectacular, if, overlong, drum solo from Sonny Payne during "Ol' Man River."

Mr. Five by Five (Jimmy Rushing) breezed through half a dozen bluesy renderings in fine style and at times had patrons rising in applause. Watt.

Amateur R&R Gig's SRO Biz 'Amazes' Waikiki Shell

Honolulu, Oct. 1.

It took an amateur rock 'n' roller featuring 30 teenage combos competing por a $100 grand(?) prize to set a new Waikiki Shell attendance record.

Some 10,000 noisy but orderly youngsters turned out for the three-tour bash. And 1,500 more were turned away after the box office ran out of tickets.

While the tab was a modest 55c, the size of the crowd amazed Shell personnel. Show was sponsored by radio station KORL and a soft-drink firm. The station promptly announced there'll be an encore "Battle of Bands" next year.

Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey Circus a Three-Ring Click in Paris

Paris, Sept. 27.

This is the first Paris and French visit of the Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey Circus since 1898. With three-rings a rarity, the solid aspects of this edition and the local liking for circuses, it should be in for a good playoff here till Nov. 11 at the over 4,000-seat Palais Des Sports.

Actually, this is a roadshow setup of the Ringling show with the first troupe now in California. Many of the present acts were also part of the American circus in in Moscow last summer. It not only has enough unique acts to make audiences sit up in excitement but also fine production dash and smooth progression.

Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey Circus

John Ringling North presentation of three-ring circus with Harold Alzana, Uuns, Gerard Soules, Galla Shawn, Stephenson Family (6), Cesar, Ellbano, Domis, Chaludis (3), Lalos (4), Robertos (3), Roberto De Vasconcellos, Dior Sisters (3), Charles & Gena Moroski, Fredonias (5), Binders (2), Kossmeyer Mules (2), Caprice & Partners (3), Fenis & Ferroni, Desert Sons (8), Clowns (20), Trapeze Girls (20), Lothar, Silky. Supervised by Arthur Concello; musical direction, M. Eursman; production numbers staged by Max Weldy and Pat Valdo with costumes by Weldy; choreography, Margaret Smith. At Palais Des Sports, Paris; $4 top.

The big costume parade may seem a bit frilly for Paris, where they are still house revue staples. However, the electric movement in the three rings, the elephants, horses, dogs, clowns and cascading numbers overcome these flaws to build the show into a sumptuous spectacle.

There is no more sawdust or the sideshow feel of the Ringling circus of yore. Here felt-covered rings are cleanly lit and there are no menageries, freaks or other circus traditions of memory.

Except for its size, the production is pared down to putting the emphasis on the acts themselves. And nets, except for a few numbers, do away with the morbid qualities too long associated with circuses.

It's the aplomb, derring do and dexterity that count, not the prospect of impending hurt or blood. Harold Alzana gets maximum attention as he walks up a rope to get to a high wire atop the Palais Des Sports. Then he skips rope on it and teeters for sock impact before walking down the rope again.

Alzana has the assurance that does away with the gasps and groans of this type act. His perfection in execution makes for showmanship. Unus is a close second in his suave poise as he does one finger stands on a lighted lamp globe. Gerard Soules swings on a trapeze to do a fallaway to catch himself by his heels. It's another classy entry.

Galla Shawn, a shapely blond, does headstands on a swinging and spinning trapeze that is easy on the eyes. She is surrounded was half-hearted. He said he would have given it more bally if it were in a larger hall, but Eckstine's manager, Milton Deutsch, wanted a percentage if the singer went into a house seating more than 1,200.

Nagashima added that original plans did not call for any concert dates, but they were added when Deutsch requested three instead of two weeks for Eckstine. The only reason Nagashima went into a concert hall at all, he said, was to get space from the Japanese critics, who do not cover the night spots.

Burlesque Review

This Was Burlesque

(2d Edition)

(CASINO EAST, N.Y.)

Michael P. Ianucci production, "This Was Burlesque." Stars Ann Corio. With Steve Mills, Harry Conley, Mac Dennison, Penny Powers, Dexter Maitland, Buddy Bryant, Reni Cooper, Maria Bradley Ecstacy, Casino Cuties (10). Directed by Miss Corio; choreography, Paul Morokoff; writer, Joe DiMona; $3.95 top.

Burlesque seems to have a heartiness not only of entertainment, but also of boxoffice. Michael Ianucci, who first produced the shoestring "This Was Burlesque" 19 months ago, has inaugurated a second edition, which is filled with sex and strips, and its longevity may be nearly as great.

The shoestring with which the original was produced hasn't been lengthened or enlarged despite the oft-proclaimed prosperity of the first folio. Maybe the cast got some raises, but otherwise the same penuriousness prevails in the projection of No. 2. Withal, it's reasonable to expect that the new edition will get strong support as well, mainly on the strength of the burley label.

There was always a market for burleycue in the old days. Even during its most disreputable era, the vast majority of customers claimed they went for the comics. The effectiveness of that broad school of comedy is seen today with its top banana, Steve Mills, and his aides. Ann Corio, who participates in the production, has gone on to other things including great moments of glory in the legitimate drama, namely, her epic essaying of the role of Tondelayo in "White Cargo."

Burlesque, banned ever since the late Mayor Fiorello H. LaGuardia decreed its demise, has been able to survive with this production which has been proclaimed as a satire of the entertainment that was. But with this edition, the base seems to have broadened. Whatever pretensions to satire that existed previously have virtually disappeared and it's a straight burley show.

The lines are frequently shocking, some of it needlessly dirty and the strips have progressed a long way since Miss Corio worked the Minsky menage. The top peeler is a singularly named miss called Ecstacy, who seems unique in this field. Her contortions, while basic, are still imaginative, and her style is that of a girl who takes her time.

Penny Powers does her divestiture with a grain of humor. She's kidding the art, audience and frequently herself and she works it in a manner that indicates it's not to be taken seriously.

The apprentice ecdysiast is Maria Bradley who has lots to learn.

In the comedy department, the major bit is the well-worn but continuously funny courtroom skit with Steve Mills presiding, and straightman Dexter Maitland the prosecufor. At the bar of justice are Reni Cooper and Miss Powers. Other assists are by Mac Dennison and Buddy Bryant. There are some outrageous moments, but it's still one of the top sketches developed by yesteryear burley circuits. Harry Conley reprised an old vaudeville skit effectively.

The 10-girl line takes the name burlesque seriously and they too kid the art. The show has its moments of fun and folly, but it could have been produced on a scale that would lift it above the penny dreadfuls. Jose.

Boston Gardens' Divvy

Boston, Oct. 1.

Directors of the Boston Garden Arena Corp., operating the 14,000-seat Boston Garden, and 7,000-seat Boston Arena, have declared a dividend of 20c per share on the common, and an extra dividend of 30c, payable Jan. 15, 1964 to stock of record on Sept. 30.

Walter A. Brown is prexy of the firm. The Garden booked the Mitch Miller show for one-nighter Wednesday (6); had the Ringling Bros. circus in May, and has a full sked of basketball and hockey plus two ice shows for Christmas season.

Inside Stuff—Vaude

John Murray Anderson (no relation to the late Broadway showman) is turning his Brant Inn, whose Sky Club has played top bands and singers for 30 years, into a 125-room motel. It's in the Hamilton, Ont., area. He told Gerry Barker of Toronto Star (a) he's tried in vain for three years to sell it as an entertainment spot (b) he can't afford such names as Louis Armstrong, Earl Grant and Jayne Mansfield—all in recently—because they charge so much it leaves no margin for profit.

Eased Curbs on Dollar Remittances Boom Japan as Yank Talent Buyer

By DAVE JAMPEL

Tokyo, Oct. 1.

General Artists Corp. is lining up a parade of talent for Japan in the upcoming months. Details were disclosed by Henry Miller, GAC v.p. in charge of the West Coast and the Pacific area, after 10 days of huddling with local promoters.

Already set here by GAC are Eartha Kitt, the Coronados, the Gertrude Ward Singers, Paul Anka, the Four Freshmen, Susan Barrett, Frankie Laine and Sam Fletcher. Tentative arrangements have been made for the Four Lads, Arturo Romero and his Villa Fontana Strings, Damita Jo, Connie Francis, the Four Preps, Della Reese, Timi Yuro and the Harry James orch.

In longrange negotiation are tours by Bobby Darin, the Four Seasons, Gordon & Sheila MacRae, Tony Martin, Jack Jones, the Chordettes, Tex Beneke & the Glenn Miller Orchestra with Ray Eberle & the Modernaires, the Tommy Dorsey Orchestra under the direction of Sam Donahue with Frank Sinatra Jr., Helen Forrest and the Pied Pippers and the Henry Mancini orch.

Reasons for the accelerated traffic of talent to Japan include eased restrictions on foreign currency payments, the facilitation of converting yen to dollars for transportation of performers, increased entertainment budgets by key U.S. military clubs in the Far East and the buying of talent for long schedules by a huge, non-profit organization of company employees.

Olympic Angles

Although his scheduling is not projected that far, Miller said he does not expect Tokyo to require a boost in show bookings during the time of the Olympics. He saw possibilities for increased action immediately before or after the October, 1964, event, but thought visitors would be too busy to patronize clubs and concerts during the games. Miller also wondered about availability of hotel space for any artists he might send.

For Tats Nagashima's Kyodo Kikuka Productions, Miller has Miss Kitt arriving here Oct. 20 for two weeks, the singing Mexican-American Coronados (who will share the bill with Miss Kitt in concerts) coming Oct. 21 for six weeks and the Gertrude Ward Singers, who will be the first gospel froup to reach these shores, landing Oct. 25 for a six-week tour.

The Four Lads are expected to return for Nagashima Nov. 27 for five weeks, Anka is due around the end of the year, Miss Barrett comes back Jan. 3 for two weeks, the Four Freshmen arrive Jan. 10 for 21 performing days, Romero and his group of 14 fiddlers are pencilled to start a 37-day swing on Feb. 7, Laine is set for 14 playing days from April 3 and singer Fletcher checks in early next year for five weeks of bookings.

Nagashima also has Damita Jo skedded to come March 20 for five weeks, the Ward Singers returning in the spring for an additional 14 weeks, Miss Reese for dates next year still to be determined and Miss Francis possibly in April, her film chores permitting. On top of those projects, Nagashima is negotiating with GAC for the MacRaes, Martin, Jones (son of Allan Jones), the singing Chordettes, Darin, the Four Seasons and the Mancini orch.

With Tom Nomura's Shin-Nichi Promotions, Miller is close to signing Miss Yuro and the James orch, which will include a vocalist, for Japan tours. He is talking to several promoters about the updated Glenn Miller and Tommy Dorsey aggregations.

Nagashima has also struck a rich lode in the Ro-on, a large organization of workers that has recently gone in for heavy concert bookings of foreign talent. Its members pay nominal dues and maybe a small admission charge for the more expensive acts, the others being free. The organization makes up deficits. In the Osaka area alone, Ro-on has some 200,000 members. This means that a show which that branch of the organization books can do as many as 70 performances in the 3,000-seat Osaka Festival Hall.

Nationally, Nagashima said, the Ro-on can book a show for at least 20 weeks. He has George Lewis and the Preservation Hall Jazz Band from New Orleans now playing 12 weeks in Japan, mainly Ro-on concerts. They have to return in March to complete that circuit. The slated return 12-week tour next spring of the Gertrude Ward Singers will be strictly for Ro-on dates. And Nagashima has the Golden Gate Quartet coming in December for 19 weeks of touring for that organization.

Nagashima's Booking Goal

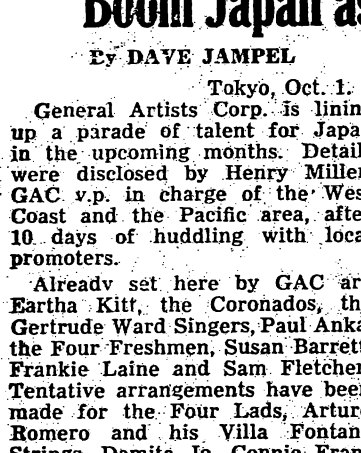
Nagashima, who is also entertainment director for this city's New Latin Quarter, which presents more name foreign acts than any other Nipponese nitery, said he is gradually working toward lighter bookings for his more expensive imports. This plan is designed to cut cover charges at the club—which hit $14 for top acts, give the visiting performers more time for sightseeing and personal enjoyment and, incidentally, to reduce their fees.

Until now, Nagashima said he has been contracting top foreign acts for from 15 to 17 shows weekly. They'd play at least one night a week in a club, usually the New Latin Quarter, and often double in concerts, U.S. military locations or tv shots. He would like to reduce the commitments to nine or 10 shows per week. He would book these acts exclusively in the New Latin Quarter for the clubby Akasaka district and maybe later put some of them into the Monte Carlo in the Ginza section or the Club Lee in the Shinjuka area.

Nagashima would also cut down on dates outside of Tokyo for his more expensive imports, except those comparative few who can sell out concert situations. Otherwise, he says, it just doesn't pay. He pointed out that the costs in money, time and energy of moving the acts, rehearsing new bands and booking and promoting afar usually don't return sufficient dividends for the outlay. As for carrying a band, Nagashima noted that top Japanese outfits like the Sharps and Flats of the Tokyo Cuban Boys cost $600 or $700 a day.

Another reason Nagashima thinks at least the New Latin Quarter might eventually be able to reduce its cover tariffs is the expectation of longer operating hours. At present, although it's not strictly enforced and some niteries darken their fronts and work into wee-hour biz, the law requires a club to shutter at 11:30, with 30 minutes grace given. He says the word is in the wind that the clubs will be permitted to stay open at least an extra hour come next year.

Overall, Nagashima said the middle-priced acts are the toughest for him to sell. Plugging can sell low-priced performers on price alone and those in the $20,000 or $30,000 a week class sell themselves on name value. But the in-betweens are often too costly for the smaller situations without having the lure for the top spots.



Dearest Jimmy:
In your 50 great year in show biz, I'm glad I hugged and kissed you.

season, the Isaac Stern-Eugene Istomin-Leonard Rose trio are being sought as well as Leontyne Price, Jan Peerce and Clifford Curzon. There had been a festival of extremely modern music at Zagreb of such far-out boys as John Cage and Pierre Boulez, unheard of for a so-called "Iron Curtain" country.

By 1965 two casinos should be operating, one at Split and the other at Dubrovnik. When asked how that sat with a Communist regime, the answer given was that two already existed at Belgrade and Zagreb.

Two new airports are being built on the Dalmatian coast, to take the load off Dubrovnik. One is slated for Kassell and the other for Trogir. Roads certainly could be improved and must be.

One last note: the country seems loaded with bagels.

ects and who in spite of two perfectly run houses (a town house and one up in the cooler hills for the summer) a large family and an apartment in Paris devotes most of her time for the Festival.

Of unusual, offbeat talent the Beirut area has a considerable array. For instance, Feirouz and Sabah, two great Arab singers who know how to embroider plaintive melodies in a throaty way while spanning octaves. They both appeared in the Lebanese folklore performances given at Baalbeck, Feirouz last year in an operetta composed by her husband, Assi Rahbani and Sabah this year in the most successful folk tale with 120 musicians and dancers "The Cascade." Both have the fame which counts most: their records played constantly on the radio and heard in even the smallest villages in the Middle East.

No description about Beirut and its personalities would be complete without mentioning Mme. Linda Sursock whose remarkable Arabic palace built around a large main room with a fountain in the center, filled with priceless and magnificent carpets.

Final two days in the Coliseum featured Don Ameche & his International Showtime TV Circus, playing to two matinees and two evening performances. It drew about 20,000 for four performances for gross of about $40,000.

During the exposition, the seven-member State Fair Commission voted to extend next year's fair by four days. New dates are Sept. 11 through 27. Apparently the main reason for the extension was to obtain additional revenue from the lucrative state fair racetrack, where pari-mutuel betting is legal.

This year, in 11 days, the track had a handle of $4,473,000. It marked a $200,000 increase over last year.

"East Texas on Parade," a pageant featuring marching bands and beauty queens from East Texas cities, is a bowl attraction Oct. 15. Portland, Ore., Oct. 1.

"Holiday on Ice" hit a modest $70,100 in five evening performances and two matinees at the Memorial Coliseum here last week. Show wound up Wednesday (25). The 10,000 seater was scaled at a $3.50 top.

Midsummer heat, transient attractions such as the Oregon State U.-Colorado football game plus the Jewish High Holidays cut into the gate.

Moscow Circus

ollis, which follow, should prove better stands.

Valentin Filatov's Bears, which closes the Moscow Circus, will inevitably be remembered most vividly. Who would dispute a judgment that it's the greatest entertainment of its nature extant? These bears are trained to perform wonder after wonder. They ride bicycles, motorcycles, juggle with fire, stage a boxing bout. Audience joy in the boxing match of the bears was preceded by a hilarious session in the first half wherein Victoria Olkhovikova's dogs (boxers) play soccer.

VARIETY's previous review of the show from Philadelphia touched the highlights and rich variety of talent. No need here to reprise. But for the sake of this publication's New Acts' records, several of the turns are reviewed under that designation. They fully rate notice for theatrical historians.

Meanwhile, if the Moscow Circus stand in Manhattan is disappointing, for whatever combination of circumstances, a theatrical trade paper critic must express regret. Such talent inspires awe. It is entitled to the maximum of respect. Let the circus come again another time and at a better time.

OLEG POPOV
Clown, Slack Wire Artist

When the Moscow Circus goes abroad, the roster of turns may be altered from tour to tour since the Amalgamation of State Circuses of the Soviet Union has some 7,000 performers from which to make selections. But apparently Oleg Popov is usually a standard feature for export.

Call him a droll fellow in oversize checker cap, sloppy pants and white makeup. He is a juggler of sorts and a slack wire performer of considerable finesse. Upon these considerable basic talents he has constructed his role of head clown. Actually it only himself and one assistant who handle all the comic relief.

The awkward placement of the single ring at Madison Square Garden and the vast distance between Popov and thousands of the patrons clearly meant that many of his pantomimic bits were obscured. In a smaller hall he undoubtedly would establish a more intimate rapport with an American audience than was possible opening night. Nonetheless it was sufficiently evident that he is a clown of quiet, imaginative hokum, much authority. What he does he does deftly and without undue milking a workfault of many circus clowns. He has great "presence" and is a trouper in the best tradition. His like would be hard to duplicate in the roster of any average circus.

While there are familiar bits in his repertory, reminscent of things American circus clowns do, in general there is a quality of individuality. He is not just a clown but a stellar figure. From the protocol observable at the finale the stars of the visiting show are Popov, Filatov and jugglerstrongman Vsevolod Kherts.

Popov is a friendly, never a mean, funnyman. There is a strain of whimsy, only an occasional hint of vulgarity, as thumbing the nose at the audience. His assistant (unbilled) is obviously no more than second banana. He's a promising, if far more obvious, performer.

Oleg Popov is certainly the only Russian circus clown most people will ever have seen. And he's very likeable. Land.

VOLZHANSKY GROUP (4)
Highwire

This is one of the great high wire acts of history. Stunt after stunt inspires audience gasps and mounting anxiety. They start on a livel wire stretch but one end is soon elevated, then raised again. From this raised perch another wire leads in the opposite direction up near the roof. One of the men dons special slippers and climbs his precarious way up this final steep incline. Midway he pauses to shake the wire violently to prove his control. It hardly needed proof.

Among the tricks are slides on roller skates, slides to a jumpoff platform from which the man must reach his safety landing at the end of the leap.

The two men work with balancing poles alone. Most of the time, but with exceptions, the three girls have safety hooks on their girdles. American will readily think of the Wallendas of Ringling fame and Detroit tragedy. However the style and presentation is quite different. It might be remarked that the Russian gear, considering the elevation and risky performance seems strangely fragile.

Turn opened the second half of the circus. It presents a strain on a reviewer's descriptive prose. Let it be recorded as a worldbeater. Land.

KHODZHABAEV COSSACKS (6)
Horsemanship

This turns served to close the first half of the Moscow Circus at Madison Square Garden. The men are possessed of a fiery vitality and suppleness of body. They perform on small horses (about 200 pounds) of stunning vigor and discipline.

With many a shout and whoop, with an atmosphere of barbarian splendor, this troupe carried plenty of audience impact. Land.

DIAHANN CARROLL
Songs
80 MINS.
Shoreham Hotel, Washington

Diahann Carroll launched a new nitery act here which she takes next to the Sands in Las Vegas Oct. 12 as headliner along with Allan Sherman. It is a good 30 minutes too long, and, as a result, she lost a lot of her Shoreham Hotel Blue Room audience before she finished. The management, of course, lost something more material; i.e. countless drink orders because waiters aren't allowed to serve during the show. Miss Carroll was on 80 minutes.

Perhaps she was only attempting to try out extra numbers to get audience reaction during this break-in date. But she left 'em squirming; she didn't leave 'em hungry.

Miss Carroll has many ways with a song. She sings jazz, blues, sweet hot and even hootenanny. Her treatment of numbers, in fact, is something like a Peggy Lee, Lena Horne, Dinah Shore and Joan Baez on the same bill. And that's not a bad parlay; the talented Miss Carroll is as good with one style of music as another.

She has an interesting selection of songs with excellent arrangements handled by her musical director, Warren Meyers. Her opener is "How About You?", followed by "More Than You Know" and a loud, brassy "Goody, Goody." The "My Fair Lady" tune "Show Me," is handled in a fascinating way as a jazz rouser.

Among other selcetions, with the able Bob Cross Orchestra giving her expert backing, were "Wish I Were in Love Again," "Am I Blue?", "Taking a Chance on Love," a highspirited, feather boa swinging "Dinah," "After You've Gone" and "Stormy Weather."

In a red spotlight she raised the temperature on the way most vocalists sing, "Heat Wave."

For a pair of folk numbers, her guitarist, Paul Paomiere, was her only accompaniment. They were "Brown Baby," with its social message, and "Where Are You Going My Baby."

One obvious choice for scissoring to shorten her act is a long monolog about her trip to some fancy Dan's apartment. It is neither funny nor entertaining, and was evidently inserted only to support the obvious fact that she is a talened actress in addition to having a special singing voice.

Her "Sweetest Sounds I Ever Heard" from her "No Strings" role is the final number.

Miss Carroll spends most of her performance in unusual attire. She wears full length black velvet culottes with a transparent, loosely fitting blouse over a figure-hugging, white satin top. For the jazz routines and the finale, she changes into flapper era long fringe over a short skirt. Carp.

VLADIMIR DOVEYOV GROUP (7)
Acrobats, Stilt Jumpers

One of the truly sensational turns playing the U.S. under the Cultural Exchange deal with the Moscow Circus. Fast, gasp-getting and superbly trained masters of somersalts, these men could top any show anywhere and, if free to do so, could tour the world, assured of audience impact.

Climax has one acrobat on high stilts propelled off a teeterboard into a high back somersalt. A magnificent sight thrill. Land.

VALENTIN FILATOV'S BEARS

The Moscow Circus, for all the variety of furious achievements preceding, is topped and stunningly concluded with this circus-within-circus. A tall man in a purple suit and shiny black boots, Filatov demonstrates his authority over a large number of bears of various ages and sizes, down to cubs. While bear acts are familiar enough, few could claim to have viewed the like of this performance.

The sheer range of the tricks alone would command delighted disbelief anywhere. One animal picks up a bicycle entirely by itself, mounts, balances and begins riding about for uninterrupted minutes, wholly free of guidance or cue. The left turns, rights turns, crosses and general performance is amazing. Amazing, too, are the performances of a whole group of bears on bicycles. Later, two of them ride motorcycles partly by searchlight in the dark.

Another wonder is the bear whose balancing while on his back is climaxed with his handling of lighted torches. Then there is the audience recoil to the ludicrous prizefight between two bears.

The human interest in these enormous beasts and in the training skill implicit in the performance justifies a toast to Dr. Pavlov, the Russian conditioned reflex wizard, and to Filatov, a wizard in his own terms. Land.

MICHAEL NIKOLAEV GROUP (5)
Gymnasts

Another fast and furious divertissment with the congress of wows called the Moscow Circus. These men make it on four-sided high bar (turnstile) which enables them to leap, revolve, narrowly avert one another's hurtling bodies.

Exciting perfection of gymnastic agility. Land.

VLADIMIR ZAMOTKIN GROUP (4)
Giant Wheel Acrobats

Two men and two girls, young and personable, work wonders with huge wheels which they cause to spin, gyrate and lean in dancing rhythmns. A distinctly "circusy" presentation the imagination and physical coordination displayed is on a par with the high entertainments standards of this Moscow Circus.

Surefire anywhere. Land.

SOCCER PLAYING DOGS
Victoria Olkhovikova, trainer

Climaxing a great dog and pony turn is an immensely amusing soccer game played by teams of uniformed boxers who leap with reckless abandon for balloons and score points. Audience loves every second. Net goals are guarded by dogs who have to be held in leash by trainers lest they join the fray. In scoring points the dogs are apt to knock down the goal and the man. A delicious pandemonium is created.

The forepart of Miss Olkhovikova's performance could stand alone but with this madhouse finish the act is historic. It is one of the "naturals" in the Moscow Circus for publicity attention and word-of-mouth. Land.

The newest "big band sound" blaring in the night stillness around Los Angeles emanates from a seven-man combo installed in a cooperative nitery venture. Page Cavanaugh led a trio for years in L.A. boites, arranged and cut many a disk over the years. Chipping in along with six other solidly established sidemen and arrangers working the sundry show business valves available to top tooters in and around Hollywood, Cavanaugh & Co. laid out $35,000 to take over an old beanery, convert it into a flourishing nitery on the in-bound freeway fringe of San Fernando Valley. It is a click.

RCA Victor stepped in, put up coin, got group to simply bill self Page 7 and an album shortly will be released. Victor also is supervising bookings (such as next Sunday's CBS-TV Ed Sullivan Show) to get outfit wider exposure.

The "big band" sound evolves from rather unusual instrumentation for a combo. Crossing the street from usual customary styling, designed for muted effect, Page 7 goes allout fortissimo. Heart of the crew is Cavanaugh's lively 88 and Lou McCreary and Bob Wells side-by-siding on alternately bass trumpets and slide trombones. The subtle touch is added by Bob Jung playing flute, alto and bass saxes. No tenor sax, deliberately. Slim Tanner on bass, Jack Sperling on drums and guitarist John Pisano round it out.

The brass provides the robust background, the rhythm instruments the basic beat and Cavanaugh's piano the lace. When the group attacks tunes made standard by such keyboard-keyed big bands

Irving Gray's Comeback

Irving Gray, at one time personal manager for Milton Berle and who has been out of the business for a few years because of illness, has resumed personal management.

Gray has opened an office with comedian Alan Gale as a client.

Sands, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, Sept. 24.

Alan King, Bobby Rydell, Harry Nofal, Copa Girls (12), Antonie Morelli Orch (19); produced & staged by Jack Entratter; stage direction, Harold Dobrow; $4 minimum.

Alan King, charter member of the Strip's fraternity of standup comedians, has always wanted to play the Sands. "After 14 years I finally made it!" he told his first night audience. King's deal with impresario Jack Entratter is for three years, two engagements per year.

King's wonderful facial expressions and his perfect timing are an excellent blend with his fine acting ability. His situation stories are funny because they have a truthful ring; his hilarious attacks on airlines, the telephone company, health foods, insurance companies, the American Medical Assn., and wives are classic bits of honest humor.

As usual, he brings in much new matrial on this strip. At one point he tells about his two-year film career at Warner Bros.: "The only thing I have to show for it is an old trenchcoat I stole from Dana Clark."

Bobby Rydell, singing star of the session, shows again that he's at the top of the crop of upcoming youngsters in the tune-tossing racket. He is personable, poised, and delivers his well-balanced repertoire with adult authority.

In his songbag are "All right, Okay, You Win," "Old Black Magic" (with an interesting, bouncy arrangement), "Volare," "When I Take My Sugar To Tea," "My Baby Just Cares For Me," "Walking My Baby Back Home," "Nobody Till Somebody Loves You," and melody from his recent pic, "Bye, Bye, Birdie." Rocky Valentine smoothly guides the Antonio Morelli orch (19) for Rydell.

Holdover Renne Stuart calypso production number features vocalist Harry Nofal and the dozen Copa lovelies.

Diahann Carroll and Allan Sherman open here Oct. 12.

The Savoy, London

London, Sept. 20.

Nicki & Noel, Two Maxwells, Leslie Roberts Silhouettes (8), Ian Stewart and Francisco Cavez Orchs; $7 minimum.

Current layout at the Savoy makes for amiable post-prandial entertainment, with all the emphasis on visual appeal. Two sight acts, one an American dance duo, the other a couple of comedy equilibrists, plus the resident line of eight dancers add up to a solid show.

For the dance team of Nicki & Noel, the engagement represents their first date outside the U.S. Their elegant adagio style, leavened by some comedy terping, has a class quality. They move gracefully, and their 15-minute stint is adroitly varied in content. The femme partner's version of the demands on a dime-a-dance hostess adds a note of novelty to the act.

The Two Maxwell offer a deft line in acrobatic balancing, and their lugubrious manner hypoes the comedy effects. It is an immaculately tailored routine, which deservedly gets yock ringsider reaction.

Two numbers by the Leslie Roberts' Silhouettes, one featuring bar stools, and the other a Russian fantasy, provide diverting opening and closing numbers. The two house bands are on hand for lively nonstop dancing, and accomplished backing. Myro.

Conrad Hilton, Chi

Chicago, Sept. 26.

"Hats Off!", produced by Merriel Abbott; choreography and staging, Bob Frellson; music and lyrics, Hessie Smith; costumes, John Baur and Bernard Peterson; orchestration, Norman Krone; with Lee Caron, Blackstone Jr. Helga Neff & Theo Ernst, Danielle Rigoulot, Boulevar-Dears (5), Boulevar-Dons (5), Jimmy Palmer Orch.; $2.50-$3 cover.

Merriel Abbott has been fashioning new editions of these frappe revues for the Boulevard Room every six months since 1948, and their quality level has been consistently high. "Hats Off!", the current ice variety show, is no exception, providing a solid hour of pleasant diversion for tourists and the traveling salesmen who inhabit the world's largest hotel.

Miss Abbott has been increasing the importance of non-skating acts in recent shows with varying degrees of success. Lee Caron, who bills himself as "The Tall Texan", is tall and withal a facile traditional monologist. However, the ice shows are primarily visual productions, and the break in tempo for a straight talk act is abrupt and a bit jarring.

This is less true of Blackstone Jr., whose turn is essentially a sight act. He's a firstrate illusionist, and works with authority and dexterity. If he faults at all, it is in a somewhat academic approach to his legerdemain. To be more specific, his turn is sometimes more of a demonstration than it is a show.

The featured skaters are top-drawer, and their bladework is done with grace and skill. Helga Neff & Theo Ernst are colorful and expert in their lifts, twirls and spins, and Danielle Rigoulout cuts a fine figure in French and Spanish skate-terp medleys. The skate choristers execute Bob Frellson's generally imaginative production numbers artfully and with discipline.

Also praiseworthy for their part in the clockwork show are production singers Sherry Stevens and Ernie McClean, who, without being obtrusive, give considerable added texture to the show by getting the most out of Hessie Smith's sometimes turgid lyrics.

Royal York, Toronto

Toronto, Sept. 25.

"Hawaiian Revue," with Haunani Kahalewai, Boyce Rodriguez, Beverly Noa, Mate Ng, others; Moxie Whitney & His Royal Orch (14); $4 cover.

New show marks return of Moxie Whitnel and his Royal York Orch (14) from their summer vacation and introduction of new revue-type divertissement. He brought back with him an Hawaiian troupe which will play Canadian Pacific hotels in Toronto, Winnipeg, Regina, Calgary, Vancouver and Victoria.

Revue runs 50-minutes and makes one nightly appearance in 450-capacity Imperial Room, which was jammed with satisfied customers. Show opens with three unbilled, finger-weaving singers in native costume.

They switch to hillbilly styling, do a fire dance ritual to darkened room and build up to warbling of Haunani Kahalewai and baritone singing of Boyce Rodriguez. A hula slithering solo of Beverly Noa and Tahitian dancer Mate Ng is also standout.

Kudos also goes to singing of Haunani Kahalewai and Boyce Rodriguez, plus the dancers. Withal, a fine performance which also includes elfin dancing and more restrained undulations. Whitney band, besides giving solid backing to revue's acts, also plays for the dance seshes. McStay.

Silver Slipper, L. V.

Las Vegas, Sept. 24.

Hank Henry, Lili St. Cyr, Sparky Kaye, Danny Jacobs, Eddie Innes, Madcaps (2), Slipperettes (6), George Redman orch (4); produced by Eddie Fox; presented by Bob Schulze; no cover or minimum.

With bawdy burlesque comic Hank Henry and classy stripper Lili St. Cyr co-starring, producer Eddie Fox has a "Top Banana Meets Top Peeler" situation which is a good balance of comedy and sex.

Kicking off her new three-year, 60-week spread pact with the Slipper, Miss St. Cyr looks lovelier than ever. The star has a fascinatingly aloof attitude about her slow-but-sure abandonment of outer and under garments; her trademark onstage bath is done with exciting finesse.

Henry and his partners-in-fun, Sparky Kaye, Danny Jacobs, and Eddie Innes, are, as usual, top salesmen of low comedy. Henry, with the superb comic face and physique, leads his gang in an hilarious burlesque of burlesque. They lampoon the "Cleopatra" film (with Henry as the heroine, natch), then perform an outlandish slapstick skit showing how films are made—all very funny stuff for all brows.

The Madcaps (2) balance the bill with their humorous attack on harmonica playing, which is good for many more laughs. The beautiful Slipperettes (6) are sandwiched in some colorful production numbers, backed by the George Redman orch (4).

Show skedded indefinitely.

Harrah's, Lake Tahoe

Lake Tahoe, Oct. 23.

Arthur Godfrey, Nipsey Russell, Buffalo Bills (4), Geezinslaw, Bros. (4), Kong Ling, Dixieland Eight, Moro-Landis Singers and Dancers (12); Leighton Noble Orc (18), John Parker conducting.

Arthur Godfrey has brought many of his CBS radio show staff along for his initial Tahoe outing, and the hour-plus effort rates as first class entertainment. Godfrey's up front for much of the turn, works in tandem with some of the other acts. But for the most part he gives his supporting crew good chance to showcase individual talents. And, for a capper, he's brought along his performing horse Goldie.

Introed by a special scripted "Mr. CBS," Godfrey immediately sets the right-at-home mood with a bit of topical talk, then gets in the vocal and instrumental swing with "Love Being Here With You," "I'd Give a Million Tomorrows," and a medly of Hawaiian tunes.

He sits in on banjo with the Dixieland Eight for some uptempo titles, and makes with a bit of choreog with the Moro-Landis Dancers. He also scores with clever special material (written by Lyn Duddy and Jerry Bresler, both of whom have had a long association with Godfrey) to "You Can't Take It With You" and a melange of "You're Nobody Til Somebody Loves You," "I Wish You Love," "Let's Fall In Love" and "Sweet Sixteen." Later titles are done during stroll among tablers with wireless mike.

Before his exit the vet horseman brings Goldie on stage, puts his palomino through routines including various dance steps, kneeling, answering to vocal commands. Horse is well trained and responds rapidly.

The Geezinslaw Bros., on banjo, mandolin, guitar, and a bass instrument made from tub, broom, and heavy cord, accent their bumpkin dress and mannerisms with country-western stuff and a hilarious original called the "Ballad of Billie Sol Estes."

The Buffalo Bills reprise their familiar "76 Trombones" from "Music Man," do barbershop sans musical backing, and fill in on other spots in the show. Four show much regard for harmony, and have a distinct sound.

Kong Ling, a Chinese import for this show who has worked with Godfrey before, essays the likes of "China Nites" and "Are You Lonesome Tonight." She's a delicate beauty with a tiny voice, but with the electronic aids she comes across in top fashion. Interpretations are sensitive and assured.

John Parker expertly batons the well-rehearsed Leighton Noble Orc.

Nipsey Russell, also in debut here, is erudite, articulate and funny. His material, part of it aimed with a light touch at the racial issues, is fresh and new and the comic has a great talent for putting it across. Lines are fast, timing excellent, and stage demeanor impressive. Russell also wins good hand for demonstration and humorous explanation of the bossa nova, twist, mash potatoes, slop, et al, done atop small dais. He's a good bet for any big room.

Donald O'Connor due Oct. 10.

Long.

Basin Street West, L.A.

Los Angeles, Sept. 24.

Ramsay Lewis Trio, Barbara Randolph, Paul Moore Trio; $1.50 admission; two-drink minimum.

Steady patrons of this jazz spot would be less surprised to find Wilt Chamberlain staging a basketball game as part of the show than finding themselves involved in a cello solo. Fortunately for the faithful, the highlight of the Ramsay Lewis Trio's gig is the novel but virtuoso performance of bass player Eldee Young when he switches to a cello for a memorable moment called "Hello, Cello."

Although leader Lewis says Young has been doubling on cello for some time, it's strange that this fantastic performance hasn't been spotlighted before. Using the instrument in the same manner as his bass, Young gets a wider melodic range, working it as a guitar or as a bass. Although a natural for recording, "Hello, Cello" should be seen to be really believed.

Pianist-leader Lewis played it cool and calm at Monday's (16) opener (possibly unhappy with the badly-tuned piano). Although his playing was always dominant, he never conveyed the merry mood of Young or pianist Red Holt which quickly encompassed the hip audience. Set heard included "The More I See You," "A Salute to Ray Charles" and "The Party's Over," plus the "Cello" item.

Canary Barbara Randolph, who debuted locally last April at the Rendezvous Room, has discarded, for this stint, some of the sophistication displayed at that intimery. The relaxed, freer mood shows in the casual, broader style needed for this large room.

Although she has the beauty and chic needed for the supper clubs, Miss Randolph's current song stylings are geared to the bigger, noisier niteries. Top item, a Carl Jones arrangement of "What Kind of Fool Am I?," gives the overdone ditty a needed new sound. She's ably backed by Paul Moore trio. Aland Dixon emcees show which is in for two weeks. Robe.

Shamrock, Houston

Houston, Sept. 27.

Frank Gorshin, The Smart Set, Paul Neighbors Orch (10); no cover or minimum.

Frank Gorshin is a master at his main trade—an impressionist. Actually, he goes beyond impressions, his better carbons generally being caricatures in which he captures facial expressions, movements, voice and style of subjects.

He impersonates such as Alfred Hitchcock, Robert Mitchum, Anthony Quinn, Marlon Brando, Sidney Greenstreet and others. However, in other areas preem night left something to be desired. Gorshin never quite establishes rapport with orchestra—unusual here, as Neighbors has one of better show bands—and indications are more rehearsal time is needed. Gorshin apologized to auditors, said he hadn't had chance to sleep for 48 hours.

Actually, impressionist also has good pipes and handles tunes well. This aspect of act undoubtedly will improve in couple of outings.

The Smart Set, a song and dance quartet (Dharon Chmel, Jean White, Dave Rossow and Ron Del) harmonize well, and show particularly well in Charleston terping. But unless it was just a bad night, Rossow and Miss Chmel should forget their somewhat shaky spins and lifts that literally had auditors at stageside ducking. Otherwise, it's a fine act.

Paul Neighbors Orch does excellent job with opening act, and didn't appear at fault in spotty work with Gorshin.

Show plays two frames. Skip.

The International Theatre Restaurant apparently is just coasting along awaiting the arrival of "George White"s Scandals" early in October. But this modest fill-in bill plays very smoothly despite the fact there are only three acts and no production numbers.

Lou Alexander, who's been around in the east for more than five years, continues to show promise as an off-beat comedian. Still a personable youngster, he seems to be groping for a better routine to display his excellent material.

Saving a vigorous song and unusual dance bit for the climax after lagging with some of his quips is hard to understand. It seems a pity, too, since such gags as the ones about Florida, the Jewish band and package tours get lost.

Probably the slickest bit—his description of three different types of comics—is badly spotted near the close when it should obviously be up front. All this youth needs is better rearrangement.

Angela Drake, a stately, dark-haired femme, has the vocal chords to go places. She clicks nicely with "Day of Wine and Roses" and a medley of such tunes as "Man Who Got Away" and "It's a Blue Blue World." Some of her other songs seem unwisely spotted. But once she realigns her repertoire, Miss Drake will have an act of merit.

Terp team of Lita & Cortez is much the same as when the couple was at El Chico about a year ago. They do Brazilian and Argentine dances with ease. Their payoff number is the bossa nova which they handle deftly, but grabbing guests from the aud for participation in this number is a questionable practice. Femme is comely and remarkably gracious.

Mike Durso's band handles the show with ease and also plays for patron terping. Wear.

Hotel Roosevelt, N. Y.

Juan Carlos Copes Ballet (11) with Maria Nieves, Roberto Florio, Enrique Mendez, Hector Garrido, Milt Shaw Orch; $2-$2.50 cover.

The Hotel Roosevelt's policy of bringing in talent which has showcased in other midtown hotels is working out admirably. This inning they've set the fullfledged Argentine ballet for the subjects of the former Lombardoland. With this booking the Roosevelt seems to have taken on a greater sophistication. Those who formerly came for the business men's bounce now seem to appreciate the thoughtful and colorful movements of contemporary dance. It seems to be working out well, both artistically as well as attendance-wise.

The Juan Carlos Copes Ballet is a well-disciplined and excellently choreographed troupe from South America. In this company of 11 is seen the distinctive dance designs of the sister continent. It's separate and apart from its Spanish mother countries. They have developed along their own lines even though remnants remain of the Iberian culture with which these terp designs were originally endowed. Indeed this group's catalog is both numerous and impressive. They reach from the tango to the milonga and candombe with suggestions of the maxixe and samba. They've woven these movements into a harmonious and well-balanced dissertation on the South American dance habits.

The personnel of the group is headed by Copes and a sinuous partner Maria Nieves. They're an arresting and personable pair. Both essay these terps with vigor and enthusiasm. Their solos, pairings and work with the rest of the company comprising three other terp-twains, have rousing and interesting moments. Copes & Miss Nieves worked out in the recent Abbe Lane & Xavier Cugat show at the Plaza's Persian Room, and it was on the basis of this show that the Roosevelt bought the entire company. Previously, the group worked at Angel Lopez' Chateau Madrid. In both instances, they gave excellent auditions.

The company's accoutrements include the bandoneon played eloquently by Enrique Mendez, and the singing of Roberto Florio who does Latin tunes floridly. Costuming is appropriate and colorful, and the musical backing is handled by Hector Garride, who leads the Milt Shaw band through the intricate score admirably. Shaw, incidentally, provides a bright and vivid beat for the dancers. Jose.

Ye Little Club, B. H.

Beverly Hills, Cal., Sept. 24.

John Gabriel, Monica Janell, Paul Suder, Jack Smalley; two-drink minimum.

Paying a return visit to Marshall Edson's spot, John Gabriel reconfirms the promise he displayed last February. The surprise is that he hasn't made it really big since then. This Gabriel needs someone to blow his horn. The potential is still there, although some new additions to his repertoire would help.

The swinging, easy style that sold him before is still one of the handsome young baritone's chief assets, plus an awareness of lyrics remarkable in a singer with no more exposure than Gabriel has had. His opening "Once In A Lifetime" couldn't be topped despite his considerable variety of tunes, including the almost forgotten "River Stay Way From My Door."

Making her debut at Ye Little Club, sepia songstress Monica Janell, gifted with considerably more voice than the average boite chirper, should watch her "mike" style. Singing straight into it full voice amplifies her high tones into shrill ones. She swings easily between a coo-ing "How Long Has This Been Going On" and a moaning "Come Rain Or Come Shine." And Billy Barnes should write her a fan letter for what she does for his "Something Cool."

Paul Suder's piano and Jack Smalley's bass provide able support for the vocalists and the team has some fun experimenting with some flute-trombone variations between shows.

Bill is in for two weeks with options unless Playboy Club preempts Miss Janell. If so, she'll be replaced next week by Jan Baker. Robe.

Flamingo, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, Sept. 26.

Ella Fitzgerald, Myron Cohen, Inga & Rolf, Russ Black Orch (15); presented by Morris Lansburgh, produced by Mitch DeWood; lighting, Hugo Granata; $4 minimum.

Because Ella Fitzgerald is one of the top jazz vocalists in the biz and because Myron Cohen has lofty status as a standup comedian, plus the fact Inga & Rolf are excellent as a dance team, Morris Lansburgh has a nicely balanced musicomedy show.

Miss Fitzgerald's flawless music-instrument pipes offer such numbers as "Sunny Side Of The Street," "I'm Beginning To See The Light," "Ain't Misbehavin'," "Witchcraft," "Feeling Like Someone In Love," "Into Each Life Some Rain Must Fall," "Silk Shiny Stockings" and "Bill Bailey." During the latter she does some okay impreshes of other femme singers.

Finale is a wild scat session with her trumpet ace, Roy Eldredge. Tommy Flanagan is at the 88; Jim Hughart, bass; and Gus Johnson, drums—all added by Miss Fitzgerald to the Russ Black orch (15) for this gig.

Cohen, the master dialectician, adds some new stories to his classic bits. To enjoy Cohen at a maximum, he must be watched while he's working, as his facial expressions are an important part of his very funny word pictures.

The acrobatic artistry of the handsome terp twosome, Inga & Rolf, received cheers from first-nighters—and a big yock when Rolf, clad as a sailor, tossed his beautiful partner into the arms of surprised maestro Black.

This bill, with the usual fine lighting by Hugo Granata, is in for four frames. Bobby Darin and Pat Cooper will follow. Duke.

Pier 600, N. O.

New Orleans, Sept. 24.

Dukes of Dixieland; no cover, no minimum.

The Pier 600 management couldn'd have done much better than the Dukes of Dixieland to occupy the podium at Al Hirt's Bourbon st. home base while the bearded maestro is away on concert and other engagements. Judging from the steam and enthusiasm the boys whipped up opening night, it looks like capacity biz from now on.

The boys play traditional beer-wagon sound of authentic dixieland, which is prominent in their repertoire of dixieland evergreens, such as "That's A-Plenty," "When the Saints Go Marching' In," "South Rampart Street Parade" and "Muskrat Ramble." It swings easily and much of the time to handclapping accompaniment by the customers.

Combo comprises piano, two trombones, trumpet, clarinet, drums, bass and banjo. Individually, the Assunto freres and pere are in top form. Frank Assunto's trumpet lipping is as good as ever, but it's Fred's florid showmanship and sandpaper-rough playing style on the trombone that makes most of the visual and musical excitement. Papa Assunto's finger work on the banjo is fast and has a genuine ring of authenticity.

Show runs two weeks until Oct. 5. Liuz.

Mister Kelly's, Chi

Chicago, Sept. 23.

Kaye Ballard, Bill Henderson, John Frigo Trio; $2.50 cover.

Owner George Marienthal has a winning bill in the combination of Kaye Ballard and Bill Henderson. Miss Ballard has been absent from the Chi scene for three years, and a packed opening night house attested to the fact that she was missed. Henderson more than holds his own in this show, and returned to the stage twice for spontaneous callbacks after the ritual encore.

Miss Ballard attacks her song and comedy with ferocious zest, Cleveland eagerness, East Side sophistication and sheer kinetic energy. She moderates occasionally for a straight ballad, but this seems a process of reining in her explosive projection.

Cleverest of her song satires are a lament envying Audrey Hepburn's ability to eat anything without getting fat, a tune tale of her troubles as a tourist in Mexico, and an artful caricature of a rock and roll singer. Less successful is a heavy-handed satire of an aging femme nitery performer on her last "farewell tour."

Her ballads have a pungent quality to them, particularly two newies, "Maybe This Time" and "I Want You To Be The First To Know," the latter by her musical director, Artie Siegel.

Henderson's forte as a singer is his ability to strip the lyrics and music down to their essentials. His forthright approach is less an interpretation of the song than it is a search for the essence of the tune's musical and verbal meaning. He is also an engaging showman, without the pretense that marks many of the serious jazz stylists.

Henderson scores best when finding that the meaning of the song is in the rhythm, and he alternately toys with or strikes hard at the tempo in "Got A Lot of Livin'," "You're Nobody" and "Bye Bye Blackbird." Of his ballads, he clicks best with a tender "I Wish You Love" and sensitive handling of "As Long As She Needs Me." Mor.

Dunes, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, Sept. 27.

Eleanor Powell, Rip Taylor, Arturo Romero Strings (13), Dunes Dancers (10), Bill Reddie Orch (17); produced by Major Riddle; stage direction, Eddie Lynch; $4 minimum.

Eleanor Powell is back with another pleasant nostalgic display of classy footwork which is embellished by the Arturo Romero string group (13) and the wonderful nonsense of Rip Taylor—both being blended happily into her act. Backing the bash is the fine music of Bill Reddie's orch (17).

Dedicating her turn to the idea of "bringing back tap dancing," Miss Powell showcases her artistry in a superb way that makes audiences wish that pedal fluttering had never faded into the background.

Taylor precedes the star with his own act—new for this four week holdover engagement—tossing an abundance of fresh material. The comedian shows he has a well-trained voice when he does a medley of Miss Powell's Broadway show tunes.

Holdover production number initials, featuring the sultry chirp-terp talents of exciting Sheila Cass, fronting eight femme and two male dancers.

Show is in for four weeks, with no replacement set at presstime. Duke.

New Latin Qtr., Tokyo

Tokyo, Sept. 24.

Musical Academy (13), Rie Taniuchi, Frank Newall, Les Girls (5), Keichiro Ebihara Orch; $4.17 cover.

The most progressive of Tokyo niteries which presents most of the big names that play Nippon, the New Latin Quarter has taken another step forward by improving the quality of shows between the headline attractions while keeping the cover at what is a reasonable rate by current standards here.

Topping the card is a 13-member male chorus called the Musical Academy, which curiously opens the show as well as closes it. Tagged as a "sing along" outfit, the group strives for the robust sound of Mitch Miller's outfit, but doesn't measure up. And nobody in the audience was singing along.

Yet the harmonizers manage to register while running through such numbers as "Side By Side," "The Longest Day" and the much-sung Japanese folk number, "Sakura." Presentation could be brighter if the group worked in more interesting formations than what appear to be military drills. Act has shown to better advantage in support of star soloists.

Next to closing is Rie Taniuchi, Japan's leading exotic who radiates more s.a. than the competish while never baring her bosom, as the others do. A Vegas vet who knows every male eye in the house is on her, despite the lure of hostesses all over the place, Miss Taniuchi does a fast and flashy turn of swivel-hipping while never dropping her smile.

An Aussie comic juggler, Frank Newall is strictly a time killer. His bag of tricks contains nothing that gets even a rise from the audience. Tolerable, Newall becomes distasteful when he apparently reaches into the sewer for a laugh and waves a rubber rat over the ringside tables.

Les Girls, an unsmiling quintet of dancing girls in flesh-colored tights, are a sometime house filler act whose paces might have been choreographed by a gymnastic instructor.

Accompaniment by Ebihara & His Lobsters is first-rate. Band, one of Japan's best, also plays for dancing. Jamp.

Hotel Roosevelt, N. O.

New Orleans, Sept. 27.

Marie Wilson, Dean Barlow, Rola & Rolan, Leon Kelner Orch (11); $2.50 weeknight minimum; $4 Sats.

Marie Wilson looks and sounds like pure gold for Seymour Weiss, Blue Room boniface, this session. If the swank spot doesn't pull in a steady flow of customers during her two-week stand, blame it on the tropical disturbance in the Gulf which has brought on a rainy season. Certainly not on Miss Wilson. For she dishes out good solid fun, and her gowns are eyebrow lifters. Comedienne's turn is a natural for tourists who throng this spot. Opening before a large crowd Thursday night (26), Miss Wilson proved she is as breathlessly naive as when she starred in Ken Murray's revues. She double-entendred her way through the Blue Room's initial show of the fall season.

She tees off with "Diamonds Are A Girl's Best Friend," with new lyrics; follows with "Good Things Happen When You Give" and swings into the Cole Porter oldie, "Wake Up and Dream." She contributes her own new lyrics to this one, too. With this she bows off and on comes Dean Barlow, whose footwork in soft-shoe and other terp numbers is topdrawer.

Miss Wilson returns as a geisha girl to sing a westernized version of Puccini's "Madame Butterfly" titled "Try The Geisha." As she backs out of the spotlight, Rola & Rolan provide sock hand-on-hand and head-on-head balancing. However, their routines are hindered somewhat by the room's big chandelier which hangs over the stage. Nevertheless they score solidly.

Miss Wilson returns in a new costume that provokes gasps. She sings "Big Fat Mama" and "A Girl Named Eunice in 302" for more laughts. Her finale is a trunk routine to the music of "Among My Souvenirs." The truck yields, among other things, a pack of old love letters ("Keep These in Scarlet Ribbons"), and her first bra at 10 (to the tune "This Could Be The Start of Something Big"). It's a solid number, and the headliner bowed off to an ovation. Liuz.

Riviera, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, Sept. 23.

Harry Belafonte, Dancers (10), Singers (6), Jack Cathcart Orch (17), Belafonte Musicians (5); produced by Phil Stein; presented by Elias Atol; stage direction, Milt Bronson; $4 minimum.

Harry Belafonte, in his eighth visit to the Riviera, brings an exciting, colorful package which will be hard to top on his ninth trip. Belafonte surrounds himself with highly talented singers and dancers in an all-new show; he modestly plants his lovely wife Julie among the fine male and femme terping group.

With his stylized tone and delivery, the star dramatically offers such numbers as "Look Over Yonder," "Rosie," "On Top Of Old Smoky," "Shake That Little Foot," "Hayo Shevet," "Merci Bon Die," "Sailor Man," "Man Smart," "Jamaica Farewell," and "Back To Back," latter being his audience singalong replacing the familiar "Matilda."

Offstage echoing voices, plus imaginative lighting (by the show's producer, Phil Stein) embellish the memorable 90 minutes. The choreography by Walter Nicks is splendilly fresh. Howard Roberts capably conducts the Jack Cathcart orch (17) and five added Bela. Duke.

Liborio, N.Y.

Lilia Guizar, Willy Vanders Dancers (4), Candido, German La Batard & Pancho Cardenas Orchs, Juan Tarraza; $3.50 minimum.

Perez Blanco has been tapping the Latin name market of late. Now that the playing time for the chile-country performers has been cut because of the loss of Cuba, it's a far simpler matter to get names into New York.

Newcomer here for the first time is Lilia Guizar, daughter of Tito who last worked New York with her padre at the Waldorf-Astoria Starlight Roof. She's more experienced and more mature performer today and capable of being on her own. The act she brings to the Liborio is a comparatively simple turn, but one which brings out a flair for comedy.

She works bilingually and in an animated manner. She looks at the lighter side of a song and endows each with spontaneous choreography. Miss Guizar, working in a brunet wig when caught, is a pleasant looking girl who can make her way in the cafe sector.

The Willy Vanders Dancers comprising Vanders and three femmes, are vigorous operators in the modern Latin terps. They make much of ritualistic items, some of which are danced in a rather broad vein. Vanders' choreography is well conceived, and his three femme charges carry the dance designs off well.

Bongo drummer Candido, who has spent much time as Miguelito Valdes' accompanist, solos on a three-skin setup and sometimes achieves some exciting effects.

The dance music is by German LeBatard Orchestra who pounds out some floorfilling rhythms. Relief work is by Pancho Cardenas. Dinner concert music is by pianist Juan Tarraza. Jose.

Roostertail, Detroit

Detroit, Sept. 23.

Rick Perry, Kathy Woodruff, Chuck Robinette Orch (8); no cover or minimum.

Rick Perry is a funny fellow who earns his billing as "the thinking man's comic." He deals in appreciative chuckles rather than hearty guffaws, but the chuckles roll continuously during his 30-minute stint.

This young, personable and polished performer has plenty of fresh material, and has learned how to present it for best effects. At the performance caught, he dwelt on children and nutty poems, which were well received by the diners. But his repertoire also includes topical comments on politics, suburban life, sex and the like.

He limited his impersonations at show caught to impressions of Perry Como, Dean Martin and Elvis Presley. He does them cleverly and convincingly and, used as they were as an encore, served to get him off to heavy mitting.

Perry is ready for any medium requiring a good comedian and/or a passable singer. He could be an interesting newcomer to tv or musical comedy. As it is, the better nightclubs will find him the type that will bring in repeat biz.

Kathy Woodruff is a big, brassy, bouncy, blond belter. But, at present she lacks discipline, with her zany antics too obvious. For example, when singing "Tonight" she segues from sweet to saucy several times, totally changing the mood, confusing the audience and sabotaging the song.

A former dancer who has terped at top Vegas and New York spots, she knows her way around and is a promising youngster if she devotes the time and effort her talent deserves. She has that ineffable something that could bring about success, but first she has to control her zany bounciness. Tew.

Blackstone Hotel, Chi

Chicago, Sept. 25.

Sue Carson, Franz Benteler Orch; $1.50-$2 cover.

The Bonaparte Room, like its counterpart on the other side of the Loop, the Drake Hotel's Camellia House, has been trying to break the chanteuse habit. Ben Marshall has done exceedingly well with Henny Youngman, Myron Cohen and others at the Drake, and g.m. Doug Boone was extremely pleased at the showing made by comedienne Caroline Richter last season at the Blackstone.

With this in mind, Boone has launched the new season in the Bonaparte Room with Sue Carson, a shapely and attractive singer-comedienne with a good deal of poise and floor expertise. Her material ranges from several excellent and accurate impressions of singers (Dinah Shore, Pearl Bailey, Lena Horne) to a somewhat sophomoric satire on seven male approaches to seduction.

She's best at broad mimicry, such as sharply-limned spoof of a lament by a stripper, a wacky carbon of stringy-haired femme folk-singer, and a clever mock-intellectual "anthropological dance poem." Miss Carson, who is in until Oct. 12, also displays a fine feel for ballads in a straight version of "I Believe In You." Mor.

Wits End, Atlanta

Atlanta, Sept. 24.

Wits End presentation of "Cleopatra or Nobody Likes a Smart Asp," two-act musical comedy by Don Tucker, Jerry Vandeventer, George Ormiston and Gy Waldron. Features Phil & Nancy Erickson, with Ormiston, Nancie Phillips, Louis Fox; music and lyrics, Tucker; sets, Ralph Moon and Henri Jova; costuming, Robert Griggs; lighting, Dan Kennedy and Bob Provost; $2.50 top.

Wits End Players, with Phil and Nancy Erickson as "anchor men," embarked upon this musical venture after virtually browbeating Don Tucker into writing the music as well as lyrics for this spoof of Hollywood, Madison Avenue, television, radio and, natch, "Cleopatra.

Tucker, equal to the task, did the Ericksons' bidding in two weeks and helped write the book during his spare time. Tunes are top grade.

Musical is presented in 200-seat nightclub owned and operated by the Ericksons, who are partners in a pantomime act. (Nancy got into the act after Phil's partner in "The Merry Mutes," Dick van Dyke, went into television.)

Show is presented on a minuscule stage and the dance (and production numbers are tightly patterned, but well executed. Writing is salient and witty. The fast-moving comedy is strung together with amusing gags and blackouts that get roars from audience.

Nancie Phillips, in the title role ("Cleo" not the asp) wears no wig. Her own black hair cut in the latest Cleo style is okay au naturel.

Erickson, cast as a Hollywood producer who has made a long list of flops, is busy trying to get another production financed. He decides to do "Cleopatra," and the star disrupts his theatrical family by making a play for his director, portrayed by George Ormiston. Louis Fox, as the male lead, is also enmeshed in the wiles of Cleo and Nancy Erickson, as a wronged femme, goes weeping, wailing and trippling through the piece.

Comedy has some slick tunes, including "Too Little, Too Late," "When Love Has Gone," "Three Little Movie Extras," "The Glitter and the Glamor," "Nobody Likes a Smart Asp" and "We're Having an Orgy."

These songs embellish the story line, which is satirical from start to finish. Speed of show is indicated when cast runs through 28 scenes in two acts in little more than an hour, not counting intermission.

Audience views the performance from tables in bistro, and response at show caught amounted to practically an ovation.

"Cleopatra" is presented three nights per week, Tuesday through Thursday, and has packed Wits End since it started its run. Indications are that it will settle down to an engagement that will take it right into next summer, perhaps longer. Lucc.

Tidelands, Houston

Houston, Sept. 24.

Don Adams, Diane Wisdom, Freddie Noble Orch (6); $1.50 entertainment charge.

Comic Don Adams is back on the nitery circuit and his split-second timing and ability to tell a story or toss off one-liners are still with him. So is some of his older material, but nobody minds.

Adams peers at flying unscheduled airlines, golfers—a subject dear to him—weddings, pocket novel literature, the old motion pictures of the British in India, lawyer tv shows and a school for astronauts.

In addition, he does impressions of Cary Grant and James Cagney, but briefly. Adams obviously enjoys his return to club dates, and establishes such rapport that it's difficult for him to get off after 50 minutes.

Diane Wisdom is a handsome blonde thrush with okay pipes, a feeling for lyrics and faultless mike technique. In her songbag are such tunes as "Having Myself a Time," "Always," "You Came A Long Way From St. Louis" and "Too Close For Comfort." Her act timed at about 15 minutes.

Freddie Noble Orch, rapidly developing into one of better bands in area, does excellent job for dancing and show backing.

Show plays two weeks. Skip.

The Girl Who Came To Supper

Boston, Oct. 1.

Singers: Jeremy Brown, Kellie Brytt, Carol Glade, Marian Haraldson, Elaine Labour, Donna Monroe, Ruth Shepard, Maggie Worth, Jack Eddleman, John Felton, Dell Hanley, Barney Johnston, Art Matthews, Bruce Peyton, Jack Raines, Mitchell Taylor.

Musical numbers: "Swing Song," Carpathian National Anthem; "Yaani Kozkolai," "Long Live the King," "I've Been Invited to a Party," "Sir or Ma'am," "Hey Nonny No," "When Foreign Princes Come to Visit Us," "Soliloquies," "Lonely," "London Is a Little Bit of All Right," "What's the Matter With a Nice Beef Stew?" "What Ho, Mrs. Brisket," "Don't Take Our Charlie for the Army," "Saturday Night at the Rose and Crown," "Here and Now," "Coronation Chorale," "How Do You Do, Middle Age," "One Step," "Curt, Clear and Concise," "Tango," "Welcome to Pootzie Van Doyle," "The Coconut Girl," "Paddy McNeil and His Automobile," "Six Lillies of the Valley," "The Walla Walla Boola," "Come Be My True Love," "I'll Remember Her."

This show rates a great big bouquet in all departments, and Florence Henderson lights up the stage with her singing and dancing. This puts her in the top echelons of today's musicomedy field.

A rich panoply of scenes, costumes, talent and score engulfs the audience in its opulence. The first act is off and running, and the second plays superbly, with Jose Ferrer in resplendent costumes and Miss Henderson making the characters come alive with fine credibility.

Comparisons with "My Fair Lady" are going to be inevitable with this one. With the cutting of extraneous matter and up-pacing, the show should make a big impact on Broadway and is a bright bet for panoramic film musical. The score is tuneful and bright, with plenty of hits to suit every taste, from ballads like "Here and Now" to "London Is Little Bit of All Right."

Noel Coward's touch as a song writer is still sure, the Harry Kurnitz book is witty and Joe Layton's dances are amazingly uninhibited, unorthodox and hip. The wildest scene in the show is Miss Henderson's click in which she reprises the entire story of her fifth rate show.

There's a complete vaude turn, with Tessie O'Shea as a fish and chips seller who sings five cockney ditties in rousing fashion. Ferrer has an acting field day in his creditable and authorative portrayal as the Prince Regent. He builds the character up and up, holding his own as a singer in duets with Miss Henderson, and takes a comic solo, "How Do You Do Middle Age."

The book, based on the Terence Rattigan play, "The Sleeping Prince," deals with a not-so-dumb blonde musical comedy actress who meets the Prince Regent for a night of play.

Passing out on two shots of vodka, she falls in love nevertheless, but the prince wants to shelve her. Through comedy mixups involving the Queen Mother, who mistakes her for a famous actress, she's in on everything.

Songs that sound like clicks include "I've Been Invited to a arty," "Come Be My True Love," "I'll Remember Her," and there's a coronation chorale that's slick.

There are a number of novelty songs, "What Ho, Mrs. Brisket," "Saturday Night at the Rose and Crown," "Coconut Girl" and "Walla, Walla, Boola."

Irene Brown is just right as the hard of hearing Queen Mother. Sean Scully turns in a nice job in the difficult role of the Boy King. Layton's direction is in the right vein. Oliver Smith's sets are standout, ranging from a ballroom to the coronation box, London street scenes and Embassy drawing rooms. Guy.

Barefoot in the Park

New Haven, Sept. 26.

Saint-Subber presentation of comedy in three acts (four scenes) by Neil Simon. Staged by Mike Nichols; scenery Oliver Smith; lighting, Jean Rosenthal; costumes, Donald Brooks. Stars Elizabeth Ashley, Robert Redford, Mildred Natwick, Kurt Kasznar; features Herbert Edelman. Joseph Keating. Opened Sept 25, '63, at the Shubert Theatre, New Haven; $4.80 top.

Corie Bratter ..... Elizabeth Ashley
Telephone Man ..... Herbert Edelman
Delivery Man ..... Joseph Keating
Paul Bratter ..... Robert Redford
Mrs. Banks ..... Mildred Natwick
Victor Velasco ..... Kurt Kasznar

If the new hit season hasn't already arrived in Gotham by then, it should when "Barefoot in the Park" gets there. It should be good for a lengthy stay on Broadway and ultimate laugh-provoking filmization. Warners owns the film rights via a pre-production deal.

An earlier impression of Neil Simon on his first Broadway try, "Come Blow Your Horn," as a writer of funny dialog and concocter of hilarious situations has been corroborated in this newest work. The laughs come pretty steadily, some even stepping on preceding chuckles. The sum is high merriment.

Taking of the theme of a newlywed who has made her first big marital decision by renting a sixth-floor walkup apartment sight unseen by her young husband and her widowed mother, the author has pulled out every conceivable stop in the comic symphony of such a situation. It's a typical tale of the first quarrel and reconciliation of a youthful bride and groom, but the originality of the laugh content gives it a flavor all its own.

It needed skill to draw the full measure of comedy from this script and a worthy cast provides that skill in good quantity. Elizabeth Ashley comes through with a standout performance, in addition to lending an attractive appearance.

Robert Redford is personable and handles himself well as the semi-stuffed-shirt groom. Mildred Natwick imbues the mother role with considerable understanding and a generous helping of comic values. Kurt Kasznar rounds out the quartet of top casters in good fashion. Herbert Edelman has a field day in support.

Mike Nichols obviously knew what to do with Simon's brainchild, and his staging is deft and even manages to get a bit of heart-warming into the hi-jinks. The combination of Oliver Smith's skylight-domed setting, Jean Rosenthal's lighting and Donald Brooks' costuming takes ample care of the production's physical appeal. Bone.

The Tender Heel

San Francisco Oct. 1.

Miranda d'Ancona production of comedy in three acts (nine scenes) by Joel Hammil. Staged by Miranda d'Ancona; sets, Richard Burns; costumes, Ruth Morley; lighting, Paul Morrison; associate producer, Nancy Levering. Stars Chester Morris, Signe Hasso; features Kay Medford, Spero Pastos, Tony Musante, Frank Nastasi, Louis Beachner, Carol Locatell, Albert M. Ottenheimer, Gene Gross, Charles Gerald, H. F. Green. Opened Sept. 30, '63, at the Curran Theatre, S.F.; $5.95 top.

Oveta Turk ..... Kay Medford
Eleni ..... Marie Ana

In "The Tender Heel," Joel Hammil has failed to do for Florida Greeks what Tennessee Williams in "The Rose Tattoo" did for Alabama Sicilians. That is, he has not made them convincing. Part of the reason is that "Tender Heel" lacks decisive character.

Billed as a comedy, it is mostly farce, or when it isn't farce it's in bad taste, but it might have made gripping drama.

The protagonist, played by Chester Morris, is a simple fisherman who, wanting to be even more popular in his village than he already is, poisons the local usurer, then is hurt when the townspeople refuse to believe his confession and hail him as a hero for a hurricane that blew down the Civil War statue.

His weak spot is that he wants to be a hero. He becomes a hero to one person, a prostie, played by Kay Medford, who'd married the usurer for his money and wants the slayer to become her manager, doing everything the boss did (and leaning heavily on that line as she delivers it).

The situation as developed is unbelievable, and the characters, though engaging, are not sketched boldly enough to claim sympathy. The play has some virtues, such as witty dialog, several characters cleverly if lightly drawn, and actors who play with gusto and in most cases considerable skill.

There are moments of charm, as in the tender scenes between the hero and his wife, low comedy bits such as the widow's drunk scene, and warmth in the father-daughter and mother-daughter scenes. The daughter is affectingly played by Carol Locatell.

Albert M. Ottenheimer as a doctor, Gene Gross as the sheriff and Charles Gerald as the mayor come off well in dialog and accent, seeming strictly from Dixie. Louis Beachner is effective and amusing as the mincing, over-precise usurer, and Frank Nastasi is warm and winning as the hero's pal.

The writing and direction lean heavily on profanity and a kind of arm-waving and shouting that pass for peasant behavior. Richard Burns is responsible for the ingenious sets. The costumes by Ruth Morley and lighting by Paul Morrison are acceptable but unexceptional. Este.

A Case of Libel

Philadelphia, Sept. 25.

Roger L. Stevens & Joel Schenker presentation of a drama in three acts by Henry Denker, based on the Louis Nizer book, "My Life in Court." Staged by Sam Wanamaker; settings and lighting, Donald Oenslager; costumes, Ann Roth. Stars Van Heflin, Sidney Blackmer, Larry Gates; features M'el Dowd, John Randolph, Philip Bourneuf, Joseph Julian, Alexander Clark, Wynn Wright, Richard McMurray, Lesley Woods, Camila Ashland, Joel Crothers, Douglas McLean, Tom Hammond, William Hindman. Opened Sept. 24, '63, at the Walnut Street Theatre, Philadelphia; $5.40 top.

Claire Marshall ..... Camila Ashland
Abner Coles ..... Joseph Julian
David Strong ..... Joel Crothers
Robert Sloane ..... Van Heflin
Dennis Corcoran ..... John Randolph
Anita Corcoran ..... M'el Dowd
James Baldwin ..... Alexander Clark
Miss Brand ..... Lesley Woods
Paul Cleary ..... Sidney Blackmer
Boyd Bendix ..... Larry Gates
The Judge ..... Wynn Wright
Cleary's Assistant ..... Tom Hammond
Court Clerk ..... Douglas McLean
Court Stenographer ..... William Hindman
Colonel Douglas ..... Philip Bourneuf
Fred Alston ..... Richard McMurray
Jury Foreman ..... Wendell Phillips

Inherent interest due to real personalities involved, the backlog support of a bestseller (2,000,000 copies), plus commanding performances from three male leads, give "A Case of Libel" a better than even chance for boxoffice success. Henry Denker has fictionalized the opening segment of Louis Nizer's "My Life in Court." It seems patent that the case is Quentin Reynolds' suit against columnist Westbrook Pegler and the Hearst newspaper chain. Even the verdict is for the same amount as awarded Reynolds in the real trial.

A drawback in the play is a tendency of legalistic talk to become yawny, a circumstance not helped by dim lighting of several of the courtroom scenes. The outcome seems telegraphed, with delays and frustrating legal maneuvers only affecting the amount of damages to be won.

The curtain is up at the start to reveal Donald Oenslager's stunning courtroom set, which alternates with the lawyer's office. Denker's dramatization lays it on pretty thick in the opening to make the case a matter of concern for the free world. Van Heflin, as the attorney, is about to take a needed vacation, but is talked into the newspaperman's cause by appeals to his conscience and sense of justice.

A main issue—right of character assassination while hiding behind the constitutional guarantees of freedom of the press—is stated telling in the summation by Heflin. He is the expensive barrister in voice, appearance and demeanor. He rises to angry heights when the defendant questions his loyalties and racial background, and his closing speech to the jury (actually the audience) elicits applause.

There's no need to worry about whether the theatre will survive as long as there are plays like "Luther." This John Osborne drama, which David Merrick presented at the St. James Theatre last Wednesday night (25), brings the stage to pulsating life. It's not only a palpable boxiffice hit, but a stunning work of theatrical importance.

As with any successful theatre project, several people can share the credit for "Luther," and there's ample credit to be shared. Albert Finney, the dynamic young English actor whom American audiences have seen only in the film, "Saturday Night and Sunday Morning," makes his Broadway debut in a repeat of his blazing title performance that was a sensation in London two seasons ago. Tony Richardson has also repeated his virtuoso direction and Jocelyn Herbert's spare but eloquent scenery and costumes again have telling effect.

Osborne who became the popular conception of Britain's angry young men with his savagely bitter "Look Back in Anger," has been quoted as saying that he's merely presenting history not arguing a cause in this combustible account of how a self-doubting but implaccable young monk aroused the people of Germany against religious corruption and political tyranny in the 16th century, thereby bringing on the Reformation and creating the German nation. All art, or at least all good art, is personal and the expression of conviction, however, and "Luther" is much more than just historical fact.

Certain of the play's scenes, notably the blatant sale of indulgences and the decadent Pope's preemptory denial of Luther's appeal may shock or repel some playgoers, and the frequent stress on such physical matters as Luther's epilepsy and his chronic, painful constipatiion, are likely to irritate others. But after its slow early scenes, with their long religious rituals and at times complex philosophic arguments, "Luther" gathers momentum and bite in the monk's gripping, inspiring struggle for his faith and independence.

Finney is enormously persuasive and moving in his solo scene on the huge stage as he delivers a sermon at Wittenberg and he grows in stature and strength as he defies the Italian cardinal sent to silence his attacks, as he refuses the concentrated effort to force him to retract his writing and in the final quiet, stirring scene as he reveals to his old friend and mentor that even as he stood firm for his bold, lonely beliefs, he had not been sure he was right, but had only faith and hope.

Perhaps no other actor alive could equal the staggering vigor and controlled power of Finney's playing of the long, exhausting title role. But under Richardson's expertly varied but firm direction there are a number of impressive supporting performances, including Kenneth J. Warren as Luther's scornfully disapproving father, John Heffernan as a sympathetic and perceptive fellow-monk, Peter Bull as the venal priest hawking dispensations John Moffatt as a worldly papal emissary Frank Shelley as the rebellious Luther's sage advisor and Michael Egan as the pleasure-loving Pope.

"Luther" is a long play, running about three hours, including two intermissions, and could probably be advantageously cut, as attested by occasional spells of audience coughing. But although the John Osborne work probably wouldn't titilate diversion seekers, it's a challenging drama for anyone willing to take the theatre seriously. Hobe.

Musical numbers: Welcome Home Anthem, "Singspelia," "Romance," "Somewhere," "It's a Wonderful Day to Do Nothing," "The Gypsy Life," "Grenadiers' Marching Song," Welcome Home Anthem Reprise, "Greetings," "Kiss Me," "Ting-a-Ling-Dear," "Merry May," Seventh Heaven Waltz, Gypsy Dance," "Walk On," "You're a Man," "A Whistle Works," "Gypsy of Love," "Our Love Has Flown Away," "A Woman Is a Woman Is a Woman," "Romance" Reprise, "Very Much in Love," "My Love Is Yours," "There's Life in the Old Folks Yet," "The Drinking Song," Finale.

This should end the kidding-old-musicals cycle. With "The Student Gypsy, or the Prince of Liederkranz," which opened last Monday night (30) at the 54th Street Theatre, the small, single-joke idea has been pushed a bit beyond the limit. The show is an elaborate, uninspired and presumably expensive exercise in tedium.

About that kidding-old-musicals kick. First there was a very funny single number, "The Gladiola Girl," the standout portion of "Lend An Ear," a Hollywood-to-Broadway revue of about 15 years ago. It brought stardom to Carol Channing. Then there was Sandy Wilson's London musical comedy, "The Boy Friend," which expanded the parody idea to a full evening and reduced the entertainment return accordingly. It was a hit on Broadway and the road.

A couple of seasons ago the then-unknown Rick Besoyan wrote and staged an off-Broadway musical, "Little Mary Sunshine," also a full-evening lampoon, this time kidding such vintage operettas as "Rose Marie." It was greatly overpraised, containing about a half-dozen moderate laughs, but at least offering the amusing hokum simpering of Eileen Brennan in the title part.

"The Student Gypsy," to give it the shorter title, is simply an inflated, over-produced repetition of the same threadbare jape. Besoyan appears to have been stuck with whether to reiterate the caricature approach or play it straight, and has settled for a flaccid compromise.

The result is a large, ornate imitation antique. The uninspired book is too detailed to recount, with hackneyed and predictable characters and situations. The music is generally melodic, with the sort of reminiscent quality of a college show.

Miss Brennan, stuck with a carbon of her "Little Mary Sunshine" role, can only reprise the tongue-partly-in-cheek coyness, using the sort of camping antics that convulse small private groups. Among the journeymen entertainers who manage to avoid discredit in support are Allen Swift, Dom de Luise, Shannon Bolin, Don Stewart, Dick Hoh, Mitzie Welch and Donald Babcock.

Besoyan has staged the effusion, and the sumptuous if not invariably tasteful scenery and costumes were designed by Raoul Pene du Bois. The fact that a sizable, or

Culture-Type Performances Socko; Impresario Patrick Hayes Finds Washington a Dandy Show Town

By LES CARPENTER

Washington, Oct. 1.

Man most heavily involved in cultural performances here, impressario Patrick Hayes, avers he never had it so good. From three attractions, Leonard Bernstein conducting the N.Y. Philharmonic (two back to back performances), the Black Watch Royal Highland Regiment (one performance) and Stars of the Bolshoi (two performances), he expects to gross well over $85,000. First booking via Columbia, others via Sol Hurok.

"In the first few years," said Hayes, who started as a concert manager here in 1947, "I didn't gross that in an entire season."

Bernstein, in two succesive concerts, drew over 6,100 paid admissions and grossed $31,749 here. The Scot bagpipers sold 5,100 admissions, with a $14,034 gross.

The Bolshoi is yet to come, with Oct. 7 and 8 dates booked, but Hayes contends a $40,000 gross is a conservative advance estimate.

In the concert manager arena, Hayes has 59 performances booked through 48 contracts (some play more than one). In the late 40s and earlier 50s, he had about 30 performances in a season. Then, his artists played from mid-October to early April.

He has stretched his activities to include an extra month, both fore and aft. He now begins in early May and runs through May to comply with the demand and the ready cash at the b.o.

Other cultural endeavors in the National Capital are similarly booming, he noted, and it is an obvious fact.

The Opera Society of Washington, scoffed at by many show biz pros in its formative years as the most lost of causes for a hambone town, is making ends meet and has three operas slated for this season.

While two ballet companies foolishly tried to endure here last season, the National Ballet, under Frederic Franklin, survives. It has doubled the number of performances this season. Twelve performances are slated, and several internationally recognized artists are being brought in.

Season tickets to the National Symphony Orch. are reported to be moving at the highest rate ever, and an ambitious season is planned.

The National Theatre, famous for its grosses (a trade joke, which is completely factual, is that "The Vamp" played to standing room only at every performance at the National), is booked for 12 months without a dark week.

National Rep Troupers To Double as Teachers On Tarheel Engagement

Individuals connected with the three plays to be presented on tour this season by the National Repertory Theatre will serve as teaching artists-in-resident at the Univ. of North Carolina, Greensboro, when the troupe opens its cross-country trek there Oct. 4-16. The non-profit organization, sponsored by the American National Theatre & Academy, will give evening performances at the university of Jean Anouilh's "Ring Round the Moon," Anton Chekhov's "The Seagull" and Arthur Miller's "The Crucible."

During the day, members of the cast and others associated with the touring venture will conduct classes and seminars. There'll also be open rehearsals. Eva Le Gallienne, Farley Granger, Denholm Elliott and Anne Meacham head the cast which also includes Jerome Raphel, Barbara Stanton, G. Wood, Ben Jaffee, Thayer David, Kelly Jean Peter, Betty Sinclair and George Turner.

Miss Le Gallienne, who did the translation of "The Seagulls" being used by NRT, will conduct "after-theatre," discussion groups. Director Jack Sydow, costume resigner Alvin Colt, set designer Peter Larkin and lighting designer Tharon Musser are among others who'll participate in the inresidence program which is being subsidized by state funds.

Frederic Franklin Adds To National Ballet Sked

Washington, Oct. 1.

National Ballet here, which is pushing for resident professional company status, has doubled the number of repertory items and performances for its second season. More precisely, it will present four programs in the 1963-64 season with three performances of each.

Season will open Oct. 10 with a benefits for the Women's National Democratic Club. "Swan Lake," "Homage au Ballet," and "Con Amore," will be on the program running through Oct. 12.

Program from Dec. 27-29 will include a full length production of "Coppelia."

From Feb. 21-23 will be a program of "Les Sylphides," "Pas de Dix," "Tribute" and one other performance to be selected.

Director Frederic Franklin is preparing a new ballet for the March 26-28 program.

Schary? Who He? Merrick Offers To Reciprocate

Dore Schary, the legit and film writer, producer and director, doesn't make it as a Broadway critic as far as David Merrick is concerned. Also regarded as an unqualified legit reviewer by the producer is Bennett Cerf, president of Random House, author and regular panelist on television's "What's My Line?"

Merrick, whose technique of grabbing publicity for his productions by attacking critics is a seasonal occurrence, opened two shows on Broadway last week. The first, "The Rehearsal," was reviewed by Schary for N. Y. radio station WNEW. His report elicited a protest from Merrick who, in expressing blanket disapproval of WNEW's policy of having Broadway preems reviewed by name guests, also asked that the station return its opening night tickets to his second offering of the week, "Luther."

WNEW, which had assigned Cerf to review "Luther," returned its press tickets and purchased a pair. Additional coin was spent by the station in sending wires to the papers notifying them of the situation. When the story first broke, it was highlighted in the N. Y. Post with a frontpage picture and Page 2 text. Other papers in which the story appeared included the Herald Tribune and the World-Telegram.

Dorothy Ross, pressagent for "Chips With Everything" notified Merrick that Morton Gottlieb, that play's producer, would be glad to have him review "Chips" which opened on Broadway last night (Tues.). He declined because he had to be in Philadelphia for the opening there of another of his shows, "110 in the Shade." However, Merrick has said he'd be available to review the Dec. 18 Broadway preem of "Love and Kisses," a comedy which Schary is producing and directing.

Relations between Merrick and WNEW had previously been regarded as good, with the station having purchased blocks of tickets to some of his prior productions. These were distributed for exploitation purposes. Merrick even reviewed his own production of "Oliver" for the station last season, giving the production a tongue-in-cheek rave.

London Managers Stall Ex-Member

London, Oct. 1.

Harold Fielding's bid for readmission to the Society of West End Theatre Managers, from which he resigned last year when he concluded a separate deal with the Musicians Union, has failed because the Society has no provision in its rules to re-admit former members.

The application to the Society was made on Fielding's behalf by his lawyers and he has now been advised that he must apply for reelection, and as a first step he has to be sponsored by two members of the Society, one of whom would be required to propose his re-election and the other to second the application.

Fielding's moves to rejoin the Society were triggered by the decision of British Actors Equity in demanding a $14,000 bond for all his shows in London and on tour. Such security is not demanded of SWETM members.

The security bond is a condition imposed by the Theatre Council (run jointly by the Society and Equity) as a protection against "fly-by-night" producers. Fielding, it was reported early in the month, had agreed to put up such security provided that no other manager not in membership of a trade association could operate in the provinces without a similar provision.

BENAVENTE PLAY OPENS MADRID'S NEW SEASON

Madrid, Oct. 1.

Jacinto Benavente's "Roses of Autumn" opened the local legit season recently by the Mercedes Prendes Theatre Co. at the Teatro Recoletos. A young Spanish playwright, Alonso Millan, premiered his comedy, "The Ex-President," at the Teatro Comico on the same night.

Prolific comedy satirist Alfonso Paso, who has written a half-dozen plays in the last five years, has two coming up soon. The first, "It's Great to be Alive," is now out on the road with Ismael and Maria Luisa Merlo in the starring roles along with their son-in-law, Carlos Larranaga. "Great to be Alive" will open this month at the Infanta Isabel. Isabel Garces will head the cast in the second Paso play, as yet untitled.

Following "Roses of Autumn," the Prendes troupe will present Buero Villejo's "Adventure in Gray." Other Spanish playwrights ready to bow in soon include Luca de Tena with "La Perrichola" at the Teatro Beatriz with "Susanna Wants to be Decent" and debuting Emilio Romero (newspaper editor), who will bring "Scenes of the Late Afternoon" to the Reina Victoria.

"Mary, Mary," "Caligula" and an adaptation of an Andreyev play are some of the early starters from abroad to round out theatre programing for September.

George Ford's Autobiog

George D. Ford, company manager of "Space Is So Startling," now on tour in the U.S., and author of "These Were Actors," has completed a new book, "A Showman's Fond Farewell," covering his career of more than 50 years in show biz from manager to producer. The tome readied for publication covers memories of his tours with a Shakespearean repertory company and of his actress-wife, Helen Ford.

Ford takes "Space Is So Startling," the Moral Rearmament musical, to Atlanta, Los Angeles, San Francisco and Seattle.

Anti-Vatican Play Stirs London; Critics Divide But Most Appraise Hochhuth As Mediocre Dramatist

London, Oct. 1.

A new wrinkle to the dispute surrounding the opening of Germany's "The Deputy" play known here as "The Representative" at the Aldwych Theatre last Wednesday (25) was provided by the Lord Chamberlain. He intervened on two counts. Firstly, he requested the management (the Shakespeare Theatre Co.) to display a notice at the boxoffice requesting that children under the age of 16 not be admitted. Secondly, he requested that the program include an "authoritative Catholic opinion," and that it has been satisfied by the inclusion of a long letter from the former Cardinal Montini (now Pope Paul VI) which was first published in The Tablet on June 29.

The recommended bar on under-16s is not attributed to the content of the play, and has been imposed because of the film sequences, which are used between scenes. Such films might, conceivably, qualify for an X-certificate if shown in a picture theatre, and juves are barred from such performances.

The week preceding the opening of the play drew a barrage of publicity, including several broadsides from Catholic organizations. The Catholic Truth Society published a pamphlet designed to "put the play into proper perspective." This was followed by throwaway leaflets

Charles Playhouse, Hub, To Reopen With 'Hostage'

Boston, Oct. 1.

The Charles Playhouse, which underwent renovations during the summer, will open its seventh season tomorrow (Wed.) with "The Hostage," Perry Bruskin, who was associated with the Brendan Behan play on Broadway and subsequently directed it for presentation off-Broadway and on the road, is staging the Playhouse offering.

"Six Characters in Search of An Author," originally planned as the first play of the 1963-64 season, has been re-scheduled for March 11.

Princeton Asks Off-B'way Break With N.Y. Reviews

Off-Broadway has demonstrated that for many professional actors the prospect of being reviewed in the New York press compensates for meagre salaries. With this in mind, Arthur W. Lithgow, executive director of the professional arts program at the McCarter Theatre, Princeton, N. J., has asked N. Y. drama editors to assign reviewers to the legit productions at the McCarter.

In a memorandum to editors, Lithgow explained that the McCarter, with its program financed by Princeton Univ., is able to pay little better than the Actors Equity minimum to its cast members. He pointed this out after noting that the McCarter is competing with numerous other operations, better able to pay higher wages to actors because of foundation grants, for the services of those players "with at least as much enthusiasm for classics as commerce."

It's Lithgow's contention that "if the actors, most of whom are New York-based, could feel that McCarter's productions were in a class with the off-Broadway season with regard to reviews by the New York press—not necessarily reviews by the firststring critics—they would cheerfully accept their minimum salaries as investment in their continued professional growth, both as classicists and as commodities."

Lithgow, who moved into his present post during the summer as successor to Milton Lyon, opens his first McCarter season Oct. 10 with "Hedda Gabler." The Ibsen classic will be one of four plays in the fall drama series, of which the wrapup title is "The Distaff Side." "Hedda" will be presented Oct. 10-12 and Oct. 17-19. It'll be followed by "Long Day's Journey Into Night," Oct. 24-26, and Oct. 31-Nov. 2. Next will be "She Stoops to Conquer," Nov. 7-9 and Nov. 14-16 and then "The Playboy of the Western World," Nov. 21-23.

The McCarter performing arts program, including numerous events in addition to legit performances by the repertory company, was launched during the 1960-61 season. Special bookings for the upcoming semester include the Circle in the Square touring production of "Six Characters in Search of an Author," Lotte Lenya in S. In 1960, the first year the college operated the showboat, average attendance was 280. The majestic is docked permanently at Jefferson, Ind.

Little Theatre Group In Mpls. Drops Tuners On Music Union Threat

Minneapolis, Oct. 1.

Already on the national and Minneapolis local musicians union unfair lists itself, the suburban St. Louis Park Community Theatre cancelled its announced and advertised production of "Annie Get Your Gun" when the unions threatened to label similarly the suburb's high school auditorium where the musical was to have been presented, as well as the school and the district superintendent.

This all came about because the group would not employ union musicians at scale for "Annie," as demanded by the Minneapolis Local. The St. LPCT offerings always have been presented in the school auditorium and there has been trouble before because of union musicians' non-use.

"The Mousetrap" will be substituted for "Annie," it's announced. During the past several seasons the Theatre has been devoting itself to elaborate musical comedy productions. But henceforth, because of difficulties with the musicians union, these will be out. Activity will be restricted to plays not requiring music, according to Grant Stageberg, the group's director.

Stageberg says the planned seven-day "Annie" run would have cost $1,225 for musicians, and the group could not afford that. The proposed contract called for a minimum of eight union musicians and a conductor, each musician to be paid $17.50 per night, the conductor $35 a night.

It also was pointed out by Stageberg that he didn't know how many pit musicians would be needed for "Annie" to provide an adequate accompaniment, the musical conductor not yet having been selected. For its "King and I" production last season the Theatre used 28 non-union musicians who donated their services.

The Theatre has been on the musicians unions' unfair lists since, prior to "The King and I," it had two non-union pianists for its "Little Mary Sunshine." The union here picketed that and "King."

It's the contention of the Local here that in order to be on the fair list the St. LPCT must employ union musicians for musicals because admission is charged for the shows. The threat against the school was because of its refusal to cooperate with the union in the matter.

If the school had gone on the unions' unfair lists it would have meant that no American Federation of Musicians member would have been permitted to play in it.

The play first known and produced in Berlin as "The Deputy" has arrived in curtailed length and English translation as "The Representative." It has been preceded here in Britain, as in other lands where it has been presented, by a barrage of conflicting charges. The exceptional volume of the publicity and the emotional high pitch prior to premiere has created discussion which ordinarily amount to a potential boxoffice smash.

Cut from over six hours' running time to manageable proportions, it is not possible to say what has been lost, though the basic theme remains clear and forceful, however hateful the views of the young, 31, dramatist may be to Roman Catholics. He has stirred debate everywhere, including America, where Billy Rose has the production rights on option for another year. Nor has Hochhuth himself, a former Nazi youth movement member, escaped personal raps for attempting to blame the late Pius XII for failure to "stop" the Nazis, something the rest of the world, and notably "good Germans" quite failed to accomplish.

This version of the play differs from the one reviewed in VARIETY on March 6 from Berlin under the title of "The Deputy" (Der Stellvertreter). Two of the key scenes in the first German version (which this reviewer saw in Berlin) are omitted from the Aldwych production; and one major episode in the London version was excluded in Berlin. Also there is some change in the technique of production, with the use of newsreel shots (often of indifferent quality and projected against unsuitable background) to set the mood for the ensuing dramatic conflict on stage.

The author, a 31-year-old German Protestant, has based his work on the fact that Pius XII declined to "intervene" publicly on behalf of the Jews of Europe, who were being sent to Hitler's gas chambers at Auschwitz, Belsen and other concentration camps. It is a bold and challenging subject. Is it anti-Catholic? Non-Catholics may think not. Hochhuth has taken pains to present a balanced argument, if that is possible when he is not neutral in the debate. Suffice that to Roman Catholics the thesis and play are odious.

The hero of "The Representative" is the young eJsuit priest who in the plot pleads for the Pope's intervention to halt the greatest atrocity in the history of mankind. It is not only this young priest who is tormented by events, however, and the play gives credit to many other leading Catholics who gave refuge to the Jews. The attack, therefore, is aimed specifically at the one man who, as God's representative on earth, might (thinks the young author) have prevailed upon Hitler and his Nazi thugs to stop the terrible massacre.

Author suggests that the Pope's refusal to intercede was motivated by his belief that any public declaration on his part would have aggravated the situation and, possibly, led to the massacre of Catholics as well as Jews. The Pope was also conscious of the need to maintain complete neutrality of the Church and was concerned at the prospect that a defeat of Hitler and Germany could result in a spread of Communism throughout Europe and the world, to the detriment of the Church.

The dramatic guts of the play are largely contained in the explosive exchanges between the young priest and the Pope himself. When Pius XII fears that intervention would aggravate the situation, the priest counters: "One million Jews are about to be sent to the gas chamber. How can you aggravate that situation?" When the Pope fears the spread of Communism, the priest reminds him that the Russians were the innocent victims of Nazi aggression, and the Church should honestly come out on their side.

At the point in which he realizes that he can make no headway, the priest dons the Yellow Star of David on his black robes and leaves to join the Jews, who are being deported to Auschwitz. The final scene at that concentration camp, with the verbal duel between the priest and the camp doctor, is one of the moving and dramatic highlights of the play. The doctor, boasting that he has sent as many as 9,000 Jews to their death in a day, taunts the priest with the comment that he had endeavored to provoke the wrath of God, but there had been no comeback. And as the priest attacks his monstrous crimes, the Nazi doctor hits back with a reminder of the atrocities committed in the name of God during the Inquisition.

Production itself does not match the highest standards of the Royal Shakespeare Company. It is, nevertheless, a harrowing and emotional experience. Significantly, there was virtually no applause at the end of the production, and no curtain calls for the cast. The audience filed out quietly—just as it did in Berlin some months earlier.

Three performers stand out in the cast. Alec McCowan plays the young priest with a combination of passionate sincerity and mounting indignation. The Pope is portrayed by Alan Webb. Appearing only in one scene half-way through the second act, his performance is a memorable piece of acting, incisive, deliberate and calculated.

Admittedly Pius XII does not emerge as a warm character. He is the villain of the play. The third key performance comes from Ian Richardson, as the Nazi doctor. His impact is achieved in the final scene at Auschwitz, and vividly brings the play to its grim climax.

Other distinguished support comes from Gordon Gostelow as the S. S. man who turns informer to the Church; Paul Hardwick, as the Cardinal; Tony Church as the priests's father and a lay counselor to the Holy See; and John Franklyn Robbins as the Father General. There is one long scene set in an underground Berlin cellar which, among others, introduces Adolf Eichmann (played by Michael Williams) and Professor Hirt (Julian Somers). That scene (omitted in Berlin) is one of the least effective in the play.

Ralph Koltai's sparse decor makes an impressive background and the use of heavy sliding doors, instead of a front-of-stage curtain, provides a grim reminder of the gas chamber mentality of the period. The film sequences, compiled by Robert Kruger, have been carefully chosen, though have often been seen before. Robert David MacDonald's translation is sympathetic and expert. Myro.

Never Too Late

London, Sept. 25.

Bernard Delfont, Frederick Granville, Elliot Martin & Daniel Hollywood presentation of a comedy in three acts (five scenes), by Sumner Arthur Long. Staged by George Abbott; decor and lighting, William and Jean Eckart. Stars Fred Clark, Joan Bennet; features Tom Stein, Jennie Linden. Opened Sept. 24, '63, at the Prince of Wales Theatre, London; $3.55 top.

It may not be the critics' choice, but there is little room for speculation. "Never Too Late," brought into the Prince of Wales by Bernard Delfont, Frederick Granville, Elliot Martin and Daniel Hollywood, is a cinch to be as much of a hit over here as it is currently on Broadway, and the bus parties of out-of-towners, who sustain this type of comedy, will pack the theatre for months to come.

Staged at breakneck speed by George Abbott, with one predictable joke following on the heels of another, the Sumner Arthur Long comedy is outrageously played for laughs, with little pretence at invention or subtlety. It is an unadulterated example of broad humor deliberately geared towards a mass audience.

The one-joke theme, stretched through three brisks acts, is held together by an excellent cast, and notably by the performance of Fred Clark, as the bald, crotchety, mean and noisy husband who fears he will become the laughing stock of the neighborhood because of his wife's pregnancy. Clark, well known here through is motion pictures, is a master of the double-take, and he gets his laughs more by sheer force of his own personality than from the dialog supplied by the author.

Joan Bennett is a stunning-looking wife who charms her way through the show, playing the farcical situations in nicely restrained key. In her opening scene she is still the dowdy family drudge, but there is a startling transformation in her manner and appearance after her visit to the doctor. Tom Stern, as the son-in-law, spends most of the time on the receiving end of Clark's well-aimed abuse, but he displays an engaging manner and a flair for farcical comedy.

Jennie Linden is suitably vivacious and petulant in turn as the married daughter. Bessie Love and Clement McCallin have a couple of effective scenes as neighbors, Charles Farrell plays the mayor with vigor and Roger Avon, as a plumber, and Paul Grist, as a cop, complete a hard-working cast.

The expansive living room set, by William and Jean Eckart, makes an admirable background for the romp. Myro.

Four Asterisks

London, Sept. 17.

Michael White presentation of the Oxford Group Revue in 24 scenes, with sketches by John Albery, Ian Davidson, Robin Grove-White, David Mason, Douglas Fisher, Terry Jones and Iwan Williams, and songs by Williams and Miles Kington. Staged by Ian Davidson; lighting, Francis Reid. Opened Sept. 16, '63, at the Phoenix Theatre, London; $3 top.

Cast: Ian Davidson, Douglas Fisher, Robin Grove-White, Terry Jones, Jane Brayshaw.

The title of this minor opus is actually "*," but for typographical clarity it's given as "Four Asterisks" for this report. In any case, it's misleading if it implies that there's something objectionable or naughty in the content or dialog of the show. Actually, the innocuous revue may just about limp through its scheduled four-week engagement.

The revue, originally presented in a small hall as a so-called fringe entertainment during the recent Edinburgh festival, was planned as a late night entertainment in a pint-sized theatre in Earl's Court, London, but that had to be abandoned because of legalistics which would have eliminated a Saturday night performance. So producer Michael White has taken the bigger gamble and put it into the Phoenix, to provide a West End companion piece to his Cambridge footlights revue, now shaping as a hit at the Lyric.

Possibly in part because the theatre is far too large for this intimate type show, the revue smacks of amateurishness, and with a single exception, the cast shows little professional promise. Out of 24 items, only two or three have merit, and all could do with drastic editing.

There's a neat idea in a scene in which two young men are discussing a girl, and points are awarded by an umpire as though it were a game of tennis. There's also an academic dissertation on japes, with practical demonstrations of various types of practical jokes, which has an amsuing slapstick quality. Other sketches start promisingly, but tend to get out of control.

Douglas Fisher stands out above the rest of the cast, with potentialities as a versatile entertainer. The others try, but cannot disguise their amateur status. Myro.

Michael Medwin is replacing John Neville in title role of "Alfie" at the Duchess, early next month. Neville has other commitments.

Anti-Vatican Play Stirs London

capsuling the Catholic viewpoint. Theatre management itself (at 35c a copy) have on sale at the Aldwych a 12-page color book which gives some historical background to the play and includes a defense of what is called the "dilemma" of Pope Pius XII, by the editor of the Catholic Herald. Also included is the letter from the now reigning Pope, which is used in the theatre program.

The Observer on the Sunday preceding play's opening, published two-pages of the text of the fundametnal scene in which the young priest in the fiction challenges Pope Pius XII to intervene on behalf of Jews.

Hate's Echoes

Outside the theatre on opening night, leaflets published by the National Secular Society were being handed out. A Jewish actor, who stated he had been a concentration inmate, stood on the sidewalk displaying the Yellow Star of David on his jacket. Not clear if he was anti-Catholic.

Rolf Hochhuth's work got restrained criticisms. The sole rave came from the Daily Mail's Bernard Levin (who, a couple of weeks earlier had been described as a "Fascist Jew" by Wolf Mankowitz in an Edinburgh festival debate). Levin described the piece as a "pitiless masterpiece" and a work of such immense scope and power "that it becomes one of those works that cannot be compared to anything: they demand that other works be compared to them." Europe, he opined, had produced nothing since the end of the war to set beside its profundity, its compassion, its understanding.

Herbert Kretzmer, reviewing the show in the Daily Express, called it a dark, brooding and deeply impressive drama, and though conceding that it had been constructed with immense skill, the nagging thought remained: "What was true? What was false?"

Another Slant

Daily Herald review by David Nathan was headlined "Play that condemns a silent Pope," and critic argued that the author had not tried to lay the blame on anyone else but the Germans—against views of Catholics.

T. C. Worsley in the Financial Times, thought the play clumsily written and repetitiously constructed, but could not help generating a certain terrible tension. The failure was one of language. Worsley opined that Hochhuth's deficiency as a dramatist became "woefully obvious" in the last scene at Auschwitz, which, he said, "quite simply doesn't work at any level and brings the play to its end with an anti-climax."

Not Art Question

Times critic thought that the work had less to do with art than with historical indignation. Crucial question was not whether Hochhuth had written a good play, but whether he was right in asserting that the Nazi extermination of European Jewry could have been curbed by the intervention of the Vatican. He felt the production cleared the author of some of the stronger accusations that had been levelled against him by outraged Roman Catholics.

Philip Hope-Wallace, in the Guardian, thought that suspense was very much lacking in the play, which, he said, was often very flat indeed: weak, rather colorless German historical drama in a post-Hauptmann style.

"To go to this play hoping for a just appraisal of the Vatican caught between two fires and in a position delicate and diffident and possibly blameworthy, was about as sensible as going to 'Oh What a Lovely War' to discover the truth about General Haig." The Daily Telegraph's W. A. Darlington was satisfied the play could not fail to arouse hot passions, and fierce denunciations. He was less moved by what he saw in the theatre than when reading the full text. He found little atmosphere about the production and almost no sense of dramatic conflict.

Very Disturbing

Writing in the Daily Mirror, Arthur Thirkell reckoned the play would disturb everyone, religious or not. He described it as a hypnotic play with an excellent cast and considered it a skilful mixture of documentary film and harrowing, ghastly scenes in the ovens and gas chambers of the concentration camps. Never, he wrote, had he witnessed a play that was so gripping, that had stunned an audience to complete silence for almost three hours. Daily Sketch critic Fergus Cashin said it was not particularly well-directed and the characters, even when taken from life, were not convincing. The play, he added, could only be judged as propaganda, and like previous German propaganda, it blended fact and fiction as positive thought for the non-thinking, and particularly the unthinking, who were always looking for a victim for their own guilt.

Describing the play as a dramatic experience of a lifetime, Felix Barker said in the Evening News: "You must see it and you must suffer," while in the Evening Standard, Milton Shulman, while regarding it as less a play than an experience, said it was a shattering and harrowing reminder of the "bestiality that lies deep down in each of us."

Stage, gets more arty in its choice of plays every year, and has set another record in season ticket sales.

Local universities, recognizing a market exists outside their campuses, are striving for better productions.

Helen Hayes is coming to Washington to star in a new play, "Good Morning Miss Dove" at the Catholic University Theatre, Jan. 24-Feb. 8. Miss Hayes, a close friend of Father Gilbert Hartke who established the theatre (and once taught Jean Kerr and had Walter Kerr as one of his assistant professors), has long wanted to do a play for him. William McCleery is the playwright.

President and Mrs. Kennedy have given every indication that they are sincere in the support of the $35,000,000 fund raising effort for Washington's National Cultural Center. Latest steps are Mrs. Kennedy's agreement to permit two of her watercolor drawings to be made into Christmas cards by Hallmark, with all proceeds going to the Center, and the President ordering a solicitation of all federal employes for the Center fund.

Impressario Patrick Hayes says that the support of the Kennedys for culture (bringing celebrated artists into the White House, staging youth concerts on the mansion's lawn, promoting the Cultural Center, etc.) have hypoed the local longhair box office.

But the most significant development, Hayes said, while noting that it should also apply in other cities, is the increased number of artists, both foreign and domestic, worthy of concert presentation. The cultural exchange program, especially, has been a boom in dollars, he related.

It apparently takes more than a heatwave to crimp business for "How to Succeed in Business Without Really Trying," the top-grosser last week with a take of over $100,000 in sweltering Pasadena. Also continuing in the powerhouse groove were the Broadway-bound musicals "Here's Love," "Jennie," "110 in the Shade" and "Zenda."

Of the straight play tryouts, "Barefoot in the Park" got off to smart start last week in New Haven; while receipts were so-so for "The Private Ear" and "The Public Eye" double-bill in Boston, lean for "A Case of Libel" in Philadelphia and meagre for "A Rainy Day in Newark" in Baltimore.

Estimates for Last Week

Parenthetic designations for out-of-town shows are the same as for Broadway, except that hyphenated T with show classification indicates tryout, RS indicates road show and BT indicates bus-and-truck production. Where subscription is mentioned, the gross is the net after the deductions of commissions. Grosses for split weeks are projected when shows play guaranteed dates.

Shakespeare Production For '64 Edinburgh Fest

Edinburgh, Oct. 1.

A major Shakespeare production is being planned for the 1964 International Festival here. It will link up with national plans to celebrate the 400th anniversary of the birth of the English dramatist. Other plans for the 1964 junket include a visit by the Prague National Opera, doing operas of the Czech Repertory, including works of Janacek.

Berlioz, whose music figured conspicuously in this year's Festival, will be heard again at the opening concert next year, when the Orchestre National de la Radiodiffusion - Television Francaise (RTF) will perform his "Grand Messe des Morts" under, it is hoped, Charles Munch. Negotiations are also proceeding for ballet programs for the 1964 Festival.

The 1964 Festival may be minus one historic theatre. Plans are going ahead to raze the Lyceum Theatre, leading legit house, as a preliminary to building an opera house for the city.

BARD FEST'S $40,058 ENDS ONTARIO SEASON

Stratford, Ont., Oct. 1.

The Stratford Shakespearean Festival ended its season here last week with a $40,058 take for the frame, a drop from the previous stanza's gross of $46,842. The final fortnight of performances, nine each week, were mainly for student audience with regular box-office activity limited to the Wednesday and Saturday night showings. Because of special student rates, the potential capacity for each of the two weeks was $51,955.

"Timon of Athens" was dropped from the final fortnight's repertory, which comprised "Troilus and Cressida," "Cyrano de Bergerac" and "The Comedy of Errors."

Canadian Opera $95,214 First Week in Toronto

Toronto, Oct. 1.

The Canadian Opera Co. grossed $95,214 last week in the first of three stanzas at the O'Keefe Centre here. Tickets at the 3,211-seater were scaled to a $6 top for a potential capacity gross of $110,022.

The eight-performance session comprised performances of "Aida," "Rosencavalier," "La Boheme" and "Don Giovanni."

B'way Blah, But 'Luther' $32,342 (6); 'Rehearsal' $21,480, 'Verb' $27,500; 'Bicycle' Drops 85G in Fast Fold

Broadway was clobbered last week, but the current session looks better. The new season continues to gain momentum with the addition this week of four entries. The semester's first casualty, one of three shows which debuted last week, was "Bicycle Ride to Nevada." It closed after a single performance. Last week's two other newcomers were "Rehearsal" and "Luther," with business moderate for the former and strong for the latter.

Holding as the sole sellout last week was "How to Succeed in Business Without Really Trying." The Jewish observance of Yom Kippur from sundown Friday (27) to sundown of the following day is figured to have contributed to the overall decline in receipts.

Flexible Capacity at Barrault's Odeon; Can Black Out Balcony, Boxes

By WOLFE KAUFMAN

Paris, Oct. 1.

On the theory that different types of plays need different sized audiences, Jean Louis Barrault and his architects have worked out a scheme for deliberately cutting the seating capacity of his Odeon Theatre two or three nights a week. Scheme goes into effect for the first time towards the end of October with the opening of the new Becket play, now in rehearsal. For this opening, and for all performances of this play, a new ceiling has been built (movable) which comes down sufficiently to cut out all the balconies and boxes, thus reducing the house capacity by 500 seats.

Sticking rigidly to his idea of repertory, Barrault plans to run the play at least two performances per week for as long as it draws. Although all normally "cheap" seats will thus disappear, he will retain the normal price range (80c to $3, approx.) by splitting the floor into various price categories. Thus, his take will be seriously affected, which doesn't seem to worry the actor-director-manager.

"Our job is to produce plays in the best way we can," he hold VARIETY. "That is what we must strive for, first. With the aid of the government, I don't have to worry as much about showing a 'profit' as normal commercial enterprises do. This is fortunate, because, in my opinion, certain plays are best with reduced audiences. This, I believe, is such a play. Madeleine Reynault, in this play, is all alone onstage a great deal of the time. For her, all alone, to face the entire large theatre (1,200 seats) is too much. It can be done, of course, but all three, the actor, the play, and the audience, lose out. In a smaller frame, all three are better off."

It is Barrault's theory that a "true repertory theatre" must run the gamut, from classics to "avant guarde" and it is this which he wants to ensure with his new scheme. With the movable ceiling, plus a shrunk stage, theatre will still have approximately 680 seats.

Several years ago, when Barrault and his company were installed at the Marigny Theatre, they had a small 200-seat house in the rear which he occasionally used for "experimental" plays.

While Barrault has been working out details of his two theatres in here, the Comedie Francaise and one, both other subsidized troupes the T.N.P., have been mulling the situation and screaming for "a second house." Maurice Escande, chief exec of the Comedie, last week sent an official plea to Andre Malraux, Minister of Culture, asking for a second house. The Comedie previously ran its own Theatre Francaise as well as the Odeon, which was called the Salle Luxembourg until a few years ago, when Malraux took it away from them and turned it over to Barrault. Escande, in his current plea, reminds Malraux that the Comedie "needs" a second house in which to try out new plays and new players, although he does not mention "experimental plays," which is Barrault's chief worry.

This latter is also the chief worry of Georges Wilson, the new head of the T.N.P. The Palais de Chaillot, where his troupe is housed in Paris, is too large, he feels, for plays which need more intimate audiences. (The Chaillot has 2,700 seats.) He wants to stay there, but wants a second, smaller, house in which to stage certain productions. Inside is that this same plea for a smaller, second house, was one of the things that Jean Vilar, recently resigned head of the T.N.P. kept fighting for. Cold turndown by the government was one of the alleged reasons for his resignation, though he did operate the Recamier, a small Left Bank house, on a dual basis a few seasons ago.

David Atkinson is subbing in the Broadway production of "A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum" for Ronald Holgate who's been given a month's lead to audition for operatic assignments in West Germany. A recent cast change in the production was the takeover by Eric Rhodes of the role previously played by John Carradine.

Off-B'way Reviews

A Political Party

Arch Lustberg presentation of a musical revue in two acts, with sketches and songs by Daniel Ruslander, Kurt Moss, C. D. Bryan, Owen Gibson Schwartz, Sidney Schwartz, Jean Anne, Pierce Rollins, Herschel Horowitz, Shirley Grossman, Richard Lingeman, Tony Matarrese and Bob Vigoda. Staged by Arch Lustberg; musical director, Daniel Ruslander; costumes, Jean Anne. Opened Sept. 26, '63, at the 41st St. Theatre, N.Y.; $3.95 top weeknights, $4.95 weekends.

Cast: Jean Anne, Bill Holter, Arch Lustberg, Daniel Ruslander.

The first sketch in "A Political Party," a new revue imported from Washington, featured this gem of a gag: "There's the Washington Monument, named for President Washington. And there's the National Gallery, named for Mr. National." That's the average level of humor in this uninspired, tedious show.

The satire is all predictable, ranging from the Kennedy boys to Happy and Rocky, from Mississippi Univ. to Jackie's voice and love of things French. But the material all seems tired, and the occasional good idea is poorly executed. Although current events are handled, there is little wit and little taste in the treatment.

The four performers try unsuccessfully to add sparkle to the evening. Opening night was picketed by Actors Equity since the cast is non-union. Considering the quality of the revue, that seems academic.

The Bald Soprano and The Lesson

Second Co. presentation of two one-act plays by Eugene Ionesco, translated by Donald M. Allen. Staged by James Nisbet Clark. Opened Sept. 17, '63, at the Gate Theatre, N.Y.; $2.50 top weeknights, $3.90 weekends.

Cast: Ronald Weyland, Thea Ruth, Fran Malis, Gerald E. McGonagill, Jane Cronin, George Reinholt, William V. Metzo.

Filled with amusing non-sequiturs and barbed absurdities, "The Bald Soprano" and "The Lesson" makes an intriguing, though not completely satisfying, double-bill. The two pieces by Romanian playwright Eugene Ionesco are competently acted at the Gate Theatre, and should attract devotees of the avant-garde drama.

In "The Bald Soprano," Ionesco ridicules the British, using repetition, pointless dialog, and countless cliches to satirize banality and self-importance. The play has many amusing moments and many tiresome ones. Fran Malis and Gerald McGonagil, Thea Ruth and George Reinholt do nicely as married couples who are, to say the least, confused. Jane Cronin as a maid and William V. Metze as a fireman are also entertaining.

"The Lesson" seems the better of the two plays. It begins delightfully with a professor trying to teach arithmetic to a dense pupil who "has a tendancy to add" but can't subtract. The play grows fascinating as the teacher turns to philosophy, and works himself up into a sexual-frenzy while lecturing. The ending, however, is unsuccessful, with Ionesco seeming to impose political implications on the play.

Ronald Weyland performs expertly as the professor, and Thea Ruth is good as the pupil, a role essayed by Jean Plowright in the 1958 production at the Phoenix Theatre.

CULTURE BREAKS OUT

Queens Wants Arts Center After N.Y. World's Fair Runs Course

A meeting of civic personages on Long Island was held last week under the prod of Councilman Seymour Boyers. His idea is to establish a "Queens Cultural Center" in Flushing Meadow Park once the New York World's Fair has run its course in 1964, 1965 and, possibly, 1966.

Philip Schapiro of the Stony Brook Music Festival, Peter Mesney and Edith Mugdan of the North Shore Friends of Opera, Elizabeth Ross of the Eastern Queens Concert Assn. were among the cultural and educational reps who foregathered to exchange views on the proposal.

blend of arrogance and fatuous self-intoxication as the columnist, a nervy rampaging journalistic warhorse that must be brought to a stop. Sidney Blackmer acts the defendant's corporation counsel, a suave representative of the interests with far too much class for his client. Philip Bourneuf has a showy bit as a Scot colonel who testifies to the correspondent's courage under fire. John Randolph is explosive and belligerent as the libeled reporter. The femme players make only incidental contributions.

A Rainy Day in Newark

Baltimore, Sept. 25.

Roger L. Stevens presentation of comedy in prolog, two acts and epilog, by Howard Teichmann. Staged by Albert Marre; scenery, costumes and lighting, Ed Wittstein. Stars Eddie Mayehoff, Dody Goodman, Zachary Scott, Mary McCarthy; features John McMartin, Ivor Francis, Gene Hackman, Tom Ahearne. Opened Sept. 24, '63, at Ford's Theatre, Baltimore; $488 top.

Sidney Rice	Gene Hackman
Harry Untermeyer	Tom Ahearne
Edward L. Voorhees	John McMartin
John T. Kodiak	Eddie Mayehoff
Brewster	Mary McCarthy
Elizabeth Lamb	Dody Goodman
Maurice Endicott	Ivor Francis
Reporter	Milo Boulton
Technician	Don Lochner
Henry Cotton	Zachary Scott
Lionel Davis	Thomas J. Halligan

Most of the laughs in "Rainy Day in Newark," the new comedy by Howard Teichmann, are in the first act, so the playwright will have to hypo the second act to the laugh level of the first. As it stands now two-act comedy is an up and down thing, up in the first and down in the second with most of the laughs going to Eddie Mayehoff and Dody Goodman.

The show's basic premise may be a single fairly predictable joke but it is promising, though comedy about labor vs management may not be everybody's paycheck. Mayehoff plays a recognizable labor leader who wants to negotiate a 12-hour work week with a not so profitable clock factory in New Jersey. The owner, acted by Miss Goodman, talks him into buying it, then takes over as plant manager for the labor leader who is now also a capitalist.

The lines, at least in the first act, are funny in themselves and get great assist from both Miss Goodman and Mayehoff, the latter using all his mannerisms, the moronic laugh, fluttering eyelids, lowered belt and garbled speech. He gets results in the process, though he is sometimes difficult to understand even at close range. Miss Goodman brings her special kind of inflection into play and she, too, is successful in doing her stuff a la the old Jack Paar television show.

Mary McCarty as Miss Goodman's secretary is less successful, but this can be blamed on the part, which is no standout. The same is true of Zachary Scott as a Federal agent investigating the labor leader's activities. The part just doesn't weigh.

A standout in the supporting cast is Sidney Rich as a labor henchman, and worth special mention are the sets, which change while lights are down and curtain is up. The direction, for most part, is good.

Max Gordon's Memoirs

Millie

The real-life, great romance between the Baptist-born girl who, too, essayed the stage as Raye Dean, born Mildred Bartlett, and Mechel Salpeter, who became Max Gordon, because his famed vaudevillian-brother Cliff Gordon had assumed that billing, is one of the better known Broadway sagas. Max and Millie have been a permanent partnership for four decades. It is as legendary as Gordon's dedication to having breakfast every morning with his orthodox Jewish mother, abetted by the understanding Millie.

His show biz credits in "Max Gordon Presents" reads like a who's who of Equity, ASCAP and the Dramatists Guild out of the Rockefellers, Bernard Baruch, General Sarnoff, Bill Paley, Frank Stanton et al. But the prime appeal of this personal document is not the Alger saga, nor the marquee names, nor the b.o., but the ascendency of an average guy, secure and yet insecure, tortured, tormented and uncertain on the one hand and sure-footed, decisive and show biz savvy on the other.

Gordon frankly quotes Oscar Hammerstein 2d's definition of a producer — "a rare paradoxical genius, hard-headed, soft-hearted, cautious, reckless, a hopeful innocent in fair weather, a stern pilot in stormy weather, a mathematician who prefers to ignore the laws of mathematics and trust intuition, an idealist, a realist, a practical dreamer, a sophisticated gambler, a stage-struck child"— because all these things fitted him.

'Who's Going to Write the Jokes?'

Underlying everything, however, was Gordon's laconic credo, "But who's going to write the jokes?"

Shakespeare called it "the play's the thing"; latterday authors have recourse to biblical recall that "first came the words" (a popular alibi, year after year, as shows return to storage despite lustrous marquee names and costly investiture because somebody forgot to write the jokes).

(Gordon had a penchant for these earthy homilies and it is presumed Funke didn't have space for too many. Some are as much of the Broadway legend as Jolson's knee or Bernhardt's pieces-of-gold payoff. Speaking of Jolson's comeback, for example, Gordon summed it up, "Al proves you should never close up the store." On the subject of anti-Semitism, Gordon once told FDR, Eddie Dowling and Robert E. Sherwood during a wartime visit to the White House, "I guess it's because Jews refuse to sit in the balcony!")

Funke's paraphrase of Gordon, however, is sagacious and authoritative. There are so many values that it's inevitable many incidents become sacrificed by reason of space.

Lewis & Gordon to West End

From the struggling poverty of New York's lower east side into more immediate focus comes Gordon's closeups on his long association with Al Lewis (& Gordon), playwright Aaron Hoffman, his affection for brother Cliff Gordon, who died alone in a Chicago hotel room at the age of 32. Still later his ties are with Jerome Kern, Sam Harris, Moss Hart, George S. Kaufman, Noel Coward and a who's who of Sardi's and Tin Pan Alley. Gordon's personalities and projects range from Hollywood & Vine to the Savoy Grill.

No deliberate iconoclast, Gordon speaks his mind, his views and his attitudes in unequivocal manner. He is no respecter of persons. He evidences having had his hurts and he pays back in kind. If there is coloration there appears to be logic and substance to his captiousness.

By the same token he is overboard on Millie (naturally), his orthodox family, brother Cliff, Moss Hart, Bernard Baruch, John J. Murdock, Sam H. Harris, Sime Silverman, Sam Katz, Harpo and Groucho Marx, Ben Boyer, George Jessel, Bobby North, Eddie Sobel, Bob Milford.

George S. Kaufman was a special breed. The dour, lank and laconic, brittle and brilliant playwright was a creative pillar to Gordon, before, during and after his peaks, yet he was never really Gordon's warm associate. In retrospect, Kaufman was truly a chameleon character and Gordon highlights all the hues in a most revealing chapter entirely devoted to one of the true geniuses of the American theatre, circa 20th century.

Glamour That Was

In all the coloration and caustic comeuppance any veteran component, such as Gordon, can endow the dramatic personae of his personal life's drama, there emerges one thing—there was a special color that glittered and endowed Broadway with its own special sheen in those 1920s, '30s, '40s. There was a particular verve and vibrancy to its artists and artisans, or at least Gordon makes it so appear. Historians a decade hence will undoubtedly look back on the more sophisticated show biz mores of the frenetic '50s and sexy '60s with the same stars in their typewriters.

But there is no denying the Gordon that glittered when he had four hits on Broadway—"Her Master's Voice," "Roberta," "The Shining Hour" and "Dodsworth." Only a year before he wanted to jump out the window. And years later the same uncertainties gripped him, and once again staunch friends and the tender ministrations of Millie succored him.

"My Sister Eileen" was the milestone of his second cycle, and yet after this physical and financial recovery he overextended himself and Max Gordon Plays & Pictures incurred a $300,000 personal note and $100,000 long overdue to Uncle Sam for taxes, this was one time when he didn't flinch.

"Born Yesterday," which was to become the eighth longest running Broadway hit, milestoned Gordon's permanent financial security. The film rights went for $1,000,000, spread over 10 years, Baruch had guided his investments to financial stability, and Gordon harkened to the call of that newfangled invention called television.

Aborted in Radio City and Madison Ave. he still produced another smash, "The Solid Gold Cadillac," and in between kept counsel with himself—as he counseled Sarnoff, Paley, Stanton et al.—"who's going to write the jokes?" Thus, until the "right" script—the jokes—happens along, Gordon and Funke have written one good manuscript in "Max Gordon Presents," a panorama of glamour and worthwhile theatre, generous friends and erratic talents (but talents they were and are) which takes its place with Moss Hart's "Act I" and kindred tiptop tales of the one Main Street that really counts in the passing show of a showman's life.

Shubert Chiefs Molding Fresh Stage Policy

By HOWARD TAUBMAN

NOTICE is herewith served to all and sundry, whether skeptical or credulous by nature, that this morning's column is going to read like a mad optimist's hallucinations. For it offers the glad and momentous tidings that the Shubert organization has committed itself to a fresh and sustained program for the reinvigoration and improvement of the theater.

Skip this column or turn the page, if you are cynical enough to insist that the leopard cannot change his spots. Does the heathen convert himself? Would the money-changers depart from the temple under their own steam? Why should a commercial outfit—historically the embodiment of all that's tough and mercenary on the stage—suddenly abjure profits and profess the higher faith of art?

Whoa! Let's get this straight. The Shubert organization is not turning eleemosynary. It remains a business—the biggest in America's theater. It intends to function like a business. The great difference is that it now believes that good business requires a forceful, progressive policy.

Talk to three of the men who have been making the new policy in recent months and you come away convinced that they are in enthusiastic earnest. Lawrence Shubert Lawrence Jr., who took over as directing chief after John Shubert's death, and his advisers, Alvin Cooperman and Howard Teichmann, do not sound like purveyors of a glossy corporate image.

The Aim

They clearly mean what they say. Deeds have preceded words. No attempt has been made to draw publicity capital from some significant decisions carried out.

Short-term and long-range plans have a common goal—to restore the excitement and appeal of live theater. For if the theater as whole thrives, how can the Shubert interests fail to prosper? With their 17 houses along Broadway and with their holdings in other cities, who has more to gain from a challenging, humming theater than the Shuberts?

Could anything be more elementary? Yet stage people are so accustomed to dreaming that two plus two somehow will add up to 400 that what would be prudent practice in most businesses seems in the theater like an inspiration of highest mathematics.

Begin with the man or woman who buys the ticket—the obvious, indispensable object of the entire business. The new Shubert policy is determined to do all it can to attract the customer, including such idiosyncratic notions as treating him with courtesy, giving him a fair shake and trying to make him feel pleased to be in a theater.

The Shubert houses in New York and out of it are to be refurbished and brightened as soon as feasible. Work is being rushed in several theaters to have them ready for openings this month and next. If it is impossible to complete every item of renovation for this season, the task will be resumed next summer, or at the earliest opportunity. Theaters not freshened this year with a coat of paint, new seats and carpets and other improvements will have their turn next year.

Box-Office Remedies

The Shubert organization has launched a scheme to sell tickets for all the attractions in its houses on a nationwide basis. It is aware of the modern revolution in communications and thinks it is ridiculous to expect the customer to conduct wearying personal surveys when he seeks to discover which play or musical has a ticket to sell.

The Shubert chain is setting up its own central ticket office. By cooperating with airlines, railroads, travel agencies, department stores and other services, it hopes to build a national network for the swift, cheerful sale of tickets.

Talk of Nirvana? The new Shubert bosses are instructing their box-office employes that the customers must always be treated with respect, patience and politeness. That's what the men said—always.

Don't hesitate to complain if you are brushed off or treated insolently at a Shubert box office. But please, not to me. Write direct to Mr. Lawrence and his aides. They want you to.

The new Shubert policy intends to cultivate the theatergoer of the future. It recognizes that our youngsters, particularly in New York, center of the American stage, have been left to pursue their addiction to films and television with little or no competition from the live theater.

Energetic steps have been taken recently to bring high-school boys and girls into the Broadway houses to see shows suitable for them. Further plans are in the making in discussions with the Board of Education.

Why should seats be left empty if they can be filled constructively? Why shouldn't theaters be used much more than the normal eight performances a week? Couldn't something be done in the way of special matinees for students—either with regular casts or understudies?

Now we come to the product. What, if anything, has the new Shubert orientation in mind for the plays and musicals that enjoy the hospitality of the organization's stages?

Since it remains by heritage and conviction a bulwark of the commercial theater, the Shubert office would adore a succession of productions sufficiently diversified to appeal to all sorts of patrons. But it will no longer wait inertly for the product to be delivered.

Script Screening

The intention is to make the booking policy more dynamic than at any time in decades. No producer, however solid his record, automatically gets a house. Every script must be read, every musical auditioned. An ambitious project from the atelier of an established producer was turned down recently, while a young chap with an interesting idea received not only a house but also help in financing.

The Shubert office intends to join in backing productions it believes in, and it is prepared to undertake its own productions. It realizes that what appears sure-fire has a way of flopping and what looks uncommercial becomes a moneymaker. It declares that it wants to make room for the new, the experimental and the imaginative. Through the growing Shubert Foundation it plans to increase the scope of its assistance to young creative talent. It even contemplates the use of its facilities for Sunday-night tryouts of new works with professional talent.

Heard enough? Is your head swimming like mine? Are we really on the road to Utopia? All I can tell you is that the Shubert brass talks as if it means business, and I have a hunch that it will do the most business if it proceeds uncompromisingly with what hard-nosed oldtimers will denounce, as an un-Shubertian, unbusinesslike policy.

There's one cheerful aspect of a depressing evening like "The Student Gypsy"—things are bound to improve. Hobe.

Spoon River Anthology

Joseph Cates presentation of dramatic revue, based on the poems of Edgar Lee Masters, conceived and staged by Charles Aidman, with music by Naomi Caryl Hirshhorn, lyrics by Charles Aidman. Lighting, Jules Fisher; production supervisor, Robert Weiner. Stars Betty Garrett, Robert Elston, Joyce Van Patten, Charles Aidman; features Naomi Caryl Hirshhorn, Hal Lynch. Opened Sept. 29, '63, at the Booth Theatre, N.Y.; $6.90 top weeknights, $7.50 Friday-Saturday nights.

Dramatic readings of poetry are apt to be a special dish, a treat for a limited following and a shoulder-shrug for the general theatrical public. "Spoon River Anthology," which opened last Sunday night (29) at the Booth Theatre, is probably no exception.

Based on the salty, folksy verses of the late Edgar Lee Masters, this two-hour show offers many interesting moments in its catalogue of rural Illinois character vignettes, with a number of routine bits and a few touches of intense emotion. It suffers seriously from lack of story or even continuity thread. Because of its small investment and low break-even, it may get by on what's likely to be a modest run.

The show, first done as a studio project on the Coast and them by the UCLA Theatre Group, suggests something of Norman Corwin's "World of Carl Sandburg" and even of Thornton Wilder's "Our Town" in its elegy to country life in the America of an almost-forgotten generation. Masters was, of course, a perceptive, shrewd, sympathetic and frequently caustic observer of smalltown people, and this version of his poems has passages resembling gold.

Corwin's Sandburg show and to some extent the Dylan Thomas verse drama, "Under Milk Wood," have exploited this field, however, and "Spoon River" thus suffers from seeming something of an oft-told tale. The one substantially successful dramatized poetry reading that comes to mind at the moment is "John Brown's Body," and perhaps significantly that had a fairly well defined story, with a Civil War background, no less, and had Tyrone Power and Judith Anderson (later Anne Baxter) as leads.

But though this "Spoon River" cast is obviously handicapped by the lack of boxoffice names, it is skillfully and winningly done by the same players who did it in its Coast launching. They include Betty Garrett, Robert Elston, Joyce Van Patten and Charles Aidman, with Naomi Caryl Hirshhorn and Hal Lynch providing vocal and guitar (in his case, occasionally banjo) interludes.

"Spoon River Anthology" won't set Broadway on fire, which is not to its discredit, but it may do well enough long enough to make a few bucks for young producer Joseph Cates. Hobe.

Bicycle Ride to Nevada

Rober L. Stevens & Herman Shumlin (in association with Nelson Morris & Randolph Hale) presentation of drama in three acts (five scenes), by Robert Thom, based on the novel "Dangerfield," by Barnaby Conrad. Staged by Herman Shumlin; scenery and lighting, Howard Bay; costumes, Edith Lutyens Bel Geddes. Stars Franchot Tone; features Lois Smith, Richard Jordan, Paul McGrath, Barbara Mostel, Peona Powers, Ron Leibman, John Marriott, Violet Dunn. Opened Sept. 24, '63, at the Cort Theatre, N.Y.; $6.90 top weeknights, $7.50 Friday-Saturday nights.

Austin	John Marriott
Lucha Moreno	Lois Smith
Winston Sawyer	Franchot Tone
Phoebe Fletcher	Leona Powers
Victor	Paul McGrath
Elizabeth	Lulamae Hubbard
Basil	Leslie Redford
Sally Dawn	Barbara Mostel
Bentley	John Boruff
Chandler	Guy Repp
David Sawyer	Richard Jordan
Rip Calabria	Ron Leibman
Mrs. Tiggy-Winkle	Violet Dunn

Sinclair Lewis, it turns out, was an angry old man. He was also, in his feeble, final phase, a raging egomaniac, an artist obsessed by the fact that he had outlived his ability and even his reputation, a hopeless alcoholic, a rampaging, abusive, exasperating caricature of a famous man.

That, at any rate, is the portrait of the Nobel Prize novelist as presented in "Bicycle Ride to Nevada," a harrowing drama by Robert Thom, based on the Barnaby Conrad novel, "Dangerfield." Since Conrad was at one time Lewis's secretary, there's no question of the identity of the unsavory, pitiful central figure of the play, especially as several of the betterknown Lewis novels are mentioned by name.

"Bicycle Ride," which was presented by Roger L. Stevens and Herman Shumlin last week at the Cort Theatre, is an uneven play unevenly done. It has several strong scenes and several powerful performances, but its unvarying tone of shrill, searing invective becomes tiresome, and the general effect tends to be progressively unpleasant. It seems a dubious bet for general popularity and, therefore, of Broadway success.

There's a little of the flavor of "Long Day's Journey Into Night" and even of "Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?" in this three-act tirade of an embittered has-been against his pathologically vengeful son, his devoted young mistress and, indeed everyone within sight or sound, including strangers. Out of his frustration and despair and terror, the tormented wreck spares not even himself in his frenzy to inflict pain on everyone else.

Under the generally understanding and taut, but spotty direction of co-producer Shumlin, there are several remarkable performances. Franchot Tone, as the disintegrating old writer, gives one of the outstanding portrayals of his career, an impressively defined and detailed study, with amazing discipline, vitality and drive.

As the virtually paronoic son, a role that seemingly got beyond the playwright's control and tends to dominate the drama, Richard Jordan manages to avoid exageration and achieves considerable variation and credibility. Lois Smith seems painfully stilted as the young mistress, and Paul McGrath gives another of his effortlessly plausible portrayals as an old friend who isn't intimidated by the novelist's abuse.

Howard Bay has designed a striking single setting of bookshelf-covered walls to represent the writer's Santa Barbara retreat. Incidentally, according to Broadway scuttlebutt, Thom's dramatization takes considerable liberties with the "Dangerfield" novel, and Conrad is reputedly disgusted at the result.

Be that as it may, "Bicycle Ride" is a creditable work, but hardly a dish for average entertainment-seekers. Hobe.

ATPAM Starts Picketing 2 More Off-B'way Shows

The Assn. of Theatrical Press-agents & Managers is extending its picketing of off-Broadway productions to two more entries, both on this week's list of openings. They're "Color of Darkness," which preemed last Monday night (30) at the Writers Stage Theatre, and the double-bill debuting tonight (Wed.) at the East End Theatre of "Opening Night" and "A Matter of Like Life and Death."

Picketing of the double-bill of "The Bald Soprano" and "The Lesson" at the Gate Theatre, and "A Political Party" at the 41st St. Theatre, is being continued by the union in its campaign for the off-Broadway employment of ATPAM members as company managers. The union is restricting its pickets to new off-Broadway productions and only those of managements that resist its demand for the hiring of company managers in addition to union pressagents. The latter have been working off-Broadway for some time.

N.Y. LEGIT CRIX NIX RADIO-TV REVIEWERS

The New York Drama Critics Circle isn't opening up to radio and television reviewers. A motion by Tom Dash for their admission into the organization was made yesterday (Tues.) at the Circle's meeting in Manhattan. Dash, former critic for Women's Wear Daily, who now has emeritus standing in the Circle, was unable to get anyone to second his recommendation.

All officers were reelected to second terms: Howard Taubman (N. Y. Times), president; Ted E. Kalen (Time mag), vicepresident, Ethel Colby (Journal of Commerce), treasurer and chairman of the membership committee; and George Freedley, curator of the legit department of the N. Y. Public Library, recording secretary.

The Circle reaffirmed its decision of last season to give only one award to the best theatrical work of the semester. However, allowance has also been made for the presentation of citations to other selections.

'Unto These Hills' Is Still Champ; Outdoor Show Drew 132,114 Payees

Greensboro, N. C., Oct. 1.

"Unto These Hills," the Cherokee Indian drama presented every summer at Cherokee, N. C., continues to lead the nation's outdoor historical productions in attendance. The Kermit Hunter drama had 132,114 paid admissions for 60 performances this year, up 2.2% from last year. That was almost three times the number attracted by its closest competitor and ran the total attendance of "Unto These Hills" to 1,789,966 since opening in 1950.

"The Lost Colony" at Manteo, N. C., with the best season since 1951, unseated "The Common Glory" at Williamsburg, Va., for second place in the attendance race. Up 14% over last season, "The Lost Colony" played to 49,720 customers. "The Common Glory," down 13% from 1962, ended the season with a total of 47,842 paid admissions.

The biggest increase was made by "Honey in the Rock," another Kermit Hunter drama, at Beckley, W. Va. This season's attendance was 36,228, as compared to 28,693 last year. "The Stephen Foster Story" at Bardstown, Ky., had an attendance of 34,695, a drop of 4,000 from the previous season. "Horn in the West" at Boone, N. C. moved up to sixth place with 31,203 admissions as compared to 25,071 in 1962.

The newest of the Hunter dramas, "Stars in my Crown," in its initial season at Murray, Ky., drew slightly less than 30,000 persons. "Home is the Hunter" at Harrodsburg, Ky., also in its first season, showed to 18,805 persons. "The Book of Job" at Pineville, Ky., reported its most successful season, but officials declined to reveal attendance figures.

In retaining its attendance crown, "Unto These Hills" had its best season since 1954, when it played to 150,966 paying customers. That was despite a July when rain fell on 20 of the first 30 performance dates. No performance was rained out, but attendance was cut and refunds were made.

Rain also affected attendance at several of the other dramas. "Honey in the Rock" had two performances rained out. But with the exceptions of "The Common Glory" and "The Stephen Foster Story," the open air dramas had the best season in years.

Catholic Teacher Group Pledges 'Deputy' Boycott

Bielefeld, Germany, Oct. 1.

A scheduled local production of the Rolf Hochhuth drama, "Der Stellvertreter" ("The Deputy") has drawn threats of a permanent boycott of the municipal theatre by members of a Catholic teacher group in the neighboring village of Bueren. About 40 have signed a pledge to maintain the boycott, on the ground that "Every German must be ashamed to buy a ticket to the play."

The protesting members belong to the Catholic Teachers of Germany. They usually come regularly by bus to Bielefeld to attend the theatre, bringing students with them, but say they will no longer do so if the Hochhuth play is presented.

"The Deputy," which deals with the alleged failure of the late Pope Pius XII to use maximum influence in behalf of the Jews during the Nazi regime, has been widely produced in Germany, occasioning considerable criticism.

Dance Review

Shanto Rao Co.

(Kaufman Hall N.Y.)

Miss Rao from South India was in Manhattan once before, in 1957, in an over-elaborate, over-produced, badly-advised, Rockefeller-subsidized company of 20 which played the ANTA Theatre. That forced downtown engagement at $6.60 did not hide the dancer's remarkable attainments as an artist, but it is the present, sensibly simplified, vividly alive, seven-person troupe (four musicians) that her virtuosity is not only wonderfully obvious but unencumbered by the kind of tedious Hindu temple dances or war lord interludes which export to western audiences with difficulty only.

Now touring U.S. and Canadian dates, Shanta Rao is most of her own show. Which is proper. Saucy herself when the choreography calls for it she is supplemented by two girl dancers Chandramati and Padma, who are very saucy indeed. Thus the atmosphere is electric with personality as well as superb ethnic artistry.

Booked by Isadora Bennett of the Asia Society Performing Arts Program the Shanta Rao visit is certain to delight discriminating audiences everywhere. It was a sellout at Kaufman with standees on both floors. Land.

William Morris Agency Expands Stock Section To Year-Around Status

The William Morris Agency is taking a bullish view of stock activity in a year-round perspective. Charles Baker, executive in charge of the agency's legit division, cites stock as a major arm of his department's overall operation. He attributes it primarily to the substantial gross potential for stock productions and to the increasing expansion of stock activity beyond the traditional three-month June-August summer session.

Baker points to a growing number of summer showcases which have been stretching their schedules to include the late spring and early fall and to other spots which have gone to year-around operation. He believes that stock warrants more specialized handling and has appointed Ed Robbins to head the agency's stock section.

The stock operation, under Robbins, will be a fulltime year-around activity to match, Baker says, "the growth of new theatres in suburbia and their extended playing schedules." Robbins stresses that stock receipts this summer have been "extremely satisfying," and he regards as significant the continued enthusiastic reception accorded television names in stock appearances.

Working with Robbins in New York are Ed Bondy, Leonard Olsheim and Lee Salomon. Handling stock in Chicago for the agency are Sid Epstein and Tony Fantozzi, while in the Beverly Hills office its Jules Sharr assisted by Fred Apollo and Mike Alvarado.

Mureen Drew is appearing in the off-Broadway production of "The Spots of the Leopard" in the role for which Mary Boylan was originally set.

WELLS RICHARDSON

An animal roar of laughter from every corner of the Belasco Theatre. And such a simple cause: A puff on a cigarette, a choking cough, a slow turn of the head, a baleful glare through a cloud of smoke at the plain, pursuing female from New Jersey: from these fragile ingredients, RICHARDSON had deliberately concocted a combination that never missed.

Joseph Schildkraut's later comment: "A charming actor with a definite gift for comedy." Elmer Rice would have agreed.

We want to the world to know we think JANE MORGAN is the loveliest ANNA of them all. Between an errant typesetter and myopic press agent, the wrong name was used in a recent Variety ad as having been the star of "The King and I". So Bill Rach and all the staff at the Melody Top in Chicago want to tell you that the quotes used were partly attributable to one of the nicest and most talented ladies in the theatre—JANE MORGAN.

Times Ups Arthur Gelb

Arthur Gelb, formerly assistant cultural editor of the N.Y. Times, has been upped to assistant metropolitan editor in charge of assignments. The metropolitan desk on the Times corresponds to the city desk on most dailies, and Gelb's duties involve assigning staffers to stories. He'll be under Abraham M. Rosenthal, metropolitan editor.

Milton Esterow, a member of the Times drama staff, succeeds Gelb on the cultural desk, but with the slightly different title of assistant to the editor, Joseph Herzberg. Richard Shepard has also joined the cultural staff as a general reporter. Under the Times setup, the drama, film, tv and radio, dance, art and book departments are headed by the cultural editor.

Gelb and his wife, Barbara, several years ago coauthored "O'Neill," and they're currently working on a new book with a theatrical background.

Confirm John Denton

As VARIETY reported recently, John Denton has been confirmed as executive editor of the N.Y. Journal-American, effective later this month. He will work with longtime m.e. Paul Schoenstein. Coincidentally, Joe Kingsbury-Smith, publisher of the J-A, announced the resignation of John O'Connell, formerly editor of the Hearst-affillated American Weekly until it was scrapped, to become executive editor of This Week magazine. O'Connell had been brought into the J-A fold recently as "director of editorial enterprise" which intimated he was being groomed for a more permanent post. Instead, O'Connell has exited for the This Week mag berth.

Since Denton's resignation as editor of the N.Y. Herald Tribune two years ago, because of policy differences with publisher John Hay (Jock) Whitney, he became editor of the Los Angeles Herald-Examiner.

Bowater Awards

Five-man team of the Montreal Star's editorial side has been awarded first prize in one of three sections of the annual Bowater Awards for Journalism, considered the most prestigious competition for Fourth-Estaters in Canada.

Those who shared the $1,000 prize are William A. Wilson, chief of the Ottawa bureau; Peter Trueman, who is stationed in Washington and the United Nations; Charles Lazarus, editorial staffer in Montreal; Bernard Kaplan, who covers the French scene; and Boyce Richardson, London correspondent for VARIETY and the N.Y. Times in Montreal.

The award went for a series of 14 articles last year dealing with the impact of the common market on various European nations. Wilson, who coordinated the project, wrote on the Benelux group; Trueman's pieces dealt with Germany; Lazarus visited Italy for his series; Kaplan wrote on France; and Richardson toured the Scandinavian countries.

The Star team's prize came under "Commonwealth and International Affairs;" Bruce Hutchison, publisher of the Victoria (B.C.) Daily Times; placed first in "Social, Political and Economic Affairs;" and Lubor Zink of the Brandon (Manitoba) Sun was the winner in "Economic and Business Fields."

Stinnett's Signoff

When he was promo exec for all Curtis publications, Caskie Stinnett did a monthly gag sheet, "Speaking of Holiday" (another Curtis mag), that got wide intratrade attention but with his new duties as executive editor of Ladies' Home Journal (still another Curtis periodical) he published his valedictory of "signoff" edition.

Meantime Geis is bringing out all of Stinnett's essays in book form next month under title of "Back To Abnormal."

John Martin's Tome

John Martin, who retired last year as dance critic of the N.Y. Times, has a book coming out under the Tudor imprint, "John Martin's Book of the Dance" ($7.95), an expanded and extensively rewritten version of an earlier volume.

Along with 365 stage and action photos, the text treats the golden age of classic ballet (19th century), the innovations of Fokine and Diaghileff and the vanguard work of Massine, Nijinsky and Balanchine. Rise of dance in America is treated through the emergence of the N.Y. City Ballet, the American Ballet Theatre and the work of such choreographers as Tudor, deMille, Page, Robbins, Littlefield and Graham.

"No Two Ways About It!"

Dale Evans Rogers, who has had a measure of success with her four previous booklets on spiritual faith, should continue the pattern with her latest 64-page collection of personal comments on "the pressures of everyday life." (Fleming H. Revell Co.; $1.50).

Although her statements and style are a bit too assertive for the more sophisticated reader, the sincerity of her remarks in "No Two Ways About It" is unimpeachable. She believes the most important "pressures," from an entertainment world angle, against which one should guard are success, money and sex. Who would argue? Robe.

Leaves of Summer," a rare performance away from religious songs for the singer.

Andy Williams was heard in a medley of Oscar hits — "Moon River," by Henry Mancini and Johnny Mercer; "Love is a Many Splendored Thing," Sammy Fain and Webster; "Mona Lisa," Ray Evans-Jay Livingston; "Atchison, Topeka and the Santa Fe," Mercer and Harry Warren, and "All the Way," Sammy Cahn-Jimmy Van Heusen.

Mancini conducted for Williams, also presenting his own "Days of Wine and Roses," "Baby Elephant Walk" and "Theme From Peter Gunn," and Tiomkin backed Miss Jackson and also offered his own "High Noon."

It became evident there are similarities of style and discipline in filmscoring from spectacle writing to ballad style title tunes. Most graphic and stirring on the program, however, was the exciting "Captain From Castile," by Alfred Newman, with the eight-time Academy Award winner also conducting his prelude to "How the West Was Won."

In its rightful place, everything was striking, the program rounded out with Elmer Bernstein doing his "Magnificent Seven"; David Raksin, prexy of the Composers Guild, doing "Laura"; Leigh Stevens, founding prexy of the Guild and to whom the concert was dedicated, doing Green's "Raintree County"; Nelson Riddle, a group of television themes, including "Route 66," "Bonanza," "Perry Mason" and "Naked City"; Bernard Hermann, "Snows of Kilimanjaro" and "North By Northwest"; Alex North, "Cleopatra"; Miklos Rozsa, "Ben Hur"; Franz Waxman, "A Place in the Sun," featuring sax soloist Ted Nash.

Extra comedy attraction for the show came with Jack Benny, in his usual adept takeoff on a classical violin composition. Mahlon Merrick conducted — and played straight man.

Green conducted an Alexander Courage medley of film hits—"Wish Upon A Star," by Ned Washington and Leigh Harline; "Best Years of Our Lives," Hugo Friedhofer; "Picnic," Steve Allen and George Duning; "Exodus," Ernest Gold; "Around the World in 80 Days," Harold Abramson and Victor Young and "Hi Lili, Hi-Lo" Bronislau Kaper. Concert paid effective tribute to the late Young with a spotlighted, silent piano on stage.

Gross of the evening's performance, all talent donated with exception of the 92-piece orchestra, was $36,000, all to go to the Guild's non-profit treasury for future operations. Some 10,000 attended. Dale.

Series Booms Niteries

Copacabana, where Joe E. Lewis is headlining. He's big with sports followers because of many years' attendance at assorted racetracks and baseball fields around the country. He's expected to bring prosperity not only to the Copa main room, but to the lounge where he retires for some serious post-time following his regular shows.

Another spot that has always attracted the out-of-towners is the Latin Quarter, which also has a heavier than normal list of reservations. Other areas that usually cash in on the series are the hotel entertainment rooms. It's virtually axiomatic that the inns hypo their trade when rooms are SRO. The attractions are some help, but generally it matters little who's on the marquee when the town's jumping.

An exception, however, is the Americana, where the Tommy Dorsey Orch package, topped by Frank Sinatra Jr., has been doing turnaway business. They've gone over their guarantee and into percentage since opening at the room. They leave at the end of the week to be followed by Buddy Greco.

While sellouts are expected in many hotels, the New York Hotel Assn. feels that there will be enough rooms to accommodate all visitors. The organization will operate its referral service during the Series whereby hotels with vacancies will notify the bureau, and inns that cannot house guests will service the turnaways with guaranteed reservations at other hostels.

SCULLY'S SCRAPBOOK

By Frank Scully

Portland Ore.

The author who has a son or daughter who not only reads his books but now and then buys one must know the rarest pleasure this side of Paradise. (This may be an unhappy figure of speech because we have just visited Paradise in Mt. Rainier National Park, Washington, and if that's what Paradise is supposed to look like hell has been underdescribed.)

Back in 1955 I had a daughter who finished her last year at Smith College waiting on table. In fact her chore was lower than this seems to indicate because she was a waitress who waited on student waitresses.

"Cross My Heart" had just come out and she rushed into a Northhampton bookstore and put down five of her hard earned bucks for a copy. If she had waited I would have presented her with one, but I was touched that she thought so much of me as a writer that she would buy one of my books.

Five Stories Of Books In Portland?

Then this summer, now married to a Harvard lawyer and the mother of three children, living in this town that let the toss of a coin determine whether it should be called Boston or Portland, she happened to be browsing through a bookstore that is like a grain elevator of words. It is five stories high and all books.

There she fell upon a clean and undamaged second-hand copy of "Bernard Shaw" by Frank Harris, my second ghosting job for the buccaneer of belles lettres. Though published 30 years ago, the book was still holding up quite well in price. She had to pay $2 for it.

She allowed me to look at it, to handle it and, if I wanted, to read it. It ran 429 pages of nice big type, but lacked an index. I remember we made one but Simon & Schuster in the rush of meeting a publication day which was synchronized with the publication day of Gollancz in London couldn't wait to set the type and include the index.

Shaw Cleans Up Shaw's Language

I still laugh when I read Shaw's letter saying he would not have Harris write his life under any conditions, that Nellie Harris would write it better. "You made Shakespear (his spelling) a cross between a sailor in a melodrama and a French criminal invoking the memory of his sacred mother. What you would make of me not even God knows."

That was on Jan. 18, 1930. By Nov. 3, 1930 (Whoops, the day I was married!) he was writing, "I sent the letters back to you yesterday in a hurry. One of them contains, I regret to say, the improper expression, 'permanent whore.' Change the second word to 'mistress.' Our forecastle style will not do on the quarterdeck. I give you a free hand as to these letters."

Thus in 10 months Shaw went all the way from No to Yes. I strung the letters together and called them "Credentials." I sure was a mean widdle kid in those days.

He didn't make the change without a lot of browbeating. I wrote bludgeoning letters and brought them to Harris to sign. In them I told Shaw the biography was going to be written and though he might stop it in England, where the laws are rigged to protect the rich, such threats would get him nothing in America. I knew he was afraid of Harris and since I was afraid of neither of them, what did I have to lose by talking tough?

Shaw Pencils In His Sex Life

In fact, Shaw was so scared that Harris would go berserk in describing the Shavian sex life (what sex life?) that he sat down one Sunday and wrote his sex credo in longhand. And in pencil yet. I don't know what happened to that document. It must be a collector's item of great value.

It was prefaced with a coy letter Shaw wrote from Malvern on Sept. 18, 1930 which said in part:

"What an impossible chap you are! You want stories about actresses. Don't you know you must just as well ask a cardinal whose life you were writing to give you a few choice stories from the confessional as to ask a playwright to give you the secrets of rehearsal?"

He then proceeded to drop tidbits involving Ellen Terry, Mrs. Pat Campbell, Lady Colin Campbell and Edith Evans. "But only with one, long since dead and no great actress either, had I any Harrisian adventures . . . I am, and always have been, an incorrigible philanderer."

Not quite "always" for he adds, "You may count the women who have left me nothing to desire on less than the fingers of one hand."

He said he couldn't write like James Joyce. "My prudish hand would refuse to form the letters."

This Looks Like Good Guessing

Then he makes a prophecy: "For all we know," he wrote, "they may be peppered freely over the pages of the lady novelists 10 years hence and Frank Harris' autobiography may be on all the bookstalls."

He wasn't off by more than 20 years because Harris' long suppressed Life and Loves is due to hit the bookstores this fall.

I'm afraid the confessions will hit with all the dull thud of a small sandbag. There's a lot of interesting stuff in Harris' life but it isn't in his clinical reports of what goes on in the marriage bed.

As for Shaw's sex credo, it's too long to quote much of here but it is well worth reading, for he shows a vast amount of sense and in one place touches the secret of his desires.

Few kickbacks came from the wraith-writing. Maxime de Beix wrote a note in VARIETY's Literati that now that Harris was dead I remained as the sole author. Nellie Harris chased me all the way to London to plead that I deny I had anything to do with the writing of the book. "Otherwise it will kill sales and ruin Frank's reputation."

VARIETY doesn't wilfully print lies," I told her and I don't deny truths. "I'll say nothing now but may in my own good time."

So it was left at that.

A year later on the Blue Train between Cannes and Monte Carlo Alice and I rode with the Shaws who were about to embark on their first world tour.

Instructing The Master

He wanted to know who wrote what in the book.

I told him I did about 98% of the original but with his additions my part was cut back to 72%. "Harris wrote 2%."

"I don't see how you had the nerve to do it," he said. "Harris knew very little of my life and you didn't know any. But anbod wanting the authentic facts of my life and career will find them there."

Little Alice who wasn't et of age and was not used to geniuses who could contradict themselves—all in one sentence—remarked, "Then my husband must have known a lot about your life."

Shaw looked at this charming and tiny skijumper with the puzzled air of a king who couldn't believe his ears.

"Well," she continued, "if you say the facts in this book are correct anybody wanting to check on your life will find the truth there, then my husband must have known a lot about your life."

When Irish Eyes Are Snarling

Shaw grinned. Well, let's call it a grin. He was a tall well-built man but his eyebrows swished upward and when he smiled he looked like the devil snarling.

And he wasn't a devil either with women or when preaching his peculiar brand of parlor socialism in the parlors of the rich.

He thought he stood on Shakespeare's shoulders as a playwright. Poor man, tall as he was, they buried him deeper than Shakespeare and he lives today through the success of Loewe & Lerner's "My Fair Lady."

But it was fun knowing him.

program" with 7-to-7:30 rerun "entertainment" shows, puts ABC-TV way way out front in the all-important, three-network contest from 7:30-to-8:30 each weekday night.

It is now clear, even this early in the season, as tv pros see it, that when CBS' Bill Paley and Frank Stanton ordered Dick Salant to match Bob Kintner's plans for a new half-hour Mon.-Fri. 7-7:30 Huntley-Brinkley strip with an identical Cronkite expansion and slotting (or vice versa), they put ABC right back in the Nielsen big-time, at least so far as the highly prized 7:30-to-8:30 hour on week nights is concerned. For as tv experts know, 7:30-to-8:30 is not an independent tv time period entity. It is the all-important extension of the 7-to-7:30 audience base.

While shrewd analysts of the just released 30-market Nielsen for the week ending Sept. 22 pay little heed to the big and inherently transitory ABC ratings opposite old, tired reruns, their eyes opened wide when they saw that the ABC affiliates, with locally originated off-network reruns (the "Have Guns," the "Bilkos," the "Riflemans," the "Dickens-Fensters," et al.), are out-rating news on both the NBC and CBS stations.

This dramatic reversal from ABC's last year's poor third rating status to audience primacy, Monday through Friday, before 7:30 p.m. (and thus in the immediately following 7:30 to 8:30 period) shapes up as the big competitive change of the new season. For while the generation-old Sarnoff-Paley war shifted to news and public affairs, a relative newcomer, Leonard Goldenson, who plays it the "entertainment" way, is picking up the crucial early evening Nielsen marbles.

Not that Huntley-Brinkley and Cronkite aren't garnering respectable ratings. They are. But, as Garry Steiner's "The People Look At Television" study certainly would indicate, the public will turn —in far larger numbers—to the sole entertainment show (even if it's poor quality) in preference to either of two fine news programs. That ABC is now thus proving the validity of the CBS-financed Steiner finding constitutes perhaps the bitterest irony of the unfolding season. For while news and information programs may be the tv plasma of public betterment, entertainment is the life blood of profit-producing Nielsens.

Thus the ABC planned slotting on its owned and affiliated stations of the nation's only 7-to-7:30 tv entertainment is paying handsome audience dividends to the Goldenson network. To make ABC's early evening audience prospects even more solid, those NBC or CBS affils which carry the half-hour network news in the 6:30-to-7 optional period (as does WCBS-TV in New York) typically program 7-to-7:30 with a half-hour of local news to which—under the prodding of the departed Newton Minow—they have allocated expense budgets of unprecedented size.

That's why ABC-TV prexy Tom Moore finds that, even though it's running a distant third on Saturday and Sunday nights (when CBS and NBC don't fly against the news headwinds but build up Nielsen speed from entertainment lead-ins such as "Mr. Ed" and "Lassie"), his network is "creaming" both the CBS and NBC new early evening shows from 7:30-to-8:30.

Cross-The-Board

The new ABC affiliate rating lead at 7-to-7:30 (NYT) carries right through, without exception, each weekday night from Monday through Friday. On Monday "Outer Limits" has soared to just that in the Nielsens, toplining both "To Tell the Truth" and "I've Got A Secret" (which used to dwell in or near the Top 15 zone), and handily defeating the NBC "Monday Night at the Movies." While CBS regains the audience lead at 8:30, the ratings of the General Foods comedies, which follow, are threatened with considerable Nielsen-erosion damage.

Likewise on Tuesday "Combat" at 7:30 runs away with the audience, according to the bellwether New York Nielsen, defeating even Red Skelton, formerly one of tv's highest rated programs, which starts at 8 o'clock. To make Skelton's "CBS dedication to the news" plight even more worrisome, CBS is now mulling replacing his "Matt Dillon" repeat lead-in with a half-hour of news at 7:30-to-8, thus giving Skelton a news lead-in of 90 (repeat 90) minutes.

And with a "Rifleman" repeat, for example, pitted against a Huntley-Brinkley on Wednesday 7-to-7:30, the die is thus cast for 13-year-old "Ozzie and Harriet," Patty Duke and "Price Is Right" to upset the "Virginian" from 7:30-to-9, as is shown in the 30-market Nielsen.

And so on, to Thursday, where the "Flintstones"-Donna Reed back-to-back duo outrates both NBC and CBS competition because of a decisive lead-in advantage. "Dickens-Fenster" happens to be the rerun program selection "independently" made by many key ABC affils to precede the ABC Thursday comedy bloc and to counter the NBC and CBS news.

Ditto Friday night when "77 Sunset Strip" rides a similar gravy train lead-in and thus inherits the audience tuned to tv's only entertainment in the preceding half-hour.

As one agency tv expert put it: "CBS and NBC in the early evening, this year, are going to have about as much opportunity as Joseph Valachi back in the Atlanta Penitentiary."

Observers believe ABC's overall ratings this season can be expected to be better than what an evaluation of its program quality would suggest. While many agree, for example, with the N.Y. Times' Jack Gould that ABC's 14 new programs are "little short of disastrous," they also perceive that the ABC "let me entertain you" early evening adroitness can compensate for what Gould calls its "sloppy and slipshod" programs.

Meantime at NBC and CBS, where there's an all too keen and painful awareness of the neatly exploited ABC major audience windfall, there's a growing feeling of being hoisted on the petard of their own broadcast service idealism.

While the Jim Aubreys, the Mike Danns, the Walter Scotts and Mort Werners find it distasteful to have their leadoff entertainment showmanship arms tied behind them, there is a realistic deference to the Kintner-Stanton policy postures which have pitted NBC and CBS forces against each other while ABC threatens to steal the entertainment horses from the barn.

One oldtimer points out that this season, in this respect, is a reprise of 10 years ago, when the ABC of that day dominated 7:30-to-8 with the "Lone Rangers," "Beulahs," etc., only because CBS scheduled a 15-minute news strip at 7:30 and NBC carried the Mon.-Fri. Camel News Caravan with John Cameron Swayze at 7:45. Even then, a mighty NBC and strong CBS bowed to the competitive pressures of an anemic ABC by rescheduling the news earlier in the evening.

as Duke Ellington's and Count Basie's, the joint rocks—as it did with "Don't Get Around Much Anymore" and the 17-min.-long Basie composition "Blues In Hoss' Flat," at show caught. Such switches as segueing into Claude Thornhill's "Snowfall" are equally effective.

Cavanaugh's vocalling is that of a musician, ideal for a jazz joint. He rides the notes and largely kids the lyrics. In sum-up, success of this idea indicates there are still many buffs around who cotton to big band sound throbs. As it grows increasingly impractical to field so many men for a full-fledged big band, there's place for such a combo as this that so subtly and successfully simulates the drive and excitement "of the old days." Such a new day well could dawn. Was.

VSEVOLOD KHERTS
Juggling Strongman

Take notice of the description—"juggling strongman." This is a rare combination. Kherts, a huge man of magnificent physique, throws around 15-pound brass balls. That's for a starter. He works up to a variety of improbable tricks, one lifting 300 pounds from prone position; another, whirling around his legs, torso and head a knobbed bar with brass orbs, some 190 pounds. A ring assistant throws the 15-pounders up in rapid rotation and Kherts stops each one on the back of his neck. The slightest miscalculation would presumably brain him.

A stupendous performance. One of the great figures in circusy prowess of this generation. Land.

Ringling Circus

by 20 Trapeze Girls to build this into a stunning number.

Ellbano, Domis and Cesar each take a ring for smart somersaults and bounding on tightwires while Chaludis do notable trick cycle riding and the Dior Sisters mount large balls to foot them up inclined ramps.

Lothar & Silky contribute well coordinated acrobatic movements and headstands on high trapezes for solid applause. The Lalos and the Robertos do supple flying trapeze crossovers and somersault catches that give the big top feel to this fast paced show.

Fredonias are a risley troupe. An understander, with feet up, catches his flying partners as they bound over from high platforms. He then spins them about. Act is an audience pleasing entry. Fenis & Ferroni do a tango on a rola bola that is novel and expert while Caprice & Partners do hand-to-hand or bike arabesques that show well.

Binders have a man dropping on a teeterboard to send his femme partner up as he catches her with one hand. Clowns do some well proven routines that are still laugh getters. Desert Sons supply some fast pyramiding and acrobatics.

Necessary animal antics are supplied by the Stephenson Family with a group of clever canines who ride horsees, do acrobatics and cavort sagely with this family for a refreshing and popular number. Then 13 elephants dance with the Trapeze Girls.

Kossmeyer Mules are a risible bit as people try to ride the cantankerous animals. Roberto De Vasconcellos supplies some neat haute ecole dance steps with a well groomed horse.

Charles & Gena Moroski put a group of plumed horses through well worked out groupings and training routines. Production number key is an "Around the World in Eight Minutes" sequence. Practically the whole troupe parades in exotic costumes and on elegant floats with an Americana ending of a big bald eagle on top of the world, a golden globe.

A spirited musical backgrounding also helps as do the quick changes. There is no gainsaying the spectacle values of the three rings even if some audience members felt it was too much to watch and sometimes distracting. But others liked the eye choice and felt that it enhanced the main middle ring act overall.

If Paris circuses are down to two one-ringers, which have their troubles, there is still a large audience for unusual shows of this kind. The Moscow Circus did sock biz here last summer and Ringlings should follow suit.

It does not have the class of paring down to one ring of hand-picked unusual numbers, but makes up for it in its size, abundance of solid acts and its general flair and fluff.

This group is going to tour France and other European cities during the next few months. The costumes were made in France to make the show more economical and also easier to outfit since many acts were picked up from different Continental shows and sources.

General response opening night, with a who's who audience, was good. Early reviews sometimes felt the three rings obscured some attention and did not do justice to several acts.

But withal the Ringling Circus was thought to contain enough unusual numbers and movement and good natured production gloss to make it worthwhile. The show-conscious locals should respond.

OBITUARIES

ARTHUR CHRISTIANSEN

Arthur Christiansen, editor of the London Daily Express for some 25 years until his retirement in 1957 because of health, died Sept. 27 in a tv studio in Norwich, at the age of 59. Since his "retirement," Christiansen turned film actor in several Val Gielgud films (usually playing the role of an editor), ditto in tv (he did a series in the same role) and as general freelance writer and commentator.

One of the most colorful newspapermen in Fleet St., he was equally renowned for his obvious ability to get along with the strongwilled Lord Beaverbrook, publisher of the London Daily Express. Upon retirement, Christiansen remained on the board of directors of the Beaverbrook Newspapers Ltd.

While supposedly divesting himself of the arduous day-to-day chores, he was none the less editorial advisor to ATV, the London commercial video outfit, and director of Independent TV News, its news arm, and ditto to the London American, the shortlived weekly designed to cater to Americans in London.

Christiansen brought the London Express from 1,786,415 to 4,119,585 circulation during his 24 years' tenure as editor. He was sometimes described as "the greatest editor in modern-day Fleet St. journalism."

"The Day The Earth Caught Fire," which Universal released in the Western Hemisphere, and wherin he appeared as an "editor" character, brought him to the U.S. a couple of years ago. U decided it would be a good stunt to attract newspaper space—an editor-turned-actor talking to Yank newsmen. He did. So much so that Universal extended the U. S. itinerary to the Coast, winding up with Christiansen powwowing with oldtime friend Alfred Hitchcock—by coincidence also a U producer-director.

"Chris," as he was colloquially called, was known to VARIETY readers as an Anniversary Number byliner, a stint he personally relished because of the freedom and scope this paper afforded him.

Mrs. Christiansen, the former Brenda Shepherd, was in the tv building when her husband collapsed. Two sons and two daughters also survive.

BILLY ECKSTEIN

"Billy" Eckstein, a legend in his day as a piano prodigy who grew up with show biz from the turn of the century, died last week in Montreal after a lengthy illness. He was in his early 70's.

Eckstein's death was particularly touching because, a few months ago, only hours after Montreal show biz paid him tribute in the last stage show to be presented at the Her Majesty's Theatre before it closed, he suffered a stroke and remained unconscious most of the time until his death.

Eckstein was known as "Mr. Fingers." The Montreal Gazette, in an editorial eulogizing him last week, quoted a 1906 VARIETY review which said, "Willie Eckstein, an infant wonder at the piano, is decidedly well-liked. The boy has a really phenomenal command of the keyboard."

The "boy" actually never grew up, maintaining an exhuberant and youthful approach to his work. He gained particular fame during the silent screen days, matching his repertoire with the action, and looking back at the crowd with a big grin, to see how he was registering.

Eckstein continued as a name pianist even after the talkies arrived. In recent years—before illness struck—he played in various niteries.

RICHARD OSWALD

Shortly after World War I he joined such names as Ernst Lubitsch and Erich Pommer in making UFA one of the most advanced filmmaking centres in Europe.

Prior to leaving Germany in 1933, a victim of Hitler's takeover of the German film industry which Oswald helped build, he had completed over 150 feature films, including "Lady Hamilton," "The Dreyfus Case" and "Captain of Kopenick."

CAPITALISTS IN GREASEPAINT

Television Films, in Italy and in U.S., Expand Levine's Production Activity

Joseph E. Levine's Embassy Pictures will soon embark on a major production program involving both television and features. Currently in preparation is the company's entrance into tv production, with three series in the works, as well as plans for the making of some features.

Embassy's evolution as a tv film producer has been in the think stage for some time and now becomes a reality via the production of three series to be made in Italy as coproductions with Italo producer Carlo Ponti. They will be lensed in English at Ponti's Pisa studios, with Yank stars and directors. Embassy will control their international distribution and is putting up the bulk of the financing for the project.

These Italo-made efforts are being mapped as the forerunner of a full-time production schedule of tv films. The company has what are described as "definite plans" for two more series, one to be made in New York and one to be made in California. These won't begin until after the Italo series are completed, in mid-1964.

The three series to be made with Ponti will be "Hercules," "D'Artagnan" and "Casanova." They are being planned as network shows rather than syndication series and will be sold as such. They will be lensed in the above order with "Hercules" beginning early in the coming year. Levine and his exec v.p. Lenny Lightstone planed to

Candid Buddhist

Tokyo, Oct. 8.

Far-out American tenor sax man Sonny Rollins, touring Nippon with his combo and thrush Betty Carter, told a gathering of Japanese pressmen on his arrival that he is a longtime follower of Zen Buddhism.

Thus cued, and knowing Rollins had been a recluse between 1959 and 1961 before returning to the jazz scene, a reporter asked him why he sports a Mohican haircut in addition to his brush of a beard.

"Because I think it's attractive," Rollins replied.

Spanish Films Spoofing Castro

Madrid, Oct. 8.

Cuba's Fidel Castro is beginning to crop up in film scripts as often as he does in newspaper headlines. Two U.S. production companies are hastening preparation for Castro starts this month on "Infidel" and "Operation Delilah."

Victor Mature is scouting locations in southern Spain with director Gene Wesson, and shooting with a cast headed by Mature, Ricardo Montalban, Gilbert Roland and Spanish coproducer-actor Spartaco Santoni is expected to begin within a fortnight. "Infidel" is reported to be a satiric takeoff on the Cuban ruler.

"Operation Delilah," on the other hand, indirectly spoofs Castro who becomes involved in the story line under the modern paraphrase of "For want of an elec-

Gloria Davy Ignores Snub Of 1957 and Will Sing For La Scala in 'Mahoganny'

Milan, Oct. 8.

Gloria Davy, American Negro soprano, and La Scala Opera here, have finally made up and she will sing there in the long pending "Mahoganny" of Kurt Weill and Bert Brecht. Giorgio Strehler will stage, Nino Sonzogno will conduct another American soprano, Gloria Lane, and Italian tenor Alvino Misciano will have the other parts.

Miss Davy never fully explained her tiff with La Scala. In 1957, after leaving the "Porgy and Bess" Company iin Venice following her great successes there, she gave a recital at the "Piccola Scala" (the smaller house in the same building) and was engaged as the first colored "Aida" in the history of Italian Opera. Mets Outrated Yanks Over Season—It Sez Here

In the midst of the World Series fever, WOR-TV, N.Y., issued a rating recaptitulation of another race, the rating race of the Mets, telecast on WOR-TV, and the N.Y Yanks, telecast on WPIX.

The last place Mets outpointed the N.Y. Yanks on the rating charts for the season just ended, according to both Arbitron and Nielsen, said WOR-TV. Station went on to say "Arbitron figures show the Mets with an average quarter-hour rating of 5.6 and a 15.1 share of audience against the Yanks 4.9 and 13.4 share of audience.

"Nielsen charts give the Mets an average quarter-hour rating of 8.5 and a 20.7 share of audience as opposed to the Yanks 6.6 and 16.5 share."

TALENTS' GOAL: KEEPABLE COIN

Behind the formal publicity handout last week in Hollywood revealing that actor Frank Sinatra would assume executive rank at Warner Bros. as "special assistant to president Jack L. Warner" lies a complex of angles, motives, capital gain setups, deferred compensations. He had earlier (August) become a "consultant" on theatrical and television films for the company coincidental with WB acquiring his Reprise Records for a reported $3,000,000 on a stock swap arrangement and merging it into Warner Bros. Records.

Sinatra's deal with Warners seems evident that the star is like almost anybody nowadays whose income is enormous but, under Federal tax brackets, partly illusory if handled as straight salary. The whole objective of modern tax counselling to an actor of Sinatra's status is to convert the productive years into retainable money, via stakes in corporations, assets which mature in years ahead, and so on.

That Sinatra, whether by legalistic circumstance or recognition of "when to quit while ahead," chose the entertainment pursuit over his avocational Nevada casino-hotel interests, is evidenced

No Nudes at N.Y. Fair? That's Good News for B'way

If the nudes can't play the New York World's Fair next season, they'll go to Broadway. This is indicated by the projected importation of the Folies Bergeres to a Stem theatre starting next May. Deal was made beween Robert Purdom & Stephen W. Sharmat and Folies impresario Paul Derval. Arthur Lesser negotiated the agreement on behalf of Purdom & Sharmat and will serve as coordinator between the producers and Derval.

Michael Gyermathy, who staged the Folies company now at the Tropicana Hotel, Las Vegas, will direct the Broadway edition. The Folies will have a Paris premiere before it departs for New York. A company of 50 is expected to be brought into the U. S. The Vegas edition is currently in its third year.

The absence of nudes at next year's Fair has caused showmen to think of bringing them to the Stem. One agency is trying to find a haven for Frederic Apcar's nude show which played at the Dunes as well as in the Lake Tahoe area. It had been trying to make a deal for the Starlight Roof, but now

Greenwich Village Becoming Top N.Y. Showcase for New Acts: Cafe Prop.

Greenwich Village is becoming a more important showcase for new talent than any other sector in New York, according to Herbert Jacoby, who recently relinquished his partnership in the Blue Angel, N. Y., to present owner Max Gordon.

Jacoby is putting his chips into the Village with two new spots. He plans to open a banjo-type room on the site of the late Nick's, former Village jazzery, and is negotiating for another site where he will open a cafe devoted exclusively to creating new talent.

The first Jacoby nitery, set to preem late this month or November, will be called the Red Garter. It's to be patterned after similar spots in San Francisco, Boston and Cape Cod. It'll be on a franchise basis from the original S. F. bistro and wiill have as its main basis the banjo music of a specially formed group. Red Garter will also feature other trappings such as singalongs and sundry festivities in which the customers may participate.

Jacoby feels that today's customers are no longer content to be sedentary in their cafe entertainment habits. They want to participate either actively while attending or get a sense of participation in the discovery of new talent. He plans to capitalize on both customer yens in the operation of the two spots.

The second site, unrevealed for publication by Jacoby, will be along coffee house lines, but probably with a liquor license for those who prefer the hard stuff. In this connection, Jacoby points

Easing the Tension

Glasgow, Oct. 8.

In front of a Moscow department store a queue of several thousand people recently waited patiently for the store to open in order to get 3,000 bottles of "Scotlandski Veeski,"—first Scotch sold in Russia since the war.

A Glasgow firm in turn ordered 3,000 bottles of vodka from Russia.

Rodgers & Bart In the Offing?

Richard Rodgers and Lionel Bart will probably collaborate on a new musical, with George Abbott as prospect to do the staging and possibly work on the book. The idea for the show is understood to be set, but hasn't been disclosed.

Rodgers will go to London in three weeks, not only to sit in on final preparations and attend the opening Nov. 7 of his and the late Lorenz Hart's 1938-39 hit, "The Boys from Syracuse," at the Drury Lane, but to huddle with Bart on plans for the new musical. Abbott returned from London last week after staging the West End edition of "A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum," which he originally directed for Broadway.

Since the abandonment some weeks ago of his and Alan Jay Lerner's projected musical, "I Picked a Daisy," Rodgers has been looking for a new idea for a show, and was understood considering doing not only the music and lyrics, but also the book for it. The venture with Bart apparently indicates he's dropped it as a solo project. Meanwhile, Lerner has recruited Burton Lane for the "Daisy" tuner, which Cy Feuer & Ernest H. Martin are to produce under a different title. It's tentatively slated for Broadway next spring.

Rodgers collaborated with Hart

Music and Book Publishers to Fight Proposed Change in Copyright Act

The music publishing industry and the book publishing biz were at odds over proposed plans for copyright revision but decided on joint opposition to the amendments.

The difference of opinion came up last week in New York at a meeting of copyright experts at the office of Edward A. Sargoy. Those attending were attorneys Joseph S. Dubin of Universal, and Sol Rittenberg, who appeared with Thomas J. Robinson on behalf of Metro; Horace S. Manges for the American Book Publishers Council; Julian T. Abeles for the Music Publishers' Protective Assn.; Irwin Karp, for the Authors' League of America; Bernard Korman for the American Society of Composers, Authors & Publishers. John Schulman acted as chairman of the meet.

The session was called to discuss the provisions in the subsequent Preliminary Draft of the Register's Office of June 4, 1963, whereby the term of copyright was to be for the period of 50 years after the death of the author, provided that in the case of a work other than for hire, a transfer by the author after the effective date of the Copyright Act, otherwise than by will, of copyright or of any exclusive right under a copyright shall be effective for no more than 25

UK Train Robbery Cues Distribs With Similar Pix Capers To Get Busy

London, Oct. 8.

With the trial of those arrested in connection with the great (Britain) Train Robbery now under way and therefore in the public eye, show biz is reacting appropriately. Miracle Films has advance its Brazilian film, "The Train Robbers," from its intended late winter berth to a current showing at the Continentale, Tottenham Court Road, London.

And, at least two film titles have been registered appertaining to the recent $8,000,000 robbery. They are "The Mail Train Robbery—1963" to which Sir Michael Balson has staked his claim, and 20th-Fox's title, "The Great Train Robbery."

Though no one is publicly beating their gums about it, Metro's "How the West Was Won" Cinerama spec, is not losing out because of its Great Train Robbery (Western style) segment is in the show.

On the disk front, even, there has been some activity to snatch some of the headlines with train robbery gimmicks. For example, Pye Records has waxed a disk with Joe Brady (who plays Jock Weir, a cop in the lauded BBC-TV cop series "Z Cars") called "The Great Train Robbery."

Nippon Show Biz Names Combat Fan Mag Falsities

Tokyo, Oct. 8.

Some 10,000,000 Nipponese stage and screen players formed an organization to protect themselves from false and unfair reporting.

The new organization, called Society to Protect Human Rights, was the result of frequent liberties taken with stories about celebrities, particularly those in show biz, in Nipponese mags.

The weeklies, especially those slanted for femme readers, have been most notorious. Specific complaints by offended parties have brought apologies, but hitherto no change of policy.

Valachi Trailerizes Return Bookings For Gangland Film Cycle

Joseph Valachi, star witness of the McClellan Committee hearings, isn't only being helpful to the Dept. of Justice. The picture biz has been quick to pick up on the Cosa Nostra and its implications. The hefty tv-press coverage given Valachi and the investigation has meant new life for at least two pix and has provided the peg for the campaign of yet another.

Allied Artists has two catalog items which are getting lotsa renewed interest on the par of exhibs. They are "Al Capone" and "Pay or Die," both involving activities being discussed in the

Aachen Theatre Cancels Harlan's Holland Tour

Aachen, Oct. 8.

The Aachen Border Theatre has reconsidered its project of sending "Jud Suess" film director Veit Harlan on a tour of Holland with his production of Strindberg's "Dream Play," starring his wife, German actress Kristina Soederbaum.

The Aachen Theatre has been receiving many protests from German and Dutch papers about the projected tour of the production by the man who turned out the most notorious piece of film propaganda for Nazi henchman Josef Goebbels, and has decided to cancel the tour.

Even the Dutch Parliament raised an objection to the tour, noting that the Harlan couple were "not wanted people" in Holland, suggesting that they not be given permission to cross the borders.

Harlan's report to the press was, "I was never a Nazi," and he added his usual comment that people should finally leave him in peace.

GOP Into Groove For '64 Campaign

Althought the next Presidential election is still more than a year away, the Republicans have started a disk campaign rolling with a package featuring four of their top politicos—Dwight Eisenhower, Richard N. Nixon, Barry Goldwater and Nelson Rockefeller. The album, issued by Heritage Records, is titled "Mr. Lincoln's Party Today—A Declaration of Republican Belief."

In the package, the quartet of GOP'ers each delivers his own specially-prepared message describing the principles of the Republican Party of 1963. The speeches were recorded exclusively for the album which was produced by Heritage in cooperation with the Republican National Committee.

The album is emceed by film star Ronald Regan. The disk, which is priced at $5.95, will be used in fundraising and educational programs of Republican organizations throughout the country and will be placed in schools and new citizen groups.

BRITISH CAN'T GET ENOUGH OF GARBO

London, Oct. 8.

Garbo revival, which made big impact at the Empire, Leicester Square, a couple of months back, is now gradually spreading through the country. The news that some of the pix have been selected to play one of Sir Alexander B. King's key Scottish theatres, is followed by the report of a four weeks run at Bristol, starting yesterday (Mon.).

The Bristol season, which teed off with "Ninotchka," will be followed by "Queen Christina," "Camille," and "Marie Walewska." Each of the films is in for a week's engagement.

The Bristol press campaign was hypoed by a special press screening for West of England newsmen, to which 200 teenagers were invited and interviewed after the show.

'TRIO OF LYRICAL TREATS'

Tiptop Memoirs By Edna Ferber, Rose Franken, Jean Dalrymple

By ROBERT DOWNING

Three ladies vitally concerned with the contemporary American stage have produced their memoirs within the span of a few weeks of one another. For show biz readers, this distaff collection is the kind of literary sampling Dorothy Parker might have referred to as "a trio of lyrical treats."

Edna Ferber has written "A Kind of Magic" (Doubleday; $5.75); Rose Franken's entry is entitled "When All Is Said and Done" (Doubleday; $5.75); and Jean Dalrymple is represented with "September Child" (Dodd, Mead; $4.95).

Miss Ferber's is the most formidable entry, and deals not only

A Flea Market On Wheels In a Drive-In Of a Sunday Afternoon Proves Hit

Kansas City, Oct. 8.

The 1,500-car Heart Drive-In's Sunday afternoon Shop-and-Swap market, inaugurated in May, is becoming a big business. The last Sunday in September 1,703 cars were clocked on the premises. Admission price to vendors is now $1 per car, though it started out as free and then was jumped to 50c. Browsers still get in for nothing.

The Shop-and-Swap idea was presented to Heart owners Brooks Noah and Richard Wiles early this year by H. H. Wigman. The "market" is open from 1-5 p.m. on Sundays, during which time patrons bring in everything from antiques of questionable authenticity to livestock to sell or trade (ponies have been very popular).

Heavy advertising, particularly on radio, has made the tab a weighty one, but Wigman is not discouraged. The concessions building runs full tilt during the shopping melee, with an 11-minute taped "goodies spiel" being played repeatedly.

Expensive, but also productive of word-of-mouth and larger crowds, have been the extra gimmicks employed. One Sunday Wigman presented balloonist Don Piccard in an "ascension;" another time he furnished free helicopter rides for the kids. Vendors now are beginning to show up as early as seven a.m. on Sundays to be sure of good "display" space.

While the tab is hefty, the drive-in's owners and Wigman feel the publicity alone is worth it. Boxoffice for film attractions has not exactly been hurt. Venture represents one of the most ambitious ad-pub efforts under taken by any drive-in operators in these parts.

Shorts, Stretch Pants And Shirts Make You a Bum

Fort Wayne, Ind., Oct. 8.

You can't come to any dances at the $3,000,000 Allen County Coliseum if you wear short, stretch pants, or shirtsleeves, under a new regulation by the board of trustees, who were told that dignity disintegrates with such apparel.

Another rule enacted was to have one couple to chaperon each 100 persons attending dances. The facility is rented out to private groups which at times have failed as to chaperonage.

Dallas' Tony Zoppi To Help Raise Loot For '64 Olympic Fund

Dallas, Oct. 8.

Tony Zoppi, night club editor of the Dallas Morning News, has been named a special consultant and chairman of a statewide entertainment committee by the U.S. Olympic Committee in New York.

A former sports writer and for the past 10 years in his present position, Zoppi will head a panel of entertainment and show biz personalities drawn from throughout Texas. Various Olympics benefits will be staged in Texas cities, to be climaxed by an Olympic Ball in 1964.

The Zoppi appointment was announced by J. Lyman Bingham, executive director of the U.S. Olympics Committee. Bingham said the appointment was in keeping with U.S. Olympics' current drive "to inform all Americans, in various walks of life, the importance of American athletes excelling in Olympic Games of 1964 to be held in Tokyo."

In his newly created position, Zoppi will coordinate plans for shows and dances which will help raise funds for the American Olympics team.

AGITATION IN LONDON OVER 'REPRESENTATIVE'

London, Oct. 8.

There has been mounting controversial reaction to the Royal Shakespeare Co. presentation of "The Representative" at the Aldwych Theatre. Posters outside the theatre have been defaced and the actor who portrays Adolf Eichmann on stage has been threatened with beating.

Over one of the theatre posters someone wrote, "This play is a slander against a good man, who cannot answer back," while someone else scrawled, "The Aldwych opens its doors to Marxist, twisted propaganda."

The actor who has received threatening messages is Michael Williams, and as a result a police officer has been put on duty at the stage door. The theatre management has also had a number of complaints from Roman Catholics and a message from a spiritualist.

The play, by the young German writer Rolf Hochhuth, which suggests that Pope Pius XII refused to intercede on behalf of the Jews during Hitler's reign of error, has been doing capacity biz since its opening Sept. 25.

Depends On the Loot If Peerce Plays Paris Op

Paris, Oct. 8.

Talks are on for Jan Peerce to sing a half dozen performances at the Paris Opera, probably in "Faust" and "Rigoletto." Peerce did a highly successful recital at the Salle Pleyel last week, this being the first time the American tenor has ever sung in Paris. Several Opera officials, who were present at the concert, started talking deal immediately.

Whether date (and that ole debbil, money) can be coordinated will be decided when Peerce returns from Vienna, where he does two concerts next year.

ANYONE FOR COLUMBIA STUDIO?

Jayne Makes Nudes Review-Worthy

But While Scripps-Howard Trib Bows To Leer-Art, County Seeks Stricter Censorship Ordinance

Albuquerque, Oct. 8.

Scripps-Howard afternoon daily here, the Tribune, last week stated it would start reviewing nudie pix, along with other first-run films locally. It has for several years carried reviews of major first-run films only in the Albuquerque area.

Trib reasoned that the film houses are starting to run nudies with "name stars" and "with a plot line." Newspaper also noted that more and more big prestige films are coming out with the heroine at her washing, interior or exterior.

Tribune, in a 650-word article, gave a big plug to Jayne Mansfield's "Promises, Promises" which opened here last week at Don Pancho's Art Theatre.

Trib quoted Tom Coleman, a co-owner of the Roxy Art Theatre here "It's almost a necessity to run nudies periodically to make up for losses we sustain on art films."

Meanwhile a new hassle has developed in the Albuquerque area over the exhibition of "offensive" pix in commercial film houses. There is agitation for the enactment of a new censorship ordinance by the Bernalillo County Commission (which includes Albuquerque).

A first reading of such an ordinance, requested by County Manager Harold Christ, was up this week. To become law, the ordinance has to be read at three commission meetings, and approved by the three-man board. That usually takes a minimum of six weeks.

The proposed law makes it "unlawful" to show, sell or exhibit obscene photos, motion pictures, books, publication or other printed matter. Television shows are also included in the regulation.

William Bingham, assistant district attorney, who drew up the proposed law for the county manager said the ordinance defines obscene, as "that which offends the contemporary community conscience by present-day standards."

Violation of the ordinance, if it passes, sets punishment upon conviction at 90 days imprisonment or $150 fine, or both.

Observers here believe the proposed ordinance came about as the result of showing of bare buttocks, burlesque and leer product at Carl Halberg's Esquire, located outside the city limits in the country. He had a run-in with officials of the Catholic Church locally, which banned the house to Catholics.

City of Albuquerque has had a similar law on the books since 1949, although it hasn't been strongly enforced.

Intellectual Types

Durham, N. C., Oct. 8.

Local 417 of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employes asked and was granted permission by Maggie Dent's Rialto Theatre, the town's only art theatre, for the regular showing of a short trailer stating that the reels you have seen, or are about to see, are projected by union boothmen. North Carolina is one of 19 U. S. with right-to-work laws.

The audience shows the usual division of art house crowds. It boos, hisses, but also heartily applauds this intelligence.

Zanuck Declines AMPA Award And Poses an Issue

Associated Motion Picture Advertisers' first annual Hall of Fame award, which was due to be presented last week to 20th-Fox prez Darryl F. Zanuck, went instead into the "AMPA archives," chairman Arthur L. Mayer told the awards luncheon at the Americana in New York Thursday (3).

Mayer reported that Zanuck had declined the award on the grounds that he had already been named man of the year by the Motion Picture Pioneers and thought that "one such award a year is enough." And, commented Mayer, re AMPA's predicament, "a kiss once offered cannot be withdrawn."

Zanuck did not arrive back in New York until the day after the AMPA affair. In fact, no 20th reps were on hand for the lunch, which did draw ad-pub execs from most of the other major companies.

While AMPA execs were more than a little chagrined at the Zanuck turndown, a number of major company people, including some attending the lunch, privately applauded the prexy's action, reasoning that too often such awards are made simply to insure the attendance of big names, and thus to enhance the donor, rather than donee. There was also some irritation on the part of 20th execs because Zanuck had not been queried re the award before it was announced some weeks ago in the press.

The Zanuck Hall of Fame award was to be presented in the name of Herman Robbins, late chairman of National Screen Service. A plaque to this effect was presented to Robbins' son Burton, NSS prez. (Hall of Fame award is to be presented each year in the name of some recently deceased member of the industry.)

Ralph Hetzel, acting head of the Motion Picture Assn. of America, accepted a posthumous award to the late MPAA prez Eric Johnston. This award is to become an annual citation, going to the man who performs the greatest public relations service around the world for the film industry in that year.

Other awards presented at the luncheon included: exhibitor service award to American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres veep Edward L. Hyman; outstanding showmanship award, Alfred Hitchcock, accepted by Universal's Paul Kamey; progress award, American International Pictures, accepted by AIP heads James Nicholson and Samuel Arkoff; best ad campaign, "Hud," accepted by Par ad-pub veep Martin Davis.

Luncheon was cochaired by Mayer and Mel Gold, AMPA prez.

State Dept. Helping As San Francisco Festival Readies Its 7th Year

San Francisco, Oct. 8.

Cyril Magnin, business man and civic leader who is also a member of the board of the annual San Francisco Film Festival, reports that this year, for the first time in the fest's seven-year history, State Dept. offices abroad are cooperating with the fest by distributing entry applications, posters and other relevant data. This year's fest is scheduled to be held Oct. 30-Nov. 12.

Program for the 1963 fest has not yet been set, but it's expected that 25 features will be in competition for the six top Golden Gate awards. In addition to the feature competition, the Frisco fest also spotlights art films, newsreels and shorts. Scene of this year's fest, as it has been in the past, is the Metro Theatre. Irving (Bud) Levine remains the fest director.

MIKE FRANKOVICH AS L.A. 'MAYBE'

Sol A. Schwartz, Hollywood production v.p. of Columbia, has been given a new job, that of senior vicepresident to work in New York, this to take effect within the next few weeks. The switch was formally made last week and, immediately, was regarded in the N. Y. trade as curious since no successor to Schwartz in production had been firmed.

Schwartz has a new and bigger title and, significantly, has given an extended employment contract. He has a wealth of experience in all departments and this will prove "invaluable" in his new global post, stated Col president Abe Schneider.

Leo Jaffe, exec v.p., commented that Schwartz will join Schneider, first v.p. Mike J. Frankovich and himself (Jaffe) in "supervising the activities of the company throughout the world."

As of the present some questions remained unanswered. Like why the sudden change and who's to take over at the Hollywood studio. Frankovich is the first in mind (among insiders) but there's a question as to whether he would want to move from his London base. Also a question as to whether his wife, actress nee Binnie Barnes, would resist such a change in venue, to use the British term.

From those within the two-way word as to Col's new production head is: "Maybe someone from inside or someone from outside." Frankovich, due in New York this week, presumably will have a lot to say about it.

It is expected that before Mike J. Frankovich, first vicepresident of Columbia Pictures, leaves for Hong-Kong and Camobodia with Richard Brooks to tee off the filmization of "Lord Jim" on location there, he will firm his taking over as production head of the Col studios in Hollywood. Meantime Sol A. Schwartz's timetable move back to New York as senior vicepresident (in the spot held by the late Abe Montague) is flexible. And until Frankovich and his wife, the former Binnie Barnes, herself a prominent actress before retirement, shift their headquarters from London to Hollywood, Schwartz can either stay on or commute from N.Y. to L.A. and thus continue supervising the studio.

Frankovich will probably take

Buena Vista will celebrate its 10th anniversary as the Walt Disney organization's distribution subsidiary with a sales convention at the Disney studio in Burbank Oct. 14-17.

Cristaldi Deal Gives Continental 8 Italo Films on '64 Total Sked Of 13; Reade Opening Rome Office

Finns Susceptible, Too

Helsinki, Oct. 8.

"Cleopatra," which had its European premiere July 31 in London, has its second European opening here Friday (11) at the Bristol Theatre.

The 20th-Fox spec has already been sold out for the first four nights. Additionally, tickets are selling four weeks in advance, an innovation in Finnish exhibition.

Walter Reade-Sterling, whose theatrical releasing arm (Continental Distributing) has heretofore concentrated on the importation of British and, to a lesser extent, French product, has just concluded a deal with Italo producer Franco Cristaldi for seven pix. These, in addition to its previously disclosed acquisition of Dino De Laurentiis' "The Devil," will mean that Continental's 1964 release lineup will include eight Italo films out of the presently set 1964 schedule of 13 films.

Revelation of the Cristaldi deal, said to involve between $1,500,000 and $2,000,000, came to a New York press luncheon Monday (7) by R-S chairman Walter Reade Jr. He also announced that R-S, which already has its own offices in London and Paris, will shortly open an office in Rome, for the overseeing of R-S production interests in Italy, as well as for the selling of its own pix in Italy and in Near and Far Eastern markets which can't be serviced out of New York.

Reade will supervise the setting up of the new Rome office on his upcoming trip abroad. The R-S chairman, along with Continental prexy Irving Wormser and indie producer Lester Cowan leave N.Y. Saturday (12) to go to Moscow to wind up preparations for "Meeting at A Far Meridian," the first Soviet-American coproduction, which Cowan is producing with R-S backing. According to Reade, that pic is now due to start production next May or June, with a 1965 release tentatively set.

Additionally, Reade, who was in Moscow this summer for the festival, revealed that his company is negotiating with the Russians re

Rumbles In Spain Hint Cut Coming On Dub Licenses

Madrid, Oct. 8.

Film observers are trying to determine whether full-fledged efforts are afoot to reduce the number of dubbing licences now conceded for foreign film imports.

Alert positions were taken when Farre de Calzadilla, chief of the Sindicato del Espectaculo — Spain's all-embracing entertainment union—went on record favoring restriction of dubbing privileges as one means of fostering public support and market benefits for native film product.

Stand taken by Sindicato chief is in contrast to government film authority sanction lifting Yank imports (for dubbed exploitation) from 88 last year to 105 for the current season, but it represents a significant first time that a leading authority—Sindicato or government—has publicly expressed a negative attitude toward dubbed film imports.

In his interview with film critic and commentator Garcia de la Puerta, the Sindicato topper also stated that government control to provide public information on cinema box office returns was indispensable to the best interests of the film industry and that such control was inevitably in the cards for the future.

Minn. Evidence Cheers; Say Exhibitor Leaders: 'Got Television Licked'

Minneapolis, Oct. 8.

Unusual here for so many pictures to simultaneously achieve long runs at the moment the emotionally-variable exhibitor leaders gloat "we've licked television" and add increased entertainment competition, including big league baseball, "can't hold us down."

"How West Was Won" (MGM) is in its 32nd week, "Cleopatra" (20th) in its 16th, "Irma La Douce" in its 14th and "Thrill Of It All" (U) its 12th. One other holdover, "Great Escape" (UA), has moved from the loop to uptown to continue a firstrun into a ninth week.

It's being pointed out in local film circles that even in "the good old pre-television days" it was considered terrific if even a single screen attraction could hold up so long here as the aforementioned five are doing.

In this connection, too, it's further pointed out that the local public is showing itself perfectly willing to shell out larger amounts of money for pictures it wants to see—the admission scales are so much higher than in the pre-tv days. There's a $3.50 top for one current film, $2.50 for another and $1.50 otherwise.

Latest Film Fest: Ethnic Themes

Event in Florence to Include Expedition on Which Michael Rockefeller Died—Many U. S. Entries

Florence, Oct. 8.

An International Ethnological and Sociological Film Festival will take place in Florence next Jan. 20-26. Set to unreel as a world premiere is "Dead Birds," by Professor Gardner of the Film Study Center of Harvard. Footage was taken in Dutch New Guinea in 1961. Among the photographers of this group was Michael Rockefeller, late son of N.Y.'s Governor, who was lost there two months after completion of the film.

Other U. S. entries are Richard Leacock's "Pete and Johnnie," "Davy" and "Toby" as well as "Jane" in collaboration with Don Pennebacker and "Bernstein in Israel." "Crisis" deals with Alabama racism and incorporates a phone conversation between President Kennedy and Governor Wallace.

Belgium will present a series with the general title "Ce Pain Quotidien" (This Daily Bread) by Paul Meyers and France has decided upon "Le Monde Demain" (World Tomorrow) "La Croisee des Chemins" (Cross-roads).

FEATURE FILM ON DODGERS

Ex-Movietone's Arthur DeTitta As Producer

Hollywood, Oct. 8.

CinemaScope feature on the World Series between Dodgers and Yankees will be made for 20th's Movietonews Digest, with Arthur DeTitta, former Coast chief of Movietonews, handling producer reins.

Lensers Irby Koverman and Jess Kizis did Dodger Stadium footage here.

In the Know With Poe & Bikini Kids, AIP Needs No Other Line of Credit

By VINCENT CANBY

"Dear Edgar Allan Poe (wherever you are). There are a couple of guys out in California who'd like to make contact with you. They're interested in having you do an original script for them. They won't pay too much, but, let's face it, it'll be more than they paid you for past services. Right? Right.

"As they envision this story, it takes place on a beach where these cute, fresh-faced kids are all the time a-twistin' and a-surfin,' like southern California, and on a high bluff overlooking this beach there's a castle (a White Castle, perhaps), run by a mad doctor who looks like Vincent Price and his demented short order cook (who else, but Peter Lorre?)

"One afternoon, this terrible storm comes up and the kids w,ho have no place to change from their wet bikinis (into dry bikinis, of course), decide to go up to the castle. They knock on the door, and . . . well, you could take it from there . . ."

Anything Possible

American International Pictures prez Jim Nicholson and exec veep Sam Arkoff, who have a couple of money-making formulas going for them at the present time, haven't as yet tried to combine those formulas (the Poe cycle and the teenage surfside musical type), but it's not inconceivable it won't happen in the future.

In New York last week where they received the company progress award from the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers (see separate story), Nicholson and Arkoff indicated they knew when they had some good things and were not about to throw them away.

Giving a breakdown on their six Poe pix to date, they revealed the pix have grossed domestic rentals of approximately $8,000,000 on total negative investment of an estimated $3,000,000. In addition, the

Esthetics No Substitutes for Plot

Paris, Oct. 8.

This is sensational, coming from the onetime archdeacon of the "New Wave" movement. Says director Jean-Paul Melville:

The public insists upon understanding. Esthetics is no substitute for plot. Intellectual pretention is selfdeluding for directors or writers who expect to make a living by selling tickets to their experiments that only they and their coteries "understand" and can't even explain in the reviews they write about one another.

BLAKE EDWARDS MAKES LIKE DYNAMIC TYPE

Call Blake Edwards a very active producer-director. Having just completed a project, he has made two deals within the past few weeks and has yet another pic on back-burner. All to roll within the next few months.

Most of his activities are in connection with the Mirisch Co. for whom he completed "Pink Panther," curently being screened for exhibs and other tradesters. Edwards gets Mirisch original, "What Did You Do in the War, Daddy?" to handle. Then, last week he was called in by the same outfit to replace the ailing Anatole Litvak as producer-director of "Shot in the Dark." He's in London now preparing for the latter, which will star Sophia Loren, Peter Sellers and Walter Matthau.

Away from the Mirisch operation, Edwards has just finished "Soldier in the Rain" for Allied Artists. He is also skedded to make "The Great Race" for Warner Bros. early in 1964. "Shot" is due for the camera early in November and then he goes right into "Race," followed immediately by "Daddy." Put 'em all together and they spell lotsa activity for the young filmmaker.

Britain Soon May Get Co-Prod. Pix

London, Oct. 8.

At long last the British government is about to start negotiating coproduction treaties with major European film producing nations. The first treaty is likely to be with Italy, and a second with France is expected to follow shortly thereafter.

Several years have passed since Britain's two film producing associations got together to urge the government, through the Board of Trade, to give British filmmakers a chance to operate in the same way as those on the Continent. The intra-industry talks went on and on, with the unions demanding safeguards which the producers considered to be unreasonable.

At the beginning of the year the ball was passed to the BOT, and there have since been off-the-record discussions between the film experts in that department and the various sections of the industry who would be directly affected by the outcome.

The decision to begin government-to government negotiations this month is welcomed by the producers, even though it is expected the inital treaties will be for a trial run, with coproductions limited to just a handful of pictures a year.

From the producers' viewpoint, coproduction treaties have many obvious advantages, which are particularly attractive at a time when domestic production is faced with financial hazards, mainly caused through restriction of theatre outlets.

Films made on a partnership basis with another European company would have joint financing, which would limit the investment of the British partner, but would still qualify for the Film Quota in either country.

An Anglo-Italo film for example, would be eligible for Eady coin in Britain and for film aid in Italy, thus getting the best of both possible subsidies. It would also have the merit of making British performers better known across the Channel; and would, naturally, perform a similar function for Continental players.

Robert L. Joseph Readying A Second Pic in Britain

London, Oct. 8.

Robert L. Joseph, the Broadway impresario who made his first film with "The Third Secret," now completed in Britain for 20th-Fox, is planning a second feature, next a comedy, tentatively titled "The Man who Discovered Midnight." While supervising editing and dubbing of his first film, Joseph will be taking a number of quick trips out of London for background and atmosphere while he writes the new screenplay. The picture will have settings in Rome, Paris, London and New York.

Trade Still Lagging; 'V.I.P.s' Again on Top, 'Cleo' 2d, 'West' 3d, 'Cool' 4th, 'Irma' 5th

Lack of enough new, strong product to go around is putting the brakes on the boxoffice in key cities covered by VARIETY this session. Distraction of the World's Series also is rated a downbeat factor, with some hot Indian Summer readings not helpful.

Still in first place by a wide margin is "V.I.P.s" (MGM) (3d wk) for second week in a row. It is playing in some 24 keys. "Cleopatra" (20th) (16th wk) again is finishing second, as last week.

Again capturing third money is "How West Was Won" (43d wk), also third a week ago. "Johnny Cool" (UA) (2d wk), comparatively new, is winding up fourth.

"Irma La Douce" (UA) (18th wk) is copping fifth position. "Lawrence of Arabia" (Col) (39th wk) is taking sixth spot. "In French Style" (Col) (3d wk), which was sixth last round, will be seventh.

"Women of World" (Embassy) (15th wk) is finishing eighth although playing in few spots. "The Leopard" (20th) (8th wk) will be ninth while "Lord of Flies" (Cont) (4th wk) rounds out the Top 10 films.

"Wives and Lovers" (Par), "Sporting Life" (Cont), "Caretakers" (UA) and "Haunting" (MGM) are the runnerup pix in that sequence.

"New Kind of Love" (Par) shapes as a standout newcomer. It is lusty in Toronto, good in Detroit, lofty in L.A. and okay in Frisco. "Lillies of Field" (UA), also new, is big in N.Y. and socko in Denver. "Rampage" (WB), another newie, is rated okay in St. Louis.

"Wuthering Heights" (Cont), back for some additional playdates, looks great on its N.Y. firstrun engagement. "Promises, Promises" (Indie), another new entrant, looks big in Washington and great in Denver.

"Stolen Hours" (UA), okay in Cincy and Minneapolis, shapes hotsy in Boston. "20,000 Leagues Under Sea" (BV), back on reissue, looms lusty in Detroit, brisk in Chi and okay in Hub.

"Haunted Palace" (AI) is rated good in Frisco. "Condemned of Altona" (20th) has some six or seven playdates this week but most of them are fair to mild or lightweight.

"8½" (Embassy) is adding several profitable playdates this round though in only three cities. "Love or Money" (U), okay in Hub, looks big in Chi.

Note: The number of weeks out in release for bigger and longrun pix are designated in such cases.

This October starts the seventh year of operation for the Mirisches. Indie company is heading into the new term with six films skedded for the next six months with a combined budget estimated at over $17,000,000. This climaxes production activity in the company's short history.

During the first six years, the Mirisch Co. made a total of 23 pix, all for United Artists release. The combined cost of these films was $55,000,000, with projected world gross expected of close to $170,000,000 on their initial theatrical releases. Included in output have been two "best picture" Oscar winners, "The Apartment" and "West Side Story."

In addition to the six films ready to roll, there are seven further properties in pre-production stages, skedded for lensing late in 1964 and into 1965. Also, four films are currently being scored and edited with release planned within the next few months and the company currently has three items making the rounds in "Irma La Douce," "The Great Escape" and "Toys in the Attic."

The six which are about to start include "Shot in the Dark," "The Satan Bug," "Bandoola," "The Confessor," "Dazzling Hour" and "Return From the Ashes." Among the seven on the drawing boards are "The Hallelujah Train," "The Law and Tombstone," "What Did You Do in the War, Daddy?", "The Private Life of Sherlock Holmes," "A Rage to Live," "A Garden of Cucumbers" and "Hawaii." Completed and being readied for release are "Stolen Hours," "Kings of the Sun," "Pink Panther" and "633 Squadron."

Additionally, the Mirisch Corp. has pacts which will yield other product from such producer-directors as Billy Wilder, William Wyler, Fred Zinnemann, John Sturges, Robert Wise, Blake Edwards, John Frankenheimer, J. Lee Thompson, Ronald Neame and Richard Quine, many of whom are involved with the above projects. There are also pacts with writer-producer George Axelrod, directors George Roy Hill, Norman Jewison and Walter Grauman and numerous performers including Shirley MacLaine, 'Yul Brynner, James Garner, Geraldine Page, George Chakiris and Pamela Tiffin.

Peace Film Festival at Los Alamos

A-Bomb Town's Enterprise—But Visitors Must Stay In Santa Fe, 30 Miles Away

By CHUCK MITTLESTADT

Albuquerque, Oct. 8.

This Thursday (10) is deadline entrie in the first International Peace Film Festival, skedded Nov. 9-11 in the New Mexico atomic city of Los Alamos. Such is the word from fest director Robert W. Kunce, who is also a theatre operator in Los Alamos, and dreamed the whole idea up last summer.

He reported that four films—three of them from foreign countries—have already been entered in the event, the first pix ever held in the state.

Kunce said no monetary prizes would be awarded, although a number of trophies will be awarded to top placers in the three-day peace pix parley. Top award will be the International Peace Grand Award. Lesser honors will go to top pic, actor, actress, etc.

Kunce convinced Los Alamos clubs and business leaders that the festival would be good for the community, and also for the cause of world peace. Especially so, and rather ironically, too, since Los Alamos was the birthplace of the first Atomic Bomb.

Community, however, is now steering most of its energy toward peaceful uses of atomic energy, and Kunce feels this festival ties in with that overall program.

Kunce, along with Kerry Holmes, assistant manager of a Los Alamos bank—and treasurer of the festival, set up a budget of $10,000 for the thing. He reports about 90% of that total has been raised through donations and pledges.

There's one catch to the whole thing, however. Los Alamos does not have facilities for large delegations, and visitors for the festival will have to stay in Santa Fe, (30 miles away) and commute daily to the events.

Brandon DeWilde's Mishap

Jeffersonville, Vt., Oct. 8.

Brandon DeWilde, now 22, with new Walt Disney film being filmed here, suffered some loosened teeth and a cracked knuckle in an automobile accident on the Mountain road. His stand-in, George Bishop, 25, of Lake Placid, N. Y., received knee and head bruises when he hit and broke the windshield of the car.

DeWilde and the Disney crew recently returned to this area for fall foliage scenes for the forthcoming full-length film. Earlier scenes were shot in the same locality last winter.

Re-Team Hudson & Day

UK Wins Edge Over Yanks In Pix Payments

London, Oct. 8.

Balance of payments between Britain and the U.S. for motion pictures is slightly in favor of the United Kingdom—on paper, at any rate. Latest returns for 1962 by the Board of Trade reveal that Britain collected $29,654,800 from the North American market and only paid out $27,879,600. Annual earnings of British pix in the U.S. market, however, were a mere $2,489,200.

The returns indicate a drastic drop in Yank earnings for British films, which, in 1961, amounted to $5,154,800 from North America alone, and $14,333,200 worldwide. This world figure for 1962 was down to $11,309,200.

Payments for foreign films in 1962 totalled $29,117,200, with the overwhelming majority going to North America, the U.S. share being $27,879,600. The only other sizeable earner was Western Europe, with $1,223,600. Latin-America collected a puny $2,800 and other non-sterling areas between them just $8,400.

Part of the money paid to the U.S. included earnings of British films financed by American companies. The total received from the U.S. included cash made available for production in Britain, though in many cases represents a bookkeeping transaction only between the British subsidiary and the American parent company.

According to the BOT statistics, Western Europe was the most important market for British films in 1962, yielding a total of $4,807,600 against $3,838,800 the previous year. The overseas sterling area was runnerup, with $2,567,600, a drop from the previous year; Latin-America yielded $680,400 and other non-sterling territories $764,400. The total of $1,223,600 paid out to Western Europe was somewhat inflated by including the cost of British location units sent to the Continent.

Kramer's Role in Promo

Local showings for Stanley Kramer's Cinerama comedy, "It's a Mad, Mad, Mad, Mad World," have been set for Chicago and Boston. Producer-director took part in special announcement promotions with press and radio-tv reps from those cities last Thursday (26).

"Mad World" will have its gala preems Nov. 19 at McVickers Cinerama, Chi, and the Boston Cinerama in that city. To focus on openings, special press conferences were held in each city, with telephone conference call hookups between the confabs and Kramer in Hollywood. In Boston, the session was held at the Ritz Carlton Hotel and in Chicago, special personal individual calls were set up between the producer-director and the press.

RIGID U. S. RULES VS. FRENCH TREND

With the exception of the Jerry Lewis films and an occasional sequence in a Billy Wilder production or a Doris Day comedy, Hollywood seems to have abandoned the old sight gag type of film in favor of the sophisticated dialog comedy.

Point was made in New York last week by French producer Paul Claudon, whose "The Suitor" (Le Soupirant), now in its U. S. preem engagement at the Beekman Theatre, won unanimous newspaper and national mag raves this side.

The film, written and directed by Pierre Etaix, who also stars in it, is in the tradition of Chaplin, Keaton, Lloyd, et al., as well as of such French contemporaries as Jacques Tati and Robert Dhery. To producer Claudon, it is ironic that Hollywood, which pioneered this kind of comedy, should have almost totally abandoned the field to the Johnny-come-lately French.

One problem acknowledged by the producer was the cost of making such comedies. Since so much depends on improvisation and/or the perfect timing of elaborate visual effects, such pix may require much longer shooting skeds than are needed for more conventional films. Tati, he noted, is a notoriously slow worker, and Etaix took 14 weeks to shoot "The Suitor," against the more usual eight-week sked.

Union Crimp

Without union cooperation, which allows for an extremely flexible hiring agreement, these comedies could not be made for reasonable budgets. As it was, reported Claudon, "The Suitor" came in for $200,000, which was "just about right." Etaix had also kept costs down by staying away from "name" talent. In fact, explained the producer, Etaix had not only stayed away from "names," but approximately half the cast was made up of non-pros.

This wasn't entirely due to a tight budget, however, Caludon added, since Etaix also feels that known actors might detract from the comic impact of the situations.

Although "The Suitor" is Etaix' first feature, he also made two shorts for the producer, the second of which, "Happy Anniversary," won an Oscar this year. "Anniversary," as well as "The Suitor" are being released in the U. S. by Wilshire International, which has just acquired U. S. rights to the first Etaix-Claudon short, "Rupture." Latter will not be put into release until "Suitor" has been given national release.

Claudon has a three-feature deal with Etaix, with the second pic now in preparation. A production start for next May is projected.

Producer recounted the difficulty in securing of financing for "The Suitor," because "it's practically impossible to visualize the finished film from a script outline." He finally supplemented the $50,000 advance he obtained from the government by $150,000 from private sources. It required a certain amount of faith on the part of the investors, since all they had to go on was the script outline, which wasn't terribly funny to read, and the knowledge of what Etaix and Claudon had done in their two short productions.

Investor faith was subsequently redeemed when pic turned into the third biggest French pic of the Parisian season (according to attendance statistics published by Film Francaise. Pic was in the black prior to its U. S. preem.

Reuben Kaufman's Colorama Role; Problems Not Yet Solved; Italians Interested, Also George F. Foley

By EDDIE KALISH

Reuben Kaufman of Jayark Films is herewith identified as the mystery party in the complicated fiscalities of Colorama Features Co. Could be that if the incredible maze of interests, angles and claims in this situation are untangled the man doing so will be Kaufman The prior chapters in the tangled tale have been set forth in a number of earlier issues of this periodical.

Kaufman says that he's "trying to be helpful." What this means apparently is that he's giving both advice and cash to the ailing operation because, as he puts it, "I don't want to see a company go down the drain and I don't see why Colorama should." For the present, however, he's not interest in taking over the company but that doesn't detract from the possibility of some future "relationship," as he puts it.

He expressed the opinion when contacted about the situation that the Colorama situation would get straightened out. In a statement which might turn out to mean more than it seems on the surface, he added: "everybody will get what's coming to them."

The interests of several parties are involved in the Colorama maze, including present and former execs of the company and a list of creditors ranging from individuals to laboratories to investment companies to others. The principals in the matter continue to be Herbert G. Stevenson whose Telac Ltd. of Canada still owns 51% of Colorama, Carroll Puciato former copartner in the operation who sold his interests to Stevenson and still has some coin coming on that deal, Jules Weill who was Puciato's partner and still owns 25% of the company although he resigned as prez a while back, new president

U.S. & Europeans Oppose Mexican Lab Favoritism

Mexico City, Oct. 8.

Ortiz Mena, Mexico's Secretary of Commerce and Industry, issued an edict following settlement of the Producers-Technicians film strike requiring that all prints shown in Mexican film theatres would be processed in Mexican laboratories. Effect was to require a single negative being sent in, instead of multiple prints. Immediate result is a delay in processing as labs were closed for over a month by the strike.

Move has been made to hypo Mexico's crisis ridden and paralyzed film industry.

Reaction from foreign film companies was immediate and drastic. Claiming that the move was discriminatory they filed, through the Camera Cinemotografia, (Film Chamber of Commerce) sought a petition for a permanent injunction. Effect of the filing is to nullify the edict until court decision is rendered.

New York and European distributors state that they felt that the labs in their own countries would be justified in retaliating against Mexican product if the edict became effective. This would work to the ultimate detriment of industry here. U.S.A. rentals of Mexican features run to $3,000,000 (U. S.) annually.

Complaint is also heard against quality and independable deadlines of Mexican labs.

Never Heard of 'Freud'; Re-titled, U's Biopic of Headshrinker Does OK

Minneapolis, Oct. 8.

The local downtown two-week firstrun of "Freud" (U) proved to be such a boxoffice letdown that all the subsequent-run neighborhood houses here passed it up. Exhibs said that too many of their potential patrons were unacquainted with the discovery of psychoanalysis and the title was detrimental to business.

But it's a different story here now that its distributor smartly changed the title to "Secret Passion." The nabe houses have started to book it and, what's more, to their surprise it's drawing exceedingly well for them.

The picture came back first under its present name to the Uptown, local nabe, and earned such a nifty gross that similar nabe houses fell in line.

Needed Brodsky & Weiss

Washington, Oct. 8.

Washington Daily News dug up the statistics from someone.

The paper said that when President and Mrs. John F. Kennedy landed in Mexico City in June 1962, reporters filed 75,000 words describing it, but when Liz Taylor and Richard Burton arrived recently, correspondents sent out 92,000 words.

LIGHTSTONE BACK WITH MUCH EMBASSY PLAYOFF

Leonard Lightstone, recently back from a three-week trip abroad, bought distribution deals totaling $1,400,000 in minimum guarantees completed for the marketing of Embassy Pictures product in various foreign marts.

In Greece he closed a deal for the distribution of eight features. These include the Joe Levine-Carlo Ponti coproductions "Empty Canvas," "Ghost at Noon," "Yesterday, Today and Tomorrow" and "Casanova," as well as "Boccaccio '70," "Face in the Rain," "Light Fantastic" and "Stranger in the City."

Holland will be seeing the Ponti pix, "Bluebeard" (nee "Landru"), "Long Day's Journey Into Night," "Three Penny Opera" and "Conjugal Bed." A deal was also made in Germany for the distribution of the Ponti films, "Long Day's Journey," "Bluebeard," "Face," "Fantastic" and "Stranger."

Don't Be a Snob, Dear

In a letter to the N.Y. Times released recently, Ralph Hetzel, acting head of the Motion Picture Assn. of America, takes sharp exception to an editorial published in that paper Sept. 10 criticizing American films for their lack of artistry and intellectual content.

Hetzel declared the Times editorial expresses "a stereotype about American pictures which does not accord with the facts." Noting that we s[illegible] only the best of all foreign product in the U.S., he said that while there are many run-of-the-mill American features, our producers "turn out as high a percentage of quality films as any country in the world." Exec lists a number of titles and winds: "A few years ago there was a certain snob appeal in some circles when the remark was made, 'I never see American films.' Such a statement today can only reflect a narrow and uninformed criticism."

Under The Yum Yum Tree

Jack Lemmon's tour-de-farce highlights one-joke sex story. Content meagre but has enough bait to insure b.o. success.

There are apt to be two basic types of reaction to Columbia's screen version of "Under the Yum Yum Tree." To the filmgoer who approaches the theatre as an emotional escape valve, it should seem an easy to enjoy and comfortably glamorous diversion. Sophisticated pick-and-choosers, on the other hand, are likely to regard it as an overextended and exaggerated one-joke farce obsessed with sex not as it is but in its ersatz screen state—where everyone talks about it and frets over it but no one is ever grown-up enough to do anything about it.

Although this mixed response won't bentfit, the Frederick Brisson production appears to be endowed with sufficient commercial horsepower to survive any negative onslaught and emerge a successful enterprise.

The Lawrence Roman-David Swift screen version of Roman's hit stage play is concerned with an experiment wherein two young people in love (Carol Lynley and Dean Jones) agree to determine their "character compatibility" prior to marriage by living together platonically. The project is complicated by the intrusion of the lecherous landlord (Jack Lemmon) of the apartment building in which they have chosen to reside. Virtue triumphs after a rather repetitious series of incidents in which the landlord, in hopes of eventually seducing his new female tenant just as he has her predecessors, pretends to aid her boy friend in his feverish attempts to keep the intimate relationship platonic.

As engineered by director Swift, the film's cardinal error is its lack of restraint. There is a tendency to embellish, out of all proportion, devices and situations that, kept simple, would have served the comic purposes far more effectively. For example, having every apartment in the building occupied by sexpots taxes the plausibility of Lemmon's preoccupation with his conquest of Miss Lynley.

Exaggeration has also spilled over into the areas of production design (Dale Hennesy) and set decoration (William Kiernan). Having Lemmon's apartment fully equipped for romantic pursuits is one thing, but some of the props, notably a pair of pop-up, mechanical violins, strain credulity more than the sight gags are worth, and are resorted to too frequently.

For Lemmon, the role of the amorous landlord is a tour-de-farce, and he plays it to the hilt, but after awhile the character begins to get a bit tedious in spite of Lemmon's comic exuberance. Miss Lynley is a visual asset and does a satisfactory job as the somewhat ingenuous ingenue. Jones, who played the rather gullible boy friend on Broadway, effectively repeats his characterization on screen.

Imogene Coca and Paul Lynde register in comedy support, and Edie Adams and Robert Lansing in straighter assignments. Balance of support is adequate. Perhaps the best performance in the film is contributed by the curious and acrobatic feline that follows Lemmon around. This cat should win the PATSY, paws down.

Joseph Biroc's camera work is proficient, as is Charles Nelson's editing. There is a sprightly score by Frank DeVol and a rather conventional but serviceable title ditty by Sammy Cahn and James Van Heusen that, sung by James Darren over the main titles, has to vie for the audience's attention with a bit of sexy choreography conceived by Robert Tucker.

"Johnny Cool" should be a hot property in the "butcher" market, where zippy action and beaucoup mayhem are the first requirements. Peter Lawford's indie production has enough of both to give UA an exploitable natural.

The heavy accent on violence and murder—and the only "way out" this one overlooks is old age—should please those filmgoers who dote on destruction, whereas more critical viewers may wish that a bit more care had been exercised in casting and writing. "Johnny Cool" is not the type of man that children (and a lot of adults) should meet—but they probably will.

Henry Silva, as a Sicilian-born assassin, is at home as the "delivery boy of death" for deported underworld kingpin Marc Lawrence. While his escapades would probably fall apart if analyzed, he puts such driving force into them that the viewer becomes too involved to dispute his actions. It's a pleasure to watch this actor move.

Elizabeth Montgomery, however, plays the emotionally and morally mixed-up heroine like a high school drama teacher demonstrating to her class how to play a nymphomaniac—10% sex, 90% self-consciousness.

Joseph Landon's script has more holes in it than a Swiss cheese but he stuffs most of them with action and director William Asher cuts the action in thick slices. Plot centers on Silva's doing a job for Lawrence which takes him from Sicily to Rome, then to N. Y., L. A. and Las Vegas before he's finished. When a doll comes into his life and gets worked over by some hoods, he adds revenge to his baser reasons for wiping out his assorted victims. They include Jim Backus, John McGiver, Mort Sahl, Brad Dexter and Telly Savalas, plus a pair of hoods who raped Miss Montgomery. Ironically, she's the one who puts the finger on him and pic ends with Savalas' gang making plans for Silva's future. But that's another story.

Excellent performances are turned in by Savalas, Gregory Morton, Lawrence and Backus. Sammy Davis Jr. has a first-rate vignette during a crap game sequence in which he throws some remarkable points with Silva's gun against his head. Joey Bishop eases the tension in a quick scene as a used-car salesman.

Sam Levitt's b & w photography does a good job of catching the many story backgrounds and unifying them. Otto Ludwig's intelligent editing is a big help in keeping the tale of vendetta sharp and exciting. The one big drawback in attracting the general market is the pic's high mortality rate and gruesome detailed violence.

Billy May's music has a pleasant, urbane style. Jimmy Van Heusen and Sammy Cahn's title tune, sung by Davis, is a swinging narrative of the "High Noon" school.

U.S. Legion-Type Cinema 'Pledges' Kayoed by Irish

Dublin, Oct. 8.

Proposed pledge to be exacted of parishioners here on lines of U. S. Legion of Decency pledge has been dropped. Project started in Limerick, spearheaded by priest, and pledged forms were prepared but the scheme has been quietly dropped without explanation.

Pledge would have bound signatories to abide by National Film Institute ratings although Institute's name was not mentioned.

Institute's ratings have sparked off a row in Clonmel, County Tipperary, where the town's cinemas, owned by Amalgamated Cinemas (Ireland), have withdrawn advertising from local newspaper "The Nationalist" because paper publishes ratings of current screenings each week. Newspaper has published exchange of correspondence with cinema owners and announced its intention of continuing to published ratings when available. Cinemas have also withdrawn orders for display bills from printinghouse associated with "The Nationalist."

Jack L. Warner, named "Man of the Year" by the Beverly Hills B'nai B'rith lodge, will receive the award in January at a testimonial dinner-dance.

New York Sound Track

Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy will be on the dais at Joe Levine's Americana Hotel bash during the upcoming Theatre Owners of America convention, presumably to say a few words to gathered exhibs . . . UA v.p. James R. Velde and the company's midwestern division manager Al Fitter will hold a two-day sales meeting in Dallas today (Wed.) and tomorrow . . . John Downing, Embassy exchange operations manager, in Los Angeles on biz . . . Eugene Lourie inked as art director for "Iron Kiss". . . Penny Singleton signed for "Best Man."

Success of John Osborne's legit "Luther" has apparently stimulated interest in a revival of the Louis de Rochemont Associates film production, "Martin Luther," which has been booked by two Reade-Sterling houses, the Little Neck, in Little Neck, and the Continental, in Forest Hills. Pic is now being distributed by Barney Pitkin Associates in conjunction with Lutheran Film Associates.

Gordon Hitchens, the film buff turned producer, was stricken in Africa with a case of meningitis just as he was about to fly back to U.S. after shooting a USIA film there. Resultantly he spent time first in a native hospital and then in New York Hospital and was delayed on his editing of the African footage. He is now at work again and leaves later this week for the shorts fest at Mannheim, Germany, to which he is a U.S. delegate.

Dino De Laurentiis opened an office on Fifth Ave., with Ralph Serpe as his rep and Arthur Manson as ad-pub director. Not yet firmed is the De Laurentiis deal with Columbia for "The Bible" multi-million dollar special. Col and the Italian producer have seen eye to eye so far, and have gotten along together in past . . . But, isn't it so, that Col, while contributing to the financing, would like to have a stronger hold on the costs? There's been no genuine rhubarb because of the mutual respect angles. Latest wrinkle is that De Laurentiis wants to place the entire project in the hands of John Huston, as director, working from the Christopher Fry screenplay. There was a time when Dino thought the project good for three features, and a multiplicity of directors.

Robert Morse left the cast of "How to Succeed in Business Without Really Trying" and reports to Culver City (MGM) today (Wed.) for "His and His." Robert Goulet also at the same unit . . . Michael Havas, MGM studio managing director in Britain, who had been visiting here, went to the studio in the west with Red Silverstein, MGM International prez. Havas and his wife will return to London via Mexico following the studio onceover . . . James Garner in N.Y. for "Wheeler Dealer" promotion talkabout.

Joseph E. Levine, Leonard Lightstone and Bill Zimmerman all in Europe working on deals for Embassy, the former two having left today (Wed.) and the latter having planed out yesterday (Tues.). Lighthouse, incidentally, just returned from a few weeks of business and pleasure abroad . . . Carlo Ponti also back to Rome late last week after Gotham huddles with Embassy execs.

James E. Perkins, prez of Paramount International Films; Charles Boasberg, Par Film Distributing Corp. prez, and ad-pub v.p. Martin Davis planed to London yesterday (Tues.) to meet with Hal Wallis and partner Joseph H. Hazen for a screening and discussion re the plans for "Becket". . . Fred Wiseman, who recently completed "Cool World," has purchased the rights to Alan Harrington's novel "The Revelations of Dr. Modesto," with production slated to begin in April, 1964.

The Spanish language theatres here have all the luck. Number One Argentine sexpot Isabel Sarli has just wound a New York p.a. and returned (with producer Armando Bo) to Buenos Aires. This week Libertad Leblanc, who is fast giving Miss Sarli a run for her bikini, arrives to tubthump, as they say en espanol . . . Meanwhile, Orestes Trucco, head of the local Argentine Film Enterprises and who produced Miss Leblanc's latest pic, is planning a second film with the blonde star which goes into production in B.A. next month. Just back from Argentina, Trucco brought with him a print of Fernando Birri's praised "Los Inundados" for showing to local distribs.

Former 20th-Fox veep S. Charles Einfeld in San Francisco this week at the invitation of the San Francisco Arts Commission and Frisco film fest director Irv Levine, for talks re the fest which get underway at the end of the month . . . Munio Podhorser, head of Casino Films and United Film Enterprises, off on a three-week trip to Munich, Paris and Madrid.

Industry vet Arthur L. Mayer, who has another pungent piece in the current Saturday Review, and Mrs. Mayer off to Europe . . . A major company is reportedly trying to interest Ernie Pintoff in creating a new series of animated shorts for theatrical release. At the same time, the Canadian Broadcasting Corp. is negotiating for the rights to Pintoff's past and present shorts, including "The Old Man and The Flower," "Violinist," etc.

Times Film sales director Irving Sochin back from San Juan where he set plans for the Oct. 16 day-date preem there of the English and Spanish language versions of "Mondo Cane." This is the first Times Film release to be sold directly to the Puerto Rican market from the U. S. . . . The boys at the Bleecker Street Cinema are setting something of a precedent with their current triple bill of Phillipe de Broca pix, "The Love Game," "The Joker" and "The Five-Day Lover"—the first time the three films have shared the same bill.

Mervin LeRoy's newest film, Warners' "Mary, Mary," will be his 18th pic to play Radio City Music Hall . . . Kanawha's Polish import, "Knife in The Water," goes into the Beekman following "The Suitor."

Arthur L. Mayer, at the AMPA lunch last week, was reminiscing on the lunch last May in honor of his and Lilly's 50th anniversary. The lunch had run overtime, said Mayer, because Max Youngstein (then prez of the now-defunct Entertainment Corp. of America) had insisted on explaining "how-to-fail-safely." ECA, added Mayer, who was board chairman of the company, stood for "End Came Abruptly."

Peter Sellers back to England last week after completing his N.Y. chores in "World of Henry Orient". . . Jim Mauceri, Embassy Pix trade press contact, off for two weeks of holiday in Europe . . . John Mills and daughter Hayley Mills will costar in "Miss Jude," produced for Universal by Alan Brown, a former Spanish associate of Samuel Bronston, based on a novel by H. DeVere Stacpoole, set for filming next spring.

New York Mayor Robert F. Wagner will present the Variety Club Sunshine Club Coach for handicapped children next Monday (14), with acceptance to be made by Dr. Howard A. Rusk of N.Y.U.'s Institute of Physical Medicine and Rehabilitation . . . Ross Hunter's "Chalk Garden" (U) will be the first pic to be preemed under the auspices of the Women's Committee of the Hollywood Museum, sometime in mid-April.

Sam Fuller will roll his "Iron Kiss" next Monday (14) at Samuel Goldwyn Studio and the Columbia Ranch . . . Title of Universal's Marlon Brando-David Niven-Shirley Jones starrer "King of the Mountain" has been changed to "Bedtime Story". . . Baruch Lumet, father of director Sidney Lumet, set for a featured role in "The Pawnbroker" which the junior Lumet is directing for the Landau Co., with photography having begun last Monday (7) in Greenwich, Conn. Also inked for the pic is legit-tv actress Marianne Kanter.

Stanley Kramer back on the Coast after huddles in New York last week with UA execs re plans for release of his "It's a Mad, Mad, Mad, Mad World". . . Arthur Peterson and Charles Thompson into Kramer's "Invitation to a Gunfighter," along with Clifton James and Gertrude Flynn . . . ABC-TV news commentator Howard K. Smith will play himself in "Best Man". . . Walter Shenson planed to England over the weekend after Gotham meetings with UA execs over his next project.

Out-of-Towners Eager, So Allied Sets Open Forum on UA's 'Showcase'

United Artists' "Premiere Showcase" multi-house firstrun releasing plan will get special attention at the Allied States Assn. convention. Since its inception "Showcase" has drawn considerable interest and discussion throughout the industry. Hence an organized debate and forum on it the morning of Oct. 24 at the Americana Hotel, N. Y., convention headquarters.

Convention chairman Irving Dollinger reports keen theatre curiosity to know how system works. It has already been extensively emulated.

Dollinger stressed that the session would be an open forum for anyone interested. All are welcome to join the business session at which "Showcase" will be discussed, he said.

UA's showcase plan represented a radical departure from old methods of distribution and exhibition in that it calls for the ignoring of an initial Main Stem opening for pictures, putting them instead into a multiple break of several selected theatres. The company later modified this by the establishment of what it terms "Golden Showcase" through which "Irma La Douce" and "The Great Escape" have first been daydated in New York on Broadway and in an eastside house and later going onto a multiple break of selected houses while continuing on Broadway and the eastside.

AT EMBASSY HE IS FREE SOUL

"I think I'll be an old, old man before anything happens" was Joseph E. Levine's comment early this week regarding the talk of a deal between his Embassy Pictures and Paramount. "There have been talks but there have also been talks with another company and I don't see anything happening in the forseeable future," he said.

Levine acknowledged that there have been conversations with companies for the past three or four years but nothing took form. An executive gets the idea that he could be helpful to a company and

Hollywood, Oct. 8.

Joseph E. Levine confirmed his purchase of 5,000 shares of Paramount stock Thursday (3) with this remark: "I did it more or less as a joke. It has no significance." Joke or no joke—shares closed Thursday at 48¼, minus ½, but were up 1¼ Friday, giving Levine a paper profit of $5,000 (to round it out) and yesterday closed at 49.

Levine investment comes to a tidy $250,000 and makes him one of company's notable shareholders.

exploratory talks start. They remain only that.

True enough, Levine and Paramount have been very cozy of late with several coproduction deals. And also true is the Embassy boss' high opinion of Par Distribution prez Charles Boasberg. But these facts aren't enough, or don't appear to be at the present time, to put a merger into effect.

Another factor is control. This has been part of Levine's caution. It relates to the possibility of Embassy going public one day. A merger would complicate that.

Embassy, with all due respect to the other capable execs involved, is primarily a one-man decision operation, based on the dynamics of Levine. Whether Levine would care to give up this sweeping style of operation as a merger might require is another angle.

In the existing deals with Paramount, Levine is producer and gets a fee as such. But more important, Embassy is in control of the advertising and publicity of the product, the most imminent being "Carpetbaggers" and "Zulu." Other deals involve coproduction of "Where Love Has Gone" and "Nevada Smith." They are all being financed by Paramount but Levine has a pretty firm control of the projects.

Embassy is currently involved in considerable expansion plans, the capital for which must come from somewhere. But the merger route may not prove the path, according to Levine. He leaves the door open for some future possibility in his comments but the present seemingly doesn't hold such an action in the cards.

EXCESSIVE FEE SUIT HITS PAR ECHELON

Paramount stockholder suit seeking damages of $1,000,000 was filed in New York Federal Court yesterday (Tues.) by minority stockholder William Leighton. Individuals named in the action are Barney Balaban, president; Edwin L. Weisl, chairman of the exec committee, and board member Paul Manheim.

Leighton objects to expense money paid to Balaban and Weisl, along with fees, salaries and commissions, legal fees paid to Simpson, Thatcher & Bartlett, of which Weisl is a member, and the company's purchases of its own stock.

MCA-TV in Closed-Circuit Arena; Takes Rights to Indpls. Speedway

MCA-TV has come crashing in on the theatrical closed-circuit field with the acquisition of long-term production and distribution rights to live tv coverage for theatres of the annual Indianapolis automobile race. It takes effect with the next scheduled classic, May 30, 1964.

David A. (Sonny) Werblin, president of MCA-TV, said that if facilities become available the live pickup of the three hour and 20 minute contest could go to Europe and other global areas via Telstar.

But for the start the show is designed for domestic theatres and sports arenas, with the exception of those in a blocked-out area covering Indiana and perhaps some surrounding territory. Newsreel coverage for subsequent exposure is not to be affected. A possible subsidiary value for MCA could be in use of its race material in conjunction with commereial interests, such as automobile manufacturers.

MCA intends beaucoup closeup coverage with cameras placed lavishly around the speedway for the actual race and the pre-race trials.

While there was no further elaboration from Werblin, this movein on Indianapolis is generally taken to mean that MCA is looking to theatrical closed-circuit as a new and added area of operations.

Didactic Film Awards

Rome, Oct. 1.

United States ran off with a grand prize, a special jury award, and a special mention at the just-concluded First Vicenza Didactic Film Festival.

Grand Prix in the primary school grouping went to George Gordon's "Music, the Expressive Language," for its "clear definition of fundamental musical principles, exposed in pleasing fashion."

A special jury prize for lower school items went to another U.S.-made pic, Sy Wexler's "Human Growth," while a U.S.I.A. entry, "Teaching in Science," won a special jury mention in another category, that of "psychopedagogic" films.

Jury was made up of Italian, French, Czech, and U.S. members, Bernard E. Qubeck repping the last-named.

'Longest Day,' So Far, $25,275,000

Twentieth-Fox's "The Longest Day" has earned worldwide film rental to date of $25,275,000. In the estimate of 20th exec veep Seymour Poe, this is the greatest distributor's share of rental ever registered by a film in the first 12 months of its release. Film opened one year ago Thursday (10) at the Warner Theatre in New York, following a world preem in Paris.

Additionally, the Darryl F. Zanuck production is called the company's top moneymaker to date and the highest grossing black-and-white film in history.

No breakdown between domestic and overseas earnings are given.

NGC's Burton Holmes Lecturer-With-Film; Public's Travel Zest

Los Angeles, Oct. 8.

Further broadening its entertainment scope, National General Corp. has set the Burton Holmes lecture and travel series, in a new 35m presentation, in 56 of the company's theatres for the fall and winter season. Harold Wyatt, Long Beach-Orange County district manager, has been named project chairman for the special activity.

Holmes series, which launches today at the Academy, Inglewood, and Hermosa, Hermosa Beach, with "Italian Holiday," and at Glendale and L. A. Highland with "The Grand Tour—Europe in Your Own Car," originally was tried out last year with 16mm presentations in 11 National houses. Theatre operations veepee Robert W. Selig noted the tryout was "a tremendous success," leading to the expansion.

New project is tied to utilization by NGC of the new Concerts Inc. subsid, major buyers and bookers of live talent.

Selig pointed to the series as additional means of meeting "the severe peaks and valleys of product availability and a supplement to the usual film fare."

Academy Award winner Andre de la Varre is presenting lectures. Photographer also filmed "The Grand Tour." Also connected is Andre de la Varre Jr., diplomat and news commentator Robert Mallett and actor Mark Dana.

Out of state bookings for the films start Oct. 7.

Exit of Rowland Hill

Clogged Market Vexes Producers

London, Oct. 8.

British Film Producers Assn. (one of two filmmaker organizations here) has set Nov. 1 as firm date for a major huddle on the current difficulties of producers in securing early releases on either major theatre chain.

Association members will consider a separately-compiled report from indie members, plus additional evidence now being sought by secretary John Walton. Latter indicates that one of the important issues bound to be discussed at the meeting will be whether the British film industry is overproductive.

TECHNICOLOR NEARING TOWN PHOTOLAB DEAL

Town Photolab Inc., engaged in the consumer photo-finishing business, and listed on the American Stock Exchange, would be absorbed by Technicolor under a proposed deal tieing in with Techni's expansion plans. Terms, now being negotiated, would be subject to directorate approval at both companies and an okay by the stockholders of Town Photolab. Broad agreement so far calls for a stock swap amounting to about $2,600,000 to be paid to Photolab.

Photolab is based in Mount Vernon, N.Y., and has plants in Boston and St. Louis. Techni has photofinishing labs in N.Y., Seattle, Burbank, Sacramento, San Francisco and Hawaii.

For the first six months of this year Photolab had a gross of $2,166,126 and a net of $96,841.

Launching of some new bills and cool weather is spelling a fairly good session at Broadway firstrun houses this session. Playing two games of the World's Series in New York midweek cut into matinee business, and also hurt in a like manner last Saturday-Sunday when the two final contests were on radio and tele from Los Angeles. Polish Day parade on Sunday (6) was blamed for the way trade sagged that day.

"Johnny Cool" is one of the standout newcomers, with a big $32,000 for initial stanza, daydating the Astor and Trans-Lux 85th Street. "Running Man" looks light $13,000 at the State but a fine $8,000 at the Trans-Lux 52d Street where daydating.

"Wuthering Heights," brought back by Continental, hit a socko $16,000 or close opening round at the Coronet. This is rated unusually big for a pic in such category. "Lilies of the Field" hit a sockeroo $15,000 on initial stanza at the Murray Hill. "Chushingura" is heading for a great $11,000 for opener at the 290-seat Toho.

Still money champ outside of the hardticketers is "V.I.P.s" with stageshow which looks to hold with a smash $165,000 in third session at the Music Hall. This insures a fourth week. "Great Escape" is landing a nice $14,000 or close in ninth round at the DeMille.

"Gone Are the Days" climbed to a wow $9,000 in second session at the Trans-Lux East. "In the French Style" did a good $19,000 or near in third frame, daydating the Victoria and Baronet, again running ahead at the latter.

"Conjugal Bed" held with sock $24,500 in third round, daydating the Forum and Fine Arts. "The Haunting" looks to be down to a fair $18,000 or near in third week at Paramount. It was fair $6,000 in four days of the third at the Cinema. One where "Tom Jones" moved in Monday (7).

The three hardticket pix improved a bit over a week ago, with out-of-towners, here for the Series, credited with helping trade.

Pearl White's Old Studio At Ft. Lee Coming Down

The Fort Lee (N. J.) studio, where such early film classics as "Polly of The Circus" and Pearl White's "Perils of Pauline" serials were shot, is due to be torn down and a modern, one-story film storage plant erected on its site by the Bonded Services Division of Novo Industrial Corp.

The present five-acre installation comprises 20 buildings, including the two-story, three-gallery shooting studio built in 1914 by Universal Pictures head Carl Laemmle. While the studio is to be demolished, the other buildings will be renovated for film storage and handling.

In 1929, Universal moved its studio and processing facilities from Fort Lee to Hollywood. Three years later, the property was purchased from Universal by Consolidated Film, a division of Republic Corp., which occupied it for 30 years. The property was purchased from Consolidated in 1962 by a syndicate which recently resold it to Bonded.

Upon completion, the new facility will function as Bonded's central terminal servicing five other warehouses operated by the firm in the N. Y. metropolitan area.

The parent company, Novo Industrial, is a diversified firm whose stock is listed on the American Exchange.

French Film Production This Year Looks to Hit 100-Par Mark Again

Paris, Oct. 8.

Film production this year looks like it again would hit the hundred pix mark which is par here. Last year's 90 French and French majority coproductions were a bit under actual needs. Main reasons are the new 14% Film Aid and a slower rate of film attendance.

However, things are still rated bleak, and now film people are demanding that the new aid be kept intact despite Common Mart plans for cutting aid each succeeding year. Present season has started off quite well with several films doing above the usual average biz. It is hoped this means that public disaffection has reached its high point, and that now even growing tele has hit its public saturation point, at least for a time.

It is felt that good or exploitation films get them in and there is still a public penchant for cinema screen fare. Growing affluence here may also play in the favor of the cinemas, But, again, the old story is about what and which pix will get them in. Early good starters are "The Great Escape" (UA), "The Birds" (U), a satirical film musical, the French "Sweet and Sour," and the local "Un Drole De Paroissien."

So French production is trying to encompass as many types of films as possible as well as the so-called arty films for prestige and fest purposes. Most of the top new and old directors are working, which is a good sign, as well as are the few big stars.

But even if there is some optimism, the longtime perennial pix problems are still having most commercial and governmental film figures still quite cautious on the near-future. They feel that this season could show whether there is a definite upturn or if cinema going will continue to fall along with foreign markets and French worldwide film prestige.

THAT OLD FILM BUSINESS

Some Germans Back To Producing Party Films—Strictly Nudies

Frankfurt, Oct. 1.

Latest look at the "novel" productions being turned out by Germans includes a dip into "Sinerama," sin films with a heavy accent on the offbeat. A German photographer just complained to the French authorities that his film camera and picture were stolen while he had been making just such a film on the Isle of Levant, off the Cote d'Azur.

The Isle is famed for its nudist colony. And the German photog, with a couple of willing French "stars," had been making a film to be sold for private showings only at big fees.

The Germans before the war were noted, too, for making party films, and it looks as if a few are going back into the old business.

Int'l Film Prods. To Choose New Prexy in Nov.

Paris, Oct. 8.

Meeting of the steering committees set up by the late Eric Johnston as head of the Federation of International Film Producer Assns. started today (Tues.) Work probably will try to make a definite coherent pattern of Johnston's plans which then will be discussed at the November regular FIFPA meeting when his successor will be elected.

It is felt in American film circles here that if Johnston's policies are well formulated during the present conclave they should seemingly be backed by the new head. There are no clear indications of the new FIFPA director, or if he may well be American in deference to Johnston's memory.

Pointed out that though Johnston was also prexy of the Motion Picture Assn. of America, his plank was strictly international in outlook. It was based on the assumption that competitive aspects between member nations and their producers were becoming negligible as falling production cut rivalries. Also that there was more or less a place for most films in all marts as burgeoning coproduction meant working together easier and the growing American investments in, and distribution of, European pix made for less problems too.

Johnston favored giving more power to FIFPA and to center its activities on new markets (Africa and Asia), helping set up underprivileged areas, and to keep producers from acting on their own but through FIFPA for best results. He even hoped for services a la those given American majors by MPEA and MPAA but realized that it was difficult with the smaller FIFPA budget.

He also hoped to study teleproduction. Apparently he wanted to instill the fact that producers working of their own was a thing of the past with their own international organization now a powerful representative force if it were used right.

He also had stated he sought to allay the film festival question once and for all since it was taking up too much FIFPA time and obscuring the more vital things it could do. It appears he was for recognizing a group of important fests and then allowing individuals to enter others on their own. This is the one area where he preached some do-it-yourself action.

Present meetings will show whether the FIFPA will become a more dynamic group and impose itself on fest decisions, as well as coordinate various problems facing producers in most world marts such as new tax levies, protectionism and percentage freezing.

'Mockingbird' Shares Top Catholic Pic Prize

Rome, Oct. 1.

Robert Mulligan's "To Kill a Mockingbird" (U) shared the Catholic Film Office Grand Prize this week with Ingmar Bergman's Swedish pic, "Winter Light." Award, which goes to the film selected from among the year's winners of Catholic Film Office (O.C.I.C.) awards at major festivals, was announced at Assisi.

"Mockingbird" (which had won the O.C.I.C. kudo at Cannes) was cited for the development of the main character played by Gregory Peck, development which "becomes a deep love which helps him to courageously assume his social and professional responsibilities, and which is the expression of authentic religion." Twin award this year is the first time the O.C.I.C. prize has been split between two films.

Paris Reaction: Linc Center Fine For Some Films

Paris, Oct. 8.

Local producers and film exporters are cagey, evasive and divided when asked for opinions anent the recent first New York International Film Festival. The one point on which they all seem to agree is that the site is good for difficult pix, or those not readily taken by American buyers. It is thought that more obviously commercial product has nothing to gain from a Lincoln Center showing.

Some of the small French producers, who specialize in off-beat pix, seemed more pro-fest than against. They noted that this year's fest provided the first U.S. airing for the "Cinema Verite" type films—the sort of function the fest should and must perform.

Film people also agree that the fest can be valuable in focusing attention on foreign films in general, and this can eventually pay off for foreign films in the still restricted, specialized American market.

Danes Aroused By Keeler Pic Prod.

Copenhagen, Oct. 1.

A crowd of angry women and grim elderly gentlemen visited today the Danish minister of Justice Hans Haekkrup and presented a sharp protest note against the Keeler film which is being made here via the Nash production, with Yvonne Buckingham as Christine Keeler and John Barrymore as Stephen Ward. The 14,000 signatures were presented to the minister by schoolmaster Inger Larson, who is a head of the local "MRA" (Moral Rearmament) organization.

"This film is in contradiction to our efforts to educate our children and its aim is to destroy what thousands of parents are trying to build, said the note. The note asks for immediate intervention by the government and a ban against shooting the film.

The minister, who was not able to decide the case, promised to present the case to the government. In the meantime, the race is on and the producer of the Keeler film is making every effort to complete the pic before the two other Keeler films—one in France and other in Egypt which are now in production. It seems that the Copenhagen effort is slowest and lacks funds.

A special welcoming dinner and screenings will be held for delegates to the 34th annual convention of Allied States Assn. the evening of Oct. 21 at the Americana Hotel, N.Y. The event will be sponsored by several film companies who will unveil new product.

Sponsoring the dinner will be Columbia, Metro, Paramount, Universal, United Artists, Warner Bros., Allied Artists and Buena Vista. Among the features to be screened will be "Pink Panther," "Captain Newman M.D.," "Who's Been Sleeping in My Bed," "The Prize" and "Strait-jacket." Screenings will be held at the individual companies' own screening rooms, giving the delegates the problem of deciding which of the pix to catch.

The welcoming dinner is but one of many feeds to be thrown during the conclave. Coca-Cola will pick up the tab for the final banquet, Oct. 24. A cocktail party preceding the affair will be tossed by the Union Carbide Corp. and Pepsi-Cola is sponsoring a private dinner and special show at the Latin Quarter, Oct. 23.

Toho's Manhattan Press Luncheon

(1) Would Fancy Coproduction With Yanks—(2) Not Yet Concerned With TV Syndication

Toho Ltd., a top production and distribution company in Japan, so far has held back releasing any of its vast backlog of film product to television. It also has refrained to date from going into the production of pix for tv. These facts were revealed last week (Thurs.) at a luncheon given for Toho toppers, in New York for the preem of "Chushingura" at the Toho Cinema, and also to observe the 30th anni of the company.

Principal speaker at the luncheon was Masahi Shimizu, president of the company, who headed a group of corporation execs who included Goro Uzaki, who's in charge of operations for Toho in the Americas; and Yoko Tsaukasa and Kumi Mizuno, comely femmes from the film's cast.

Toho, however, said Shimizu, has televized stageshows from its own theatres in Japan, these going to regular commercial outlets and were sponsored. Although two other Japanese pix production companies now are making pictures for television, Toho has refrained from going into producing films for tv until all the wrinkles have been ironed out. Another factor, Shimizu indicated, was that some tele outlets in Japan have been having program troubles.

Toho prexy, who also is chief executive of several railroad companies and department stores in Japan, outlined his company's attitude towards film coproduction. He stated that, Toho would like to go into coproduction with a U.S. major producer. He explained that the difficulty was such a coproduction, judging from past experience, might make for a film that would go over strongly in the American market but fail miserably at the Nipponese wickets.

Shimizu said that Toho expected to distribute about 20% of all its product in the U.S. this year. "Chushingura" was described as one of its strongest production efforts to date and one expected to become one of the greatest film grossers from Japan to date.

No Seal, No Distrib But Enterprise, Yes; Gurney Woos TOA

Indie producer-director Robert J. Gurney Jr. is setting some sort of precedent by taking a booth at the upcoming tradeshow being held in conjunction with the Theatre Owners of America convention in New York Oct. 28-31. Gurney, who has been conducting a one-man crusade against the Production Code Administration which has—so far—withheld a seal from his new pic, "The Prude and The Parisienne," hopes to create exhib interest in the picture which still is without a distrib.

Main feature of the booth will will be a continuous run projector which will show clips from the film. Additionally, he'll be offering promotion kits designed for both distrib and exhib use. Says Gurney: "It's not my intention to compete with the distributor or to supplant any of his functions, but rather to supplement his sales effort."

METRO RALLY FOR REISSUES

Handlers Convene In N.Y. Under Schwartz-Seadler

Total of 30 independent distributors aligned with Metro are to be in session at New York's Hotel Astor this week to talk over the new crop of MGM reissues which these indies are handling on a franchise basis throughout the United States and Canada.

Gavel is being handled by Fred Schwartz, head of the MGM unit which handles reissues and other product. He's to be assisted by Jack Schlaifer, in charge of sales, and Si Seadler, in charge of promotion, of the unit.

All are at work plotting the marketing of MGM backnumbers going under the heading of "World Famous Musical Hits."

22 Pix, 19 Lands At Frisco Fest

San Francisco, Oct. 8.

Films from more foreign countries than have ever entered the San Francisco International Film Festival before are promised for this year's event. Also there's a hint—again—of a major Hollywood entry from Irving M. Levine. Hollywood has tended in the past to do a no-show.

For this seventh annual fest, 22 major features from 19 nations are entered from U.S., Japan, France, Italy, Great Britain, Brazil, Czechoslovakia, Holland, Korea, Jugoslavia, India, Poland, Argentina, Denmark, Russia, Mexico, Greece, the Philippines and China.

Festival begins Oct. 30 and closes Nov. 12. Films on sked are: "No Way Out," Philippines; "Being Two Isn't Easy," Japan; "The Spitting Image," Netherlands; "The Aimless Bullet," Korea; "Kozara," Yugoslavia; "The Courtesan," India; "How To Be Loved," Poland; "Love Eterne," Hong Kong, "Weekend," Denmark.

Delegates from eight entrant nations have made plans to be present, and acceptances are also expected from several others, Irving Levin said.

The festival is divided into five competitions: 35mm. features, 35mm. shorts, 35mm. newsreels, 16mm. as art and 15mm. as communication.

Delmar Daves, Mexico's Emilio Fernandez and Italy's Flores Ammannati (former director of Venice Festival) are three jurors of the 35mm. feature category named so far.

Mel Basel's New Role

Boston, Oct. 8.

Mel Basel, formerly group sales director of the Astor Theatre, promotion director of Boston Garden, and group sales director at Pleasure Island, has been appointed manager of the Keith Memorial Theatre here to fill the vacancy caused by the recent death of manager Robert Hynes.

Basel was appointed by Jay Golden, northeastern division manager of RKO. Hynes, who died of a heart attack a few weeks ago, had succeeded Ben Domingo, who succumbed to a heart seizure two years ago.

RKO Taking 'Sammy Lee'; Re-Edited, Film Due For Erasure of 'C' Rating

RKO Theatres, which ventured into some off-beat booking with the recent showing of "Mondo Cane" on its 33-house New York circuit, is now extending that idea with the slotting of Seven Arts' "The Small World of Sammy Lee."

Film was originally condemned by the Legion of Decency which had not seen it prior to its opening at the Sutton Theatre, N.Y. After being "C"-rated, the pic was re-edited to conform to Legion standards and now it is understood that the rating will be changed to a higher classification. RKO will advertise it with a "recommended for mature audiences" disclaimer.

The Legion's pic ratings remain a factor in circuit booking. Organization made quite a fuss when Loew's booked the "C" rated "Boccaccio '70." RKO had trouble some years back when it booked the condemned "Baby Doll." With the "Lee" rating upgraded, however, that stigma is removed and so there shouldn't be any problem from the Legion.

RKO, incidentally, is changing the film's title to "The Small Violent World of Sammy Lee," thereby beefing it up a little. The feature opens Oct. 30 on the circuit.

Shouldn't Brush Writer Outa Sight

Paris, Oct. 8.

All motion picture writing deals should include provision for the writer to remain with the project throughout the entire production. This is the feeling of scenarist JP Miller, who is just completing his fifth month of "voluntary cooperation" with producer-director Fred Zinnemann on Columbia's "Behold The Pale Horse" here.

Although very few writers stick with a project during its filming ("they can't afford to"), Miller said they should "if they want to understand the problems of production and direction and also just the physical problems of the scenes they write."

Miller feels that his sticking with "Pale Horse" during the photography stage has been a great help to the picture, because "Zinnemann can feel much freer if the writer is on hand to smooth out scenes, to rewrite dialog if it doesn't fit the style of the actor, and to discuss the intention of the scenes. It's not a question of who's right or wrong if a difference of opinion develops, but it's a question of coming closest to the original image."

Miller would also recommend that the writer be on hand during the editing "to see how the raw pieces fit together." Writer, who has plans to coproduce as well as write an upcoming film, and Zinnemann are seeking to extend their present collaboration on a new property.

KNOXVILLE BLUEPRINTS DOWNTOWN 'GAY-WAY'

Knoxville, Tenn., Oct. 8.

Downtown theatres will soon have a "new look" because of a project called the Gay-/Way, sponsored by the Downtown Knoxville Assn. Wider, colorful sidewalks covered with broad canopies, occupied by shrubs and rest-awhile benches, will be part of it.

Three main street houses will have different fronts, with theatre signs designed into the general scheme of the canopies. Present marquees will be preserved although there will be a different observation point for them.

Theatres included in the main street plan are the Tennessee and Bijou, Wilby-Kinsey houses and the Riviera Theatre, operated by the Simpson Corp. of Atlanta, Ga. The Riviera was recently razed by fire and is being reconstructed, according to tentative plans.

Levy Starts a Johnston Award By Yale Law School

Herman M. Levy, retiring general counsel of Theatre Owners of America, has made an undisclosed gift to the Yale School of Law, his alma mater, to be given as a prize, the Eric Johnston Award, at the end of this academic year to the student who writes the best paper on the subject of prior restraint film censorship.

Jack B. Tate, associate dean of Yale's Law School, is currently seeking other contributions to make the award permanent.

'Sins' Better Title Word Than 'Virgin'

Add another chapter to that book called "What's In A Title?"

American International's Italo spec, "Goliath and The Sins of Babylon," was originally carried on the company's release chart as "Goliath and The Virgins of Babylon." However, says AIP exec veep Sam Arkoff, there were objections from some parent groups about the use of the word "virgins." There have been no objections so far on the new title and Arkoff reasons that "virgins are more objectionable than sins."

Incidentally, both "Goliath" and the pic with which it goes out in early December, "Samson and The Slave Queen," were films about the legendary Italo strongman Maciste. In the U.S. dubbed versions, however, Maciste becomes in the first Goliath and in the second Samson.

Jean Renoir Retrospective Film Show Linked With Canadian 'Film Archive'

Montreal, Oct. 8.

The first film archive of its kind in Canada will be launched Friday (18) with the showing for one week of seven of Jean Renoir's best-known films, according to Guy Cote, president of a new outfit calling itself Connaissance du Cinema.

Films will be shown at Elysee Theatre, an art house, in conjunction with the opening locally of the French Exhibition.

Project has aroused considerable interest in Canadian film circles, and importance and prestige aspect of the archive plan, is pointed up in the expected presence opening night of Henri Langlois, curator of the Cinematheque Francaise of Paris—one of the oldest film archives in the world—and under the patronage of Raymond Bousquet, French ambassador to Canada.

Films to be show are considered Renoir classics, and include "Nana," "Le Chienne," "La Nuit du Carrefour," "Boudu Sauve des Beaux," "Madame Bovary," "La Grande Illusion" and "La Regle du Jeu"—all produced between 1925 and 1940.

Significance is also added because launching of Canadian archive with obvious French support, also strengthens new liaison between film-makers in Canada and France who recently announced a joint production deal.

Cote made two important points in announcing the archive project and the Renoir program:

First was that a Canadian archive "must begin immediately to collect and preserve film masterpieces, since "every day films are burned, they disintegrate, and they disappear"; second was that the time for setting up an archive could be more appropriate at a time when the film industry seems on the point of rebirth in Canada.

Aim of the archive is to preserve not only films, but also scenarios, still pix, posters, cameras, costumes—in fact, anything and everything involved in the making and showing of films.

A committee formed by Local 52, the studio mechanics arm of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees, has come up with a set of counter proposals to those suggested a few weeks ago by indie producer Ely A. Landau. These suggestions have been sent to Landau. Aim is for the parties to get together again and possibly come to some realistic conclusions regarding Gotham film production working conditions.

Landau earlier expressed his dissatisfaction with the eastern studio labor picture, saying that it was geared more for and favored tv commercial and industrial production. He had discussed the matter with the East Coast Motion Picture Council, a body of eastern filmmaking locals, and had found the IATSE psychology discouraging to him. This and other factors led to his pulling two features out of Gotham production and shooting them elsewhere.

Landau wanted a weekly rate instead of the daily scale which fits advertising blurbs. He also sought adjustments in film work time schedules and such. Local 52, which has among its membership the bulk of the labor force required for a feature film's production, was considered the major hangup in the discussions over any rules change. The union had, true, expressed a theoretical interest in furthering eastern production but considered changes in existing situations a matter on no urgency (to labor) whatever.

After Landau created a stir over the issue, the local decided that its image could be improved and suggested, at a meeting of the Council and Landau, that a committee be set up to re-examine 52's position and possibly come up with some counter proposals for Landau to study. These ideas have now been drafted and sent to the producer.

Typically, counterproposals aren't divulged. It is believed that the local has agreed to negotiate a weekly scale arrangement—if certain guarantees precede it. Actually this has been the union's position from the start, it wanting such things as a longterm lease on facilities by a producer or other proof of long-range activity. Now the guarantee thinking apparently takes the form of a guarantee assurances a certain number of pix will be shot within a given time period. A guess is that a weekly rate would be based on three features in a year.

What it amounts to is 52's desire to insure sufficient work to justify concessions. As spokesmen have pointed out, the union has a "favored nations" clause in its pacts which means that if it makes this kind of deal with one producer, it must then make it with any other meeting same standards. This explains the local's caution on loosening working rules.

Gimbel's Tells Public Re Video; Irks Film Man

Philadelphia, Oct. 8.

Television listings sent as a mailer in a midtown department stores monthly billings was protested by David E. Milgram, president of Theatre Owners of Pennsylvania and owner of the firstrun Fox Theatre.

Milgram sent his protest to the Chestnut Street Businessmen's Assn., the Market Street Businessmen and Gimbel Bros., the store which slipped in the pamphlet carrying the listings of WCAU-TV.

"Mailing literature that actually tells people to stay at home and watch tv is, in itself, a deterrent. Our organization is most anxious to get people out if their homes and downtown," Milgram wrote. "As a matter of fact, we are now formulating an advertising campaign to bring this about."

Dumb Young Vs. Dumber Adults

Albany Hearings on 'Rating' Films Suitable For School Kids Divides Folks on Expected Lines

By JAMES L. CONNERS

Albany, Oct. 8.

Adult psychiatry and child psychology have been given forceful spotlighting in the New York State Legislature concerning possible community and/or state guidances in the matter of suitability of motion pictures for different age groups.

A hearing on Albany's Capitol Hill last week, as was to be expected, brought out the pros and cons. There's agitation for classification of pictures on one side, agitation against it on another, and in between some rather incisive questioning about the merits and demerits of any kind of censorship.

The course which eventually will be taken by the Empire State solons should be particularly significant because of the precedents established — these being perhaps more meaningful because N.Y. might well be relied upon by some defense and prosecution attorneys as a guidepost-setting institution.

The basic facts of the matter, as brought out here, are that trashy nudist - type and other "earthy" pictures have been on exhibition without curb. The Board of Regents would have it that the State Education Board should be empowered to say yes or no as to whether these should be labeled unsuitable for students unless accompanied by a parent or guardian.

This is the wrong approach, stated Margaret Twyman, Community Relations Director of the Motion Picture Assn. of America. Mrs. Twyman protested against the measure on the argument that the parents in any given community should raise the objections and, particularly, dissuade exhibitors from making such programming available. Censorship should begin at home, and the power of censorship should not be invested in community or state officialdom, she said in effect.

Mrs. Twyman, who has worked on the faculties of three universities, expressed her sentiments in a six-and-a-half page formal statement. Her thesis is that a well-guided child is not likely to be influenced to any appreciable extent by motion pictures, television, etc.

Not even by a pornographic motion picture? She said "no." Whereupon some politicos raised the point that Mrs. Twyman might be talking about "the perfect child" and "the millenium."

Mrs. Twyman, whose role as psycologist and sociologist was challenged at one point, said she wasn't considering any kind of "perfect child." Instead, she asked, wouldn't it be better if the state's educators embarked on a program of parent education rather "than such an inconsequential program as you suggest?"

Sen. Thomas Laverne, Republican of Rochester, raised the sociological thought that many people, particularly in New York City, are "functionally illiterate" and the communication between them and their offspring is "poor."

There have been no conclusions as yet. The nub of the matter is that certain State elements want the establishment of a film classification panel, professedly in the interest of children who otherwise would not be so "protected." Those against say this would be censorship and thus offensive, regardless of extent of the censorship.

Todd's Chi Bookings

Chicago, Oct. 8.

Michael Todd Jr. has retained Chuck Teitel and Dan Goldberg to buy and book films for his two Chi houses. The Cinestage and Michael Todd. Teitel is associated with Goldberg in the World Playhouse, Town and Globe Theatres, and in Teitel Films, distributors.

Tentative plans are for the Cinestage, currently in its 34th hardticket week of "Lawrence of Arabia," to go on regular firstrun. Todd theatre, currently dark, will probably become an action-film house.

Happy Subsidiaries; Metro French Companies With Market Winners

Paris, Oct. 8.

Metro has hit the jackpot this year with its bankrolled French features turned out by two local subsidiaries, Jacques Bar's Cipra Films and Gaumont International, whose product Metro has for worldwide distribution.

Most spectacular success has been racked up by Cipra's "Melodie En Sous-Sol" (Basement Melody), Jean Gabin-Alain Delon starrer which is being called "Any Number Can Win" in the States. Pic is the top grosser of all French pix released here since January, 1963, and is now in its 22d first-run week. Total Paris admissions to date are 478,483.

Metro has also done all right with three other French features it released this season. Another Cipra production, Rene Clement's "Le Jour et L'Heure" (The Day and The Hour), drew 104,147 admissions here in firstrun. The other two, both Gaumont productions, are Andre Cayette's "La Glaive et La Balance" (The Sword and The Balance), which drew 210,155 firstrun admissions, and Roger Vadim's "Le Vice et la Vertu" (Vice and Virtue), which drew 195,160.

This is the first year Metro has had such solid success from its French-made features. In addition, 20th-Fox and United Artists are going for the locally-made pix.

OFFERS 'ORIGIN LABEL' BILL AGAINST RUNAWAY

Washington, Oct. 8.

Legislation requiring labelling of American-produced films made outside the United States has been introduced by Rep. Bernard Grabowski (D-Conn.). A film credit line telling where the film was made would be required by the legislation. Grabowski said promotional and advertising material should carry the same credit.

Grabowski pegged his legislation as an amendment to the Federal Trade Commission Act saying it would bring to public attention the "unfair practices of the movie industry."

Taking his cue from the Hollywood craft unions he charged thousands of U. S. technicians, craftsmen and office employees were out of work because of foreign film production.

"Surely the film industry can make use of American labor and not spend dollars overseas when we all know what a great unemployment problem we have," Grabowski said.

He warned runaway production could become "a source of propaganda not in keeping with our democratic way of life."

Grabowski said he believed in fair competition, "not the type currently practiced by some in the movie industry."

SHREVEPORT FOLDS ANOTHER

Shreveport, Oct. 8.

Another hardtop, the 650-seat Saenger, has closed leaving this 300,000-plus population area with only five indoor screens, counting one Negro house. There are now five theatres dark.

The Saenger, which has alternated a 70m policy with second runs, is owned by the Paramount-Gulf chain in New Orleans. Company hasn't clarified future of the building, but a weekend and summer policy is being mulled.

Portland, Maine, Down To Three Firstruns

Portland, Me., Oct. 8.

Another firstrun house in this city of 75,000 is set to shutter. Either the Strand of the Empire will close permanently depending on the outcome of negotiations between the Ralph Snider Enterprises of Boston and the landlord of the Strand.

The Strand's lease expired Labor Day and has been closed temporarily. If the Snider interests can come to terms with the Strand's landlord, it will sell the Empire, which it owns. If not, it will continue to operate the Empire. Last month the Civic Theatre became a victim of poor business.

When final arrangements are concluded Portland will be left with three-first-run houses.

Poe & Bikinis

generally conservative Nicholson predicted that their current "Beach Party," on the basis of the 2,800 dates played so far, should rack up a domestic rental of between $3,000,000 and $4,000,000 (on a budget cost of something under $800,000). That will mean that "Beach Party" will more than double the rental of any previous AIP release.

Considering the durability of the Poe adaptations, and the bonanza being won by the teenage musical pic, there seems to be no need to combine those two elements which are presently doing very okay separately, but the way Nicholson and Arkoff have operated in the past, it's not safe to say it won't eventually happen.

In The Know With Poe

For example, their first Poe filmization, "House of Usher," was played absolutely straight, though star Vincent Price's unabashed theatricality provoked relieving yocks along with the yells. As the series progressed, more and more comic elements have crept into the scripts which, however, have continued to be written within a straight horror framework. Emboldened by the success of these films, AIP now has two outright comic-horrors (both originals) on tap: the completed "Comedy of Terrors," starring Price, Lorre, Basil Rathbone and Boris Karloff and "It's Alive," which starts in January with Lorre as star.

Meanwhile, the company is continuing its more conventional Poe cycle with "Masque of Red Death" which starts shooting in England in November with Price as star. This (the seventh Poe pic) is to be followed by "City in The Sea," "Descent Into The Maelstrom" and "Ligeia."

The reasons for their faith in Poe as profitable source material can be seen in the following domestic rental breakdown on Poe pix to date: "House of Usher" (1960), $1,400,000; "Pit and The Pendulum" (1961), $1,500,000; "Premature Burial" (1962), $1,100,000; "Tales of Terror" (1962) $1,000,000; "The Raven" (1963), $1,500,000; and "Haunted Palace" (1963), $1,500,000. (The figure on "Palace" which is just going into national release, is a projection based on biz to date.)

Because AIP has just recently been hitting its stride in the foreign market, most of these pix haven't yet had their full overseas playoff, but, after deducting cost of doing biz, the offshore returns are all gravey.

Re their upcoming sequel to "Beach Party," which is going to be called "Muscle Beach Party," the AIP chiefs profess to have no knowledge of any title conflict with the film adaptation of Ira Wallach's novel, "Muscle Beach," which Martin Ransohoff had announced some months back. AIP does not register its titles with the Motion Picture Assn. of America title registration bureau and, say Nicholson and Arkoff, since there have been a number of other items, including a short, called "Muscle Beach," they don't think they'll be liable to any "unfair competition" charges. (But, just in case there are, they've obtained insurance coverage on the production from the Firemans Fund.)

"Muscle Beach Party" is due to go into production in December with an Easter release skedded. Although still just a gleam in the eyes of its exec producers, the film already has 200 firm playdates.

With Product Completed Long Ahead Universal Able to Sell Foresightedly

Universal will market 14 new pictures and two reissues during the first six months of 1964. This was the message imparted to the company's branch managers and sales and promotion execs gathered in New York last week for a week-long national sales meeting at the Hotel Waldorf Astoria.

Henry H. Martin was the source of the tidings and he reinterated U prez Milton R. Rackmil's feelings expressed earlier in the week while welcoming the visiting salesmen that 1964 holds the greatest potential for the company it has ever had. These pix include "Charade," the Christmas pic at Radio City Music Hall, a Betty E. Box film called "Young and Willing," the Rossano Brazzi-Shirley Jones starer "Dark Purpose," "Howard Hawks' "Man's Favorite Sport?" and a musical tagged "The Dream Maker."

Also set for release are "Hide and Seek" from abroad, "Captain Newman M.D.," "The Brass Bottle," a Hammer horror pic tagged "Nightmare," "He Rides Tall," Ross Hunter's "Chalk Garden," "The Raiders," "Wild and Wonderful" and "Bedtime Story," originally called "King of the Mountain." In addition, U will reissue two of its all-time top grossers, "Operation Petticoat" and "Pillow Talk."

In connection with these releases, Universal will hold a 26-week sales drive among its domestic regional sales manager, branch managers, salesmen and bookers during the first six months of '64 with $50,000 in prizes to be awarded. The drive will honor Martin who has been with the company for 30 years as of 1964. In telling the assemblage of the drive, Rackmil gave praise to the v.p.-general sales manager for his years of effective service. The push will be called the "Hi Martin Sales Drive."

Also addressing the group was David A. Lipton, U ad-pub v.p. in from Coast. He called for a concerted, picture-by-picture custom sales effort, stating that "advertising cannot do the job alone. You cannot buy your audience or your success." He cited the company's job on "Charade," pointing out the step-by-step procedures in advertising, publicity and promotion done on the film.

In all of this, he pointed out Universal's advantage in having lots of time to work on pix in that company has built up a sturdy inventory and has skedded the product for maximum time to work on each picture for the best depth possible. He noted that this will not only be reflected in "Charade," but will also show itself in "Captain Newman, M.D.," "Man's Favorite Sport?", "Wild and Wonderful," "Brass Bottle," "Chalk Garden," "Bedtime Story" and others.

Part of the conclave was presentation of Photoplay Magazine's "Front Cover Award" to Universal. Rackmil accepted it at a luncheon last Friday (4) at the Waldorf.

This was the second such national sales meeting held by Universal in 1963 and Martin told the gathering that it was the company's plan to make the New York sessions an annual event. The idea has worked well for U in the past and this meeting was termed very satisfying, all of which has prompted the continuation of the scheme.

'Rampage's' UTO Hype

Kansas City, Oct. 8.

The new business building program of the United Theatre Owners of the Heart of America continues in high gear, with "Rampage" (WB) slated to be given the full saturation treatment in 250 houses, October 9.

Braintrusters making the decision on "Rampage" were Harry Greene of Welworth Theatre, Minneapolis, Eddie Forester of Frontier Theatre of Dallas, along with local circuitmen Fred Souttar and Roy Hill of Fox Midwest Division of National General Corp. and Richard Orear and M. B. Smith of Commonwealth, plus Darrel Presnell, BB program head. Russell Borg and Don Walker represented Warners at the meeting.

Suggests Ed. L. Hyman: 'Let's Not Have Another Winter Like Last Year'

Discussing the latest issue of his Orderly Distribution Release Book, American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres v.p. Edward L. Hyman continued his upbeating of the industry with predictions of a rosy future for the last six months of 1963 and the first half of 1964.

At a trade discussion yesterday (Tues.) at AB-PT headquarters in New York, he recalled the winter of 1963 and expressed his hope that it not be repeated in the coming year. Judging from the information he was able to compile with the help of distribution chiefs of most companies, the v.p. said that he could see "nothing but a bright period ahead for our whole industry."

He continued his plea for exhibs to "pitch in at the grass roots level" to insure a sturdy fourth quarter. There will be lotsa quality product for that and other periods and so, with a concerted effort, things should be strong. Hyman also got in a lengthy plug for his pet project — orderly release — again warning against the dangers of "orphaned periods" on the industry.

As usual, 3,000 copies of the book are being sent out to exhibs, distribs, producers et al. It's a fatter book this time and even features pictures of, as they are called in the volume, "toilers of the see," the distrib chiefs and their staffs. Hyman described how helpful these staffs were in compiling the edition and, in general, had praise for everything and everybody.

over the Coast berth (which he could have had before) despite the balking of Miss Barnes who is said to prefer the European way of life. Paradoxically, while British residents, they educated their children in American schools and in fact their daughter was married less than a year ago in Beverly Hills.

The reported delays have brought the usual Hollywood rumors, including the mention of Bill Dozier who heads Col's teleproduction affiliate, Screen Gems, but that's all it is—a rumor.

Frankovich got in yesterday (Tues.) from the Coast and it is expected a decision for him to take the Hollywood studio berth will be made before he goes on to London and the Far East.

In his new assignment Schwartz expectedly will have a major role in setting up production packages as well as concerning himself with affairs distribution and exhibition on a worldwide basis.

The title of senior v.p. at Col was last held by the late Abe Montague. When Col was shopping around for a production topkick it was Montague who asked Schwartz to lunch and this was to lead to Schwartz's becoming filmmaking v.p., for which post he relinquished the presidency of RKO theatres.

Sam Briskin continues as a Col v.p. on the Coast and an important member of the heirarchy.

Kill Indictments for Attempted Arson on Theatre

Kansas City, Oct. 8.

Giving "insufficient evidence" as the reason, Alfred O. Hardy, assistant state prosecutor, asked for a dismissal of two 15-month-old indictments charging assualt with intent to inflict bodily damage and attempted arson—which grew out of a labor dispute between Durwood Theatres and the projectionists' union. After listening to Hardy's request, Judge Harry H. Hall last week lifted the indictments against Carl Badami, a projectionist, and Herbert R. Clark, auto mechanic.

The men had been charged with assault in connection with the throwing of two "Molotov cocktail" gasoline bombs on May 29, 1962, at the home of Gene F. Cramm, then supervisor of maintenance for the Durwood circuit. A charge of attempted arson against Clark also was dismissed.

Nelson's 'Lilies' Flourish In Western Playoff

Ralph Nelson's "Lilies of the Field" is opening strongly in the midwest, where it was filmed, and is out-grossing some of United Artists' top money-makers in that area. Pic is also doing nice biz in other locations around the country and in Europe.

High on the midwest list are theatres in Albuquerque, Denver Boulder, Greeley and Santa Fe. In seven theatres among these cities, "Lilies" has taken in $27,573 in its first week or less. Sidney Poitier stars in the pic which copped four awards at the Berlin Film Festival.

In another awards category, the film has received the "special applause citation" of the Motion Picture Assn. of America. It is playing in 10 key cities around the country.

Sinatra Shed of Nevada, Or Vice Versa

Las Vegas, Oct. 8.

Frank Sinatra, long a gambling operation figure in addition to his entertaining prowess, yesterday (Mon.) rang down the curtain on his Nevada gaming career. He announced only hours before deadline of his answer to a complaint brought by Nevada Gaming Control Board that he is disposing of his interests in the Cal-Neva Lodge, Lake Tahoe, and the Sands Hotel here.

Sinatra earlier had been charged with using "vile and abusive" language in a telephone conversation with Ed Olen, chairman of the board, and with hosting Sam Giancana, Chicago underworld figure whose name appears in the Nevada "Black Book" of undesirables unwelcome around gambling operations, at his Cal-Neva Lodge last July. A hearing had been expected later this month.

In a public statement issued through the entertainer's attorney, Harry Claiborne, Sinatra said he requests "all gaming licenses issued to him to be terminated." The singer stressed a new affiliation with a major entertainment company and said he has "agreed to spend my full time and efforts in that company's activities in the entertainment industry." Sinatra, of course, was referring to Warner Bros. and his position as aide to Jack L. Warner. (See separate story).

Sinatra has a 50% corporate ownership of Cal-Neva, valued at $3,000,000, and 9% of the Sands, valued at $380,000. His Cal-Neva partners are Hank Sanicola and Sanford Waterman.

In addition to the alleged abusive language to Olsen, Sinatra was accused of two bribes offered to control board auditing personnel by a Sinatra agent in return for their "cooperation" in the Cal-Neva case.

Court Okays Theatrical Amoeba Bit

Saenger In New Orleans To Become Two Houses Under Consent Decree

New York Federal Judge Edmund L. Palmieri Thursday (3) approved American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres' petition to convert its 3,015-seat Saenger Theatre, in downtown New Orleans, into two separate theatres. This is believed to be the first time the court has been asked to approve such a "twin" theatre under terms of the Paramount et al, concent decree.

Palmieri ruled that the conversion would not unduly restrain competition. AB-PT had told the court it wanted to convert the house to make the most economic use of the property to modernize facilities. House was originally built in 1927. When converted, there will be a 1,800-seat auditorium downstairs and a 700-seat one upstairs, both equipped to be operated independently.

Panavision's Munich Rep

a possible second coproduction. Obviously, he said, the finalization of the deal will depend on how the initial effort works out. He declined to name the new property, but said it is a contemporary story which deals in fictionalized terms with a real-life personality. Reade expects to be back in New York within a week's time, leaving Wormser and Cowan in Moscow to continue the talks.

Of the seven acquired Cristaldi features, six are either completed or in final stages of post-photography work. The seventh film, "Fefe," a sequel to "Divorce Italian-Style" starring Marcello Mastroianni, goes into production later this year. The other six pix are "The Strikers," "Omicron," "Time of Indifference," "The World's Greatest Swindles," "Bebo's Girl" and "Seduced and Abandoned." Latter was directed by Pietro Germi, who did "Divorce."

In line with the company's expanding interest in overseas projects, Reade reported that Continental prez Wormser has been named head of an expanded international division, which will service product to overseas tv as well as theatres.

Continental's 1964 line-up will include, in addition to the eight Italo imports, at least three U.S. indies, "Love Goddesses," "Black Like Me" and "The Luck of Ginger Goffey" (which will be filmed in Canada). Company also hopes to get a fourth U.S. indie into production next summer, "Me Candido," based on an off-Broadway play.

READYING THE CARAVAN

Columbia's Meeting to Prime Exhibs Re 'Lawrence'

Columbia veeps Rube Jackter and Bob Ferguson will host a meeting of exhibs in New York this morning (Wed.) to outline strategy for the general release of "Lawrence of Arabia" in N. Y.

Meeting will be held at the Criterion theatre, where "Lawrence" is now winding up its premiere hardticket engagement.

Colorama

Dino Fazio and, most importantly, Royal Business Investment Co. which is one of the prime investors in Colorama.

These people all have interrelated fiscal stakes in Colorama and the settlement of their financial involvements is a problem which has been the subject of meetings for many weeks now. Meanwhile, Colorama as a company is rather short on liquid assets and is a handcuffed operation pending resolution of the difficulties. It recently closed its Chicago office as one small effect of the mess.

Aside from the domestic participants in the situation, there are Italian people involved too, it now turns out. These have been placated so far by Fazio to a large degree but the fact remains that these Italian interests are still owed for pix bought by Telac which were to be distributed by Colorama. They haven't hit the market yet and aren't likely to in any extent until all the fiscal fog is cleared and so this adds another piece to the complicated jigsaw. Telac bought into Colorama in the first place to have domestic distribution for a batch of features it has purchased, the Italo ones among 'em.

Into the picture now comes Kaufman, who's' Jayark makes medical films and distributes features to tv among other things. It is also in the process of acquiring new properties and companies, Kaufman said, but not Colorama among them. "I'm just trying to help the company get on its feet," he said. It has been in need of a benefactor for some time now and considerable hope is being pinned on Jayark to help straighten things out. There had been reports of other expressions of interest from some individuals in the trade, among them George F. Foley who bossed the Chapter XI Astor Pictures. But Kaufman, who once headed an outfit called Guild Films, is now the elected saviour.

by his decision to bow out of the gambling end. Even this enforced unloading of his Cal-Neva Lodge in Lake Tahoe and his "points" in The Sands, Las Vegas, will prove an economic windfall. He is certain to turn a capital gain profit on both. In the case of the 9% holdings in the Vegas hostelry, Sinatra envisions a $800,000 capital gain. (His friendship for a Chicago underworld figure caused the Nevada Gaming Control Board to look askance at the singer's licensing privilege and could also have jeopardised The Sands in which he is but a minority shareholder.)

It is figured that his Warner's film production association will result in beefed-up WB "packages" which may prove lucrative not only to his off-screen pals (Dean Martin, Tony Curtis, Sammy Davis Jr. et al.) but to the studio through deferred financial arrangements.

His services to WB as consultant and/or special assistant to the president would acquire considerable significance if money pictures with money casts, cleared by Sinatra, eventuate.

The image is of instant beef, in packaged strength. They relate, of course, not just to themselves or to their own activities but to the entire situation in American features where stars rule the roost through their agents, managers and lawyers, or to put it the other way, the agents, personal managers and lawyers, rule the roost through their representation of stars.

The powerhouse inherent in the ranking stars has been a steady growth, rooted in fear of confiscation-by-taxation and in all the innumerable devices of CPA's, savvy lawyers and career managers. The question now arises whether there is a further breakthrough whereby key talent make actually dominate studios. To a certain extent Jerry Lewis is also master of his own revels. Or consider the business heft implicit in a Doris Day, along with her husband-mentor, Marty Melcher. Rattle off a lot of potent names — Marlon Brando, Cary Grant, John Wayne, Kirk Douglas and the influence of talent on what is done, who does it, and the whole production timetable is obvious.

Not that star-dominated production is new. Over 40 years ago three actors, Douglas Fairbanks, Charles Chaplin, Mary Pickford and a director, David W. Griffith, were in full control of United Artists.

Jack Warner evidences his confidence in the business ability of on-camera talent in certain instances. It amounts to this: Talent recognizes talent. It was not long ago that Jack Webb was designated by prexy Warner as television production head. Webb from the beginning of his prominence as a tv performer ("Dragnet") had an eye for the business end of show business enterprise. It's within relatively recent years that Sinatra has been spotted as a "stockholder guardian." The stockholder often was himself in large measure, as with his theatrical endeavors, but also others who participated.

According to sources in New York, Sinatra, once the swooner with Tommy Dorsey, has acquired canny business maturity. A box-office name in his own right, he also has shown close concern anent the economic welfare of his picture, tv and record projects. And, particularly in pictures, he's shown knowhow in the surround casting, along with story, production and direction values.

'Irma' Strong in Sept. Followed By 'Thrill'; Place Among Pacers For 'Haunting' 'L-Shaped' & 'Toys'

By MIKE WEAR

VARIETY's regular weekly boxoffice reports are summarised each month, retrospectively. Based on an average of 24 key situations, the source data constitute an adequate sampling of current releases, but are not, of course, fully "definitive." An index of relative grossing strength in the U.S.-Canada market this monthly reprise does not pretend to express total rentals.

Labor Day weekend launched lovely September. Firstrun film business kept to higher strata across the country. Six outstandingly grossing pix racked up nearly $6,000,000 at the wickets. As September ended, "V.I.P.s" (MGM) took over the No. 1 spot (the last week) despite not being on hardticket.

For the third month in a row, "Cleopatra" (20th) was boxoffice champ, September finding this opus still big to wow in a majority of key cities covered by VARIETY. "How the West Was Won" (MGM), which was third in August, captured second place.

"Irma La Douce" (UA), fourth in the previius month, moved up to third position as this pic continued to amaze even the most optimistic exhibs playing it. Film also was high in July, finishing fourth. "Thrill of It All" (U) copped fourth money. It was second in August.

"Lawrence of Arabia" (Col) wound up fifth, same as in August. It again hit better than $500,000 gross for the month. "Great Escape" (UA), which was sixth in August, again copped sixth position.

"For Love Or Money" (U), a new picture, landed seventh place. "The Caretakers" (UA), which hinted promise as August closed, captured eighth spot.

"8½" (Embassy), which was eighth in the preceding month, finished ninth. "The Haunting" (MGM), a new production, copped 10th position.

"L-Shaped Room" (Col), in 10th place in August, wound up 11th. "Toys in Attic" (UA) rounds out the Top 12 films. "Condemned of Altona" (20th), "Wives and Lovers" (Par) and "Women of World" (Embassy) are the runner-up pix in that order of strength.

"V.I.P.s," of course, heads the list of blockbuster newcomers. It was so strong the initial week in distribution extensively that the Elizabeth Taylor-Richard Burton starrer wound up first in the VARIETY weekly survey, with $475,000 total gross.

"Conjugal Bed" (Embassy) looks destined to go places, judging from its great showing in N.Y., where still smash in second week, playing two houses. "In French Style" (Col) is in a like category, being so sock that it captured sixth place in the weekly survey the final week in September.

"Shock Corridor" (AA), also new, did so well the same session that it finished seventh. "Johnny Cool" (UA), opening this week in several N.Y. firstruns, looks like winner based on several nice showings around the country late last month.

"Beach Party" (AI), another new entrant, shapes fine in many of its initial playdates and wound up 11th another week. "Lord of Flies" (Cont), also new, did well enough the first round out to any extent to finish 12th in the weekly surveys.

"Gidget Goes To Rome" (Col) took 11th place one week. "Leopard" (20th) was runnerup another session. It is just getting around, playing arty theatres mostly.

"Mondo Cane" (Times), still playing in several arty houses, finished as a runnerup another week. "Come Blow Your Horn" (Par), seventh in August, finished as a runnerup pic two different weeks.

Walter Wood will jointly produce "The Yen of Corporal Brown," based on actual story of a 19-year-old U.S. Marine robbing a bank in Japan, with 20th-Fox.

Robert Sherman Into Hill Post at 20th-Fox

Robert Sherman, film buyer for Walter Reade-Sterling, is resigning to join 20th-Fox as branch operations manager, headquartering in the New York homeoffice. Post has been vacant since the death last year of Clarence Hill.

Sherman has been in the film industry more than 30 years, starting in the early 1930s as an auditor and film statistician for RKO Theatres. In 1951 he became film buyer for RKO and in 1958 joined the Walter Reade organization. He left Reade in 1960 to operate his own theatres and then to work with Allied Artists on the merchandising of "El Cid," rejoining Reade early this year.

is talking to nitery operators. There is also a possibility that Don Loper & Monte Proser will open a show with a stress on scanty dress at the former Diamond Horseshoe, but no deal has been made as yet.

The general consensus is that Judge Samuel I. Rosenman, head of the amusments section at the Fair, is driving the ladies from the Fair to New York itself. Showmen on the Stem feel that Broadway will profit by the Fair's exclusion policy.

Pink's Spanish-made "The Castilian" premiered recently in the U.S.A. under the Warner Bros. banner. hearings. United Artists has a new picture called "Johnny Cool" which is being sold with hefty emphasis on the Cosa Nostra in its ad campaign.

In the Boston area alone, there have been 16 dates set for "Capone" and "Pay" within the last few days and additional bookings are rolling in from various parts of the country. "Capone," which stars Rod Steiger and Fay Spain, is one of Allied's all-time top grossers. It was a 1959 release. "Pay" stars Ernest Borgnine and was first issued in 1960.

"Cool" just opened in Gotham last week but has played other cities around the country in the past few weeks. Despite generally weak reviews, the Peter Lawford production which stars Henry Silva and Elizabeth Montgomery, with guest appearances by Sammy Davis Jr., Joey Bishop and others has been doing oke biz behind the headlines and related campaign.

Columbus, Ga.—Martin Circuit's six Cinerama playdates of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's "How the West Was Won," passed the $1,000,000 mark, according to report from home office.

Bernard Kalb's Print-to-TV: 'Same Reporter, Only Technical Changes'

By MURRAY HOROWITZ

Bernard Kalb, CBS News Correspondent, in N. Y. for a possible "CBS Reports" on the Viet Nam situation and a short vacation, took time out from the chase to button Madame Nhu to recapitulate one year in which he's been operating CBS News' Southeast Asia and India bureau.

The Hong Kong based bureau was opened by Kalb in October, '62 and with cameraman Merle Severn, he's covered the Sino-Indian border war, cyclones in Pakistan, the Mt. Everest climb by Americans, the struggle for women's rights in Iran, and the complicated Viet Nam situation. Those were the highlights of the year, which also resulted in many sidebars like the "Children's Republic of Bali."

Being based a long way from the home of CBS News has its disadvantages, but according to Kalb, the distance also offers a freer hand to the correspondent on what is to be covered. While he was in South Korea, for example, he heard about the South Korean film industry and tried to do a story about motion picture making there.

"We," referring to cameraman Severn, "climbed a hill for about three hours, lugging camera equipment for filming of a scene to be filmed, only to have the girl cast, for some reason, not showing up that day." His other experiences were more fortunate.

As to what stories he does for CBS News other than the obvious headline yarns, Kalb says he works on the assumption that what interests him will interest other people. He was interested that the children of Bali lead an all permissive life, unaware of Mr. Spock and he tried out the idea to good results for CBS News.

The Hong Kong based correspondent is the brother of Marvin Kalb, onetime CBS News' Moscow correspondent and now dilpomatic correspondent for CBS News in Washington. People, even those at CBS News, are constantly getting the brothers mixed up.

Brother Bernard likes to tell this story. Just prior to joining CBS News, he had been on leave from the N. Y. Times and was on a lecture tour of the midwest. He said his ordinary luncheon speaking engagement would begin with the chairman introducing him as the man from the N. Y. Times who had spent many years in Indonesia. He would then talk about the situation in Asia and respond to questions. When it was all over "people inevitably would come over to me and say I've enjoyed your broadcasts so much from Moscow."

With a shake of his head, brother Bernard says he no longer tries to correct people. "It even happens when they log us at CBS News."

In a more serious vein, he com-

NBC's $1,000,000 Olympic Rundown

Tokyo, Oct. 8.

At a cost approximating $1,000,000, NBC-TV will cover the 1964 Summer Olympic Games here with a minimum of 19 separate shows totalling at least 14½ hours. NBC board chairman Robert W. Sarnoff made the statistical rundown at the formal signing ceremonies for the web's exclusive coverage of the 18th Olympiad by arrangement with NHK, the Japanese Broadcasting Corp. Tapes of event will be recorded in Tokyo and flown across the Pacific each day following the opening of the games on Oct 10, 1964.

Sarnoff said that seven hours of evening programming are slated with three of them on successive Sundays and two two-hour shows on consecutive Saturdays. It's expected that 10 nightly reports of 15 minutes each will be telecast by NBC during the two-week period of the games. A one-hour preview and forecast of the games will be carried by the web in September.

P. Lorillard Co., Texaco and Schlitz Brewing Co. have bought out NBC's Olympic coverage.

FCC HUDDLES WITH H'WOOD PRODUCERS

Hollywood, Oct. 8.

Washington and Hollywood views on tv were exchanged at a meeting between five of the six FCCommissioners and leading Hollywood vidpix execs, at Chasen's last week.

There were no conclusive results, but this was not the intent of the session, it was explained by participants. It provided an opportunity for the Hollywood filmmakers to meet with FCChairman Henry and his colleagues, and the evening was spent discussing various program trends and other aspects of tv programming.

Hollywood reps at the meeting were Screen Gems' Bill Dozier, who arranged it; 20th-Fox-TV production chief Bill Self; Four Star prexy Tom McDermott; Revue veepees-producers Roy Huggins and Dick Berg; documentary producer David Wolper; Screen Gems exec producer Harry Ackerman; MGM-TV exec producer Norman Felton, and T&L exec producer Sheldon Leonard.

RCA's 9-Month Alltime Peak In Profits & Sales

RCA hit alltime peak sales and earnings during the first nine months of 1963 with profits after taxes climbing 29% to $44,200,000. This compares with $34,400,000 in the same 1952 period.

Sales for the period rose 4% over the same period last year to $1,314,000. Earnings per share of common stock for the three quarters were a record $2.40 compared to last year's $1.88.

After-tax earnings in the third quarter were $14,800,000, an increase of 44% over the same period of 1962, on a sales volume of $436,700,000. This represents RCA's 10th consecutive period of profit improvement over the comparable period of the previous year.

RCA chairman David Sarnoff and president Elmer W. Engstrom ascribed the record earnings to the following principal factors:

(1) Mounting volume of tv set and picture tube sales, including a 65% increase in color receiver sales.

(2) A continued substantial rise in NBC earnings with profits for the nine months 70% ahead of the first nine months of 1962.

(3) Rapid progress towards profitable operations in RCA's electronic data processing business with the crossover into the black anticipated before the end of next year.

The two execs said that color in all its aspects will become a $1,000,000,000 dollar industry in 1964.

RCA's Government billings for defense and space for the nine months were $420,000,000, a decline of 9% from the $460,000,000 for the same period in 1962.

Westinghouse Pacts ABC-TV Daytime Buys

The Westinghouse portable appliance division, which returned to daytime television last March for the first time in 10 years, is expanding its campaign this fall on ABC-TV's daytime schedule. Sales push kicks off this month and runs through Dec. 20.

Westinghouse is adding "The Price Is Right" and "Trailmaster" to its participations in "Queen For A Day," "The Tennessee Ernie Ford Show" and "Who Do You Trust?"

Upjohn, meantime, has bought the full kickoff hour of ABC-TV's four-part "Saga of Western Man" series to be telecast Oct. 16. Upjohn had previously bought half of the four shows.

Murrow's Lung Surgery

Washington, Oct. 8.

Edward R. Murrow underwent successful surgery for the removal of his left lung because of a malignant tumor.

Murrow, currently head of the United States Information Agency, had the surgery performed at the Washington Hospital Center. A hospital spokesman said the surgeons removed the entire lung during a three-hour operation. He added that the former CBS News radio and tv commentator-reporter and v.p. was "recovering satisfactorily."

Fifty-five year old Murrow entered the hospital last Sunday for observation and tests after developing hoarseness and a sore throat.

McMillan Blasts Huntley Special On Negro in D.C.

Washington, Oct. 8.

The Southern Congressman who runs local affairs for D.C. blasted Chet Huntley's NBC documentary "The Negro in Washington."

Rep. John McMillan (D-S.C.) and chairman of the House District Committee said he didn't watch the program but had letters telling him "it was the most biased report they had ever heard broadcast over any television network."

McMillan said a committee clerk had talked with Huntley about the group which has been under fire from liberals and others for its alleged racism and general ignorance of urban problems.

"It is regrettable," McMillan said, "that the Chet Huntley program did not portray the actual facts that were given to him by the committee clerk."

He said as chairman of the District Committee he never allows civil rights or Negro questions to be discussed, "as we feel this is the prerogative of the House Judiciary Committee."

Praising the record of his group, McMillan said, "Still, commentators, the magazine writers and local newspapers continue to try to discredit and smear the members of the House District Committee."

He also submitted two letters criticizing the program from South Carolina lawyers. One praised McMillan for not going on the show. "I am sure," the letter said, "that you would have been subject to obnoxious cross-examination by a commentator for whom I have little respect. His colleague is no improvement."

Bristol-Myers' 'April in Paris'

Bristol-Myers Clairol has picked up the full tab for NBC-TV's special, "April in Paris Ball," to be telecast Sunday, Oct. 27, from 10 to 11 p.m. Names for the show are still being lined up. R. J. Reynolds has bought into "Lieutenant"; minute a week.

Chesebrough-Pond is moving into "Saturday Night At The Movies" from January through March. Farmers Insurance Group and Pennzoil Co. each bought one-quarter sponsorship in the web's coverage of the Junior Rose Bowl Game on Dec. 14. Maxwell House has bought participations in six NBC primetime shows in October and November.

NBC also made a last-minute sale of last Sunday night's (6) special, "A Man Called Mays," to Shell Oil and United Vintners.

MARS CANDY SETS BIG RADIO BUYS

Chicago, Oct. 8.

Mars Candy, which hasn't used the radio medium since the pre-television days when it sponsored "Dr. I.Q.," is going back to it in a big way with campaigns on the CBS, NBC and Mutual networks, plus spot schedules in 60 markets. In all, the series of audio blurbs developed by Stan Freberg will use more than 600 stations.

Can. Mounties on Track Of Kickback Allegations In CBC Film Operation

Toronto, Oct. 8.

Mounties are preparing a report, which will be ready in 10 days, on allegations that a kickback system is working in the Toronto setup of the Canadian Broadcasting Corp., with neither denials nor confirmation coming from CBC heads in Toronto. It concerns CBC-TV film operations.

A CBC spokesman stated that a disgruntled former CBC employee had based his charges rather than accept a transfer to another CBC job.

Said Keith Morrow, Toronto head of the English-language CBC-TV web, "information came to me that suggested it had to be validated; this is all I can say without getting anyone involved." But he insisted on calling in the Toronto headquarters of the The Royal Canadian Mounted Police as "normal procedure."

Inspector John Henry of the Toronto Mounties stated that the report would not be made public unless the CBC chooses to release it, that the Mounties "will report their findings to the CBC legal counsel as soon as the RCMP investigation is completed."

Ben Casey: 'Hey, Look at Trendex'

If the National Nielsens fall in line with the multi-city Trendex (at least the one for last Wednesday night), there could be more method than madness in ABC-TV's shifting of "Ben Casey" into the Wednesday 9 to 10 hour in competition with CBS-TV's "Beverly Hillbillies." For last week's Trendex pulled off the surprise of the season thus far — the score reading:

"Ben Casey" 24.3
"Hillbillies" 21.7

It reverses the picture of the previous two weeks, when "Beverly Hillbillies" was continuing at the No. 1 pace it had set last season.

As opposed to "Casey" and "Hillbillies," the premiering "Espionage" on NBC-TV could muster no better than 7.9 for the first half hour and 9.2 for the second half.

Holzer's 'Ghost Hunter'

Hans Holzer, ASCAP songsmith and expert on ghosts, has a new "Ghost Hunter" (or "Sixth Sense") teleseries in the hopper.

His book, "host Hunter," has just been published by Bobbs-Merrill and the videoseries would be based on it.

GOING LIVE CAN BE DEADENING

Dorso Should Be 'More So'

While the new 30-market Nielsen for the week ending Sept. 29 (though hardly definitive) points up some areas for ABC concern, none of them come from United Artists TV, which is supplying the network with three of its 14 new entries.

As a matter of fact, the three new ABC programs that qualified as No. 1 in audience throughout their time periods came out of the United Artists shop.

With "Outer Limits," Patty Duke and "Fugitive" the only three new shows copping the Nielsen honor role, UA's tv chieftain Dick Dorso shapes up as the ABC hero of the new season. (One Madison Ave. wit calls him "ABC's new Jack Warner for '63-'64.")

While Dorso and company have replaced Warner Bros. as a major ABC supplier, the UA boys are careful not to place all their program eggs in one network basket. They have another program, "East Side West Side" (a co-production deal with David Susskind-Dan Melnick) riding on CBS. And just to keep the new UA track record hot, this program is also leading its time period in 30-market audience returns.

Like In the U. S., British TV Also Second Guessing Season's Ratings

London, Oct. 8.

With the first trickle of ratings coming in from TAM (Television Audience Measurement), the inital weekend score looks as if things are all going ABC-TV's way. Latter commercial contractor, which packs its production punch into a Saturday and Sunday only operation in the North and Midlands, seems to have wrested the Sunday afternoon honors from BBC (which pioneered that time period for attracting the big audience) with "Life And Al Read."

Show, featuring Northern comic Al Read, scored ratings high in the 40s in its Sunday 4:05-4:35 p.m. berth which cued in even higher ratings for the following feature film slot. ABC's "Armchair Theatre" skein (9:35-10:35 p.m.) on the whole network, scored a boff 40-plus rating in the most keenly contested market, London, and went even higher around the country.

Standout feature of the first Saturday night ratings was the early success of ABC's "Thank Your Lucky Stars," "Comedy Bandbox" which went back-to-back from 6 p.m. and also racked up ratings high in the 40s. Later, ABC's fully networked "Avengers" (9:50 p.m.) dittoed.

Other major weekend contractor, ATV, which operates out of London Saturday and Sunday, according to early reports, has also done well against BBC competition. Perennial "Palladium" in Sunday night prime time maintained its big-draw status with ratings way over 40. On Saturdays, its new Carlos Thompson show "Sentimental Agent" bowed with a 40 which, considering how shy of new shows British viewers can be, is a rating designed to create glee in the heart of ATV's topper Lew

You Can't Win

When CBS-TV was the only network to carry the testimony of Joseph M. Valachi "live," it received a preponderance of calls from people complaining that the tv network was making a "hero" out of the convicted narcotics peddler, that they would rather watch the regular daytime shows, etc.

When CBS-TV after two days of being the only network to cover the Washington hearings "live" stopped and utilized the testimony in its regular news shows, it received a preponderance of calls from the public complaining that the web doing a disservice in not continuing its "live," uninterrupted coverage of the Valachi hearings.

'100 Grand' Axing Writes 'Finis' For Big Money Quiz

The quick folderoo of "100 Grand" on ABC-TV, despite a heavy promotional buildup, practically shuts the door on the return of the big money quiz. If the lure of somebody winning a $100,000 jackpot isn't enough to draw audiences, then maybe a $1,000,000 giveaway would turn the trick. But no sponsors are in sight who could afford such jackpots to sustain interest.

According to a student of the quiz and game show genre, producer Gil Cates, who's worked on "Camouflage," "Haggis Baggis" and "Picture This," the money motif isn't enough to get ratings. He sees the current game show cycle depending on personalities, pointing to such shows as "You Don't Say," "Password," "Missing Lnk" and "The Price Is Right." Most of these shows also give dialers a chance to participate in the proceedings.

Cates said that the fact that "100 Grand" was rig-proof had no bearing on its fate. He pointed out that on the first stanza of the show the two amateur contestants won. That result, he said, would also have been the objective of a rigged operation to build suspense. But the ratings on the second show, instead of climbing, went down and spelled doom for the series.

FINDING IT OUT THE HARD WAY

By GEORGE ROSEN

It would appear that ABC-TV is finding out the hard way that you can't have a pennant-winning network without good live shows, any more than you can clinch a World Series without good pitching.

The fast-fast-fast demise of the live "100 Grand" top money quiz show, the indifferent 30-city Nielsen returns (even though still inconclusive) on the costly and ambitious Jerry Lewis two-hour Saturday night entry, and the Jimmy Dean hour, all with multi-million dollar sponsor investments, testify to the fact, until such time that ABC acquires the showmanship ability to produce a "live" show worth its Nielsen salt, then l-i-v-e will spell itself out backwards in casting the Nielsen e-v-i-l eye on the network.

In the view of key tv experts, "live" is the "evil" influence that has depressed ABC's average evening Nielsen ratings (in the 30-market report for the week ending Sept. 29), in the second week of its new schedule, with the tv industry thinking focussed on the reason rather than the trend per se.

On this score the Madison Ave. experts are agreed that had ABC clicked in its live show innings, its remaining power—largely concentrated in the early evening Monday-thru-Friday area—might have enabled ABC to shade NBC for second place honors in the competitive 30-market Nielsen stakes.

The concern transcends initial (and far from definitive) disappointing 30-market Nielsens. More fundamentally, it reflects a "live"-oriented advertiser who would rather pay $6.00 per thousand homes for the kind of "live" excitement that abounds on NBC and CBS than $4.00 per thousand for "film" formats. Nor is the problem overlooked at ABC's hqs. from which prexy Tom Moore last week closed-circuited his affiliates in words that frankly acknowledged the web's multi-million dollar "live" headaches. In referring to them, Moore said: "Now, we have been working very hard this week, and I appreciate many of your comments that you sent me about the Jimmy Dean show. It's very encouraging that you agree with us that this is a tremendous personality, but neither Bob Banner nor we feel that we have yet got the exact attack for his show."

Moore oulined a series of production moves so that, in his words, "we'll really have something with Mr. Dean that we can all be pleased with." Two days later, the Jimmy Dean "live" show again lost audience vis-a-vis NBC and CBS in the overnight N.Y. Nielsens.

Moore made it clear, however, that ABC not only intends to ride with Dean but will acually increase he number of "live" shows on the schedule. For while Moore frankly confessed to affiliates the "problem" of ABC "live" shows, he asserted that "we feel as you, and many of you have told me, that we have got to get more live personality type shows as a fixture on our network."

Within hours after the close-circuit, ABC cancelled "100 Grand" on which program Moore said: "In the interest of being open and honest with you on . . . 100 Grand . . . we are faced with a complete new start. But please be assured that we are spending a great deal of time discussing and working on the problem that this new show poses to us." (Problem was resolved, as Moore pointed out in a followup close-circuit talk on Monday with the acquisition of a "Laughs For Sale" comedy panel show).

On the new Jerry Lewis show Moore said: "Don't let anybody get you despaired about this Jerry Lewis show. This is going to be a tremendous asset." Moore alluded to "those millions of hours that Ed Scherick and Ted Fetter spent out there (Hollywood) on this problem, and the cooperation that we got out

Stanton: 'We'll Soon Be Planning Two Years Ahead Instead of One'; CBS Makes Its Choices For '64-'65

Almost Live

A lot of people must have been wondering why CBS-TV made a last-minute switch on the Sunday night Judy Garland show, with the Barbra Streisand segment substituting for the George Maharis seg.

It so happens that the CBS twin tycoons, Bill Paley and Frank Stanton, while on the Coast last Friday, sat in on the taping of the show. They liked what they saw so much that the program dept. took its cue from there and moved pronto. Maharis seg will run later.

Out of last week's "meeting of the minds" at CBS Television City in Hollywood, presided over by board chairman Bill Paley and corporate prexy Frank Stanton, have come some definitive actions, conclusions and incepting of patterns which could have a profound impact on both Hollywood and the tv industry.

Overall theme of the two-day (and it was practically uninterrupted) meeting at which were assembled both the east and west coast key command, including tv network prexy Jim Aubrey and program topper Mike Dann, was "What do we pilot for '64-'65?" By Friday night CBS not only knew, after sifting some 25 or 30 projects, which 12 shows it was going to ride with next season (although it may not need more than eight of them), but in a broader sense triggered a "modus operandi" for tv network future, to wit:

—It's Stanton's estimate that, perhaps much sooner than the industry expects, the television networks will not only have to program a year in advance (as it is now doing) but fully two years ahead to keep pace with competition and the quest for quality;

—A whole new school of independent creators for tv, wholly divorced from the major studios, is coming to the fore, evidenced by the CBS "command performance" and the pilots winning favor.

—Scrapping tradition, the CBS hierarchy bypassed completely the Bob Weitmans of MGM, the Lew Wassermans of Revue and all the other "majors" (signifying their total absence from next season's CBS schedule) in favor of these "new independents." As CBS called into roundtable session the Martin Ritts, the Jackie Coopers, the Robert Alan Aurthurs, the Matthew Rapfs, the Bob Amateaus, the Jay Wards, the Bill Amhoffs, the Jim Moshers, etc., CBS revealed a new technique in acquiring properties—dealing direct with the writers and the line producers and their creative staffs. "These are the guys who will give you the answers you're looking for" summed up the CBS sentiment.

At any rate, CBS has cast the die for '64-'65. Pilots will be in by the first of the year.

Goulet CBS Pact: $24,500,000 As 4-Year Potential

Hollywood, Oct. 8.

In the midst of rehearsals for his motion picture bow in Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's Pandro Berman production "His and His," Robert Goulet revealed plans to activate his Rogo Productions pact with CBS next year under a deal where he is prepping a musical series that could pay his company a total of $24,500,000 over four years.

Rogo, in which Goulet is partnered with his manager, Norman Rosemont, will totally produce the series, probably with a format similar to Perry Como or Andy Williams. Performer said they will spend lavishly within the figure they are being paid by CBS in order to make it a "first class series." In the meantime, he has deal for one CBS hour special, "The Robert Goulet Hour," now prepping.

Singer is committed to Metro for "His" through Christmas, will sing three songs in the picture. Sammy Cahn and Jimmy Van Heusen are penning tunes, along with one Robert Morse will sing and one designed as a dance for Nancy Kwan. Goulet sings title song over the credits.

Although Metro owns MGM Records, company has released two of the tunes for Goulet to record as singles under his exclusive Columia pact. Singer just completed a "Robert Goulet On Tour" album, recorded in Chicago,

Mark Goodson Carries Out Threat, Quits Acad

Mark Goodson says he and about 15 people in the Goodson-Todman organization have carried out their promise to resign in protest from the National Academy of Television Arts and Sciences.

The ire of the Goodson-Todman organization was aroused when the Academy dropped as a category for a possible Emmy in '63-'64 "Outstanding Program Achievement in the Field of Panel, Quiz or Audience Participation." In toto, for the coming year, there will be 27 categories, none of which encompasses quiz games and audience participation shows.

Goodson said he has received a communication from the Academy trying to explain its position, a communication which he found unsatisfactory. He said Mort Werner of the Academy expressed an interest in sitting down with Goodson and talking about the matter further. Goodson said he would talk to the Academy people, but saw little hope at this time for a resolution of their differences.

'Laughs For Sale' Into '100G' Slot

ABC-TV is going with a comedy panel show Sunday nights at 10 as successor to the defunct "100 Grand" quizzer. It's called "Laughs For Sale" and is out of the Revue shop. Premiere date is Oct. 20.

This is the same show which was kicking around the networks last season and for a while was in serious contention as a '63-'64 starter. Emcee is Hal March and the pilot panel included such names as Buddy Hackett, Joey Bishop, Sheldon Leonard and Allan Sherman. However, the pilot will not be used as the ABC kicker-offer.

The "100 Grand" sponsors, Alberto Culver and Consolidated Cigar, will ride with the new one. Consolidated, however, is shifting part of its "100 Grand" commitment to NBC-TV's "Richard Boone Show."

NBC-TV's 'ISD'

NBC-TV will start pilot production of a new science-fiction series "I.S.D." (Institute of Scientific Defense) during the week of Oct. 21. Film is based on a concept created by Robert Barbash, writer and producer of the pilot script, "The Prelude."

NBC Productions will film the pilot at Paramount Studios.

Pinter Play Generates Major Excitement as Prix Italia TV Festival Attracts 26 Countries

By BOB HAWKINS

Naples, Oct. 8.

The 15th "Italia Prize" which wound up last night with the announcement of prizes (see separate list), was generally felt to have been a success in the quality of work displayed, the growing number of participating countries (26) and organizations (33), and the precision organization, which won special praise, among others, from Peter J. Heller, Audio-Visual Division Chief of Rome's U.S. Embassy, here as observer. Harold Pinter, Eugene Ionesco and others flew in in time to accept awards in person.

To dispel misunderstandings from the start, it's worth noting for the record that though the "Italia Prize" is held every year in a different Italian location, and was originally set up by RAI-TV, the Italian telenet, in 1948, with RAI serving as secretariat ever since, it is actually an international organization and event supported by contributions by all participants, and not, as some still believe, an Italian (RAI-TV) sponsored and or dominated event. In fact, in the manner of the UN, a different president is named every year, and from a different participating nation.

Similarly, the jury is composed of selected delegates from participating companies or nets, with the natural exclusion of reps of outfits with an item in competition for that particular category.

Basically, therefore, the "Italia Prize" is a high-level public relations gathering on a worldwide level on the occasion of which an annual set of prizes is awarded.

So independent and exclusive is this conclave, in fact, that this is only the third year that the press has been invited in to see the competing entries-although in separate sessions and with as little contact as possible with the delegates and delegations. This situation, apparently desired by a part of the participating countries to allow distraction-less meetings and to prevent advance leaks of prize results, has naturally triggered considerable ill-feeling among the assembled tv critics and observers, some of whom have likened it to a "quarantine". There are some movements afoot to break down these barriers, but progress is slow.

Some 40-odd critics attended, including two U.S., German, Swedish, British, and others, plus a large Italian delegation which gave top local dailies several columns each on the local going-on, but mostly (due to almost complete lack of contact with delegates, authors, etc.) on the quality of entries seen in a vast high-ceilinged salon of the Naples Royal Palace, (and in which the small screen seemed tinier than ever.)

The awards were generally well received, and there were few if any cries of injustice done.

Consensus was generally in favor of one of the Italian winners, Virgilio Sabel's "History of the Atomic Bomb", a detailed exposition of past, present, and future aspects of the great menace, touching scientific but also human Stateside interviews are included, and the entire effort is important as well as grimly interesting. The other prize copped by RAI-TV was for "Cavalleria Rusticana" a ballet by Susana Egri with original music by Mario Migliardi, in which the famed duel is updated in style if not in content.

Denmark's "The Lesson", from a scenario by Eugene Ionesco, with music by Georges Delerue and choreography by Flemming Flindt, was another easy winner in the musical drama class. It tells of a dance master who terps himself into a frenzy, eventually strangling his pupil. It's an expert blend of the various media involved, an effective half-hour item.

But it was Harold Pinter's "The Lover", submitted by Britain's Associated Rediffusion via ITA ITCA, which garnered the most excited comments, due not only to the brilliant dialog and acting, but also especially because of the outspokenness, and high-level irony with which this spoof of de-

Abbe Lane, Xavier Cugat Settle Suit Vs. NBC

Abbe Lane and Xavier Cugat settled their $700,000 negligence suit against NBC, pending since 1957, for an undisclosed amount Monday (7) when the action came before N. Y. Supreme Court Justice Henry Clay Greenberg.

The Cugats, who appeared on a NBC show, "Studio K3," in 1957, sued over an injury suffered by Miss Lane. She claimed that the injury was caused by the failure of NBC to provide sufficient hallway lighting.

BBC-TV's Vidtape Of 'Most Unique Hamlet' of All'

London, Oct. 8.

BBC-TV, which in its near 30-year history has racked up many firsts in tv achievements, has just wound production on another project which seems distined to rank among tv's most notable events. It is the Anglo-Danish co-production of "Hamlet."

The project has been vidtaped at Kronberg Castle, Elsinore, Denmark—the actual setting of the Shakespearean drama — and has been brought in under the direction of Philip Saville in conjunction with producer Peter Luke. Play stars Christopher Plummer in the title role with other leading roles going to June Tobin, Jo Maxwell Muller, Alec Clunes and Robert Shaw.

Idea for the 150-minute drama shot on actual location was put up to BBC by the Danish radio and tv service who offered to organize the technical facilities if BBC provided the cast and production team. BBC's nod sparked production of what must be the most unique "Hamlet" of all time.

The show was brought in via

NBC's Rylander Touring People, Alligators, Lion And Even Some Meekrats

NBC's promo v.p. Al Rylander is sending eight personalities plus a South American toucan, a lion cub, alligators, a condor and several meekrats, on cross-country jaunts for guest appearances in New York and other key cities to promote their respective new season network shows.

Among the NBC stars for guest shots in New York are Joey Bishop, who will head a "Joey Bishop Show" troupe including Abby Dalton and Mary Treen, scheduled to arrive in New York from Hollywood Oct. 17. Before arriving in New York for guest appearances on "Today," "Tonight," "Concentration," "Missing Links" and "Say When" plus Monitor and local radio programs in addition to press interviews with magazine and newspaper representatives, the trio will make guest appearances in Washington Tuesday (14) and in Boston (15).

Joseph Cotten, host of NBC-TV's "Hollywood and The Stars," is in the midst of a week's appearances in New York, returning to Hollywood by the weekend.

Raymond Massey is scheduled to arrive in New York Oct. 21 for a four-day series of appearances in behalf of "Dr. Kildare." On Oct. 25, Massey will be guest speaker at a meeting of the American Medical Association in Washington.

James Drury just completed a three-city tour, in Richmond, Washington and New York, for "The Virginian."

Marlin Perkins, host of "Wild Kingdom," (color series featuring films of wild animals and primitive peoples) and his aide, James Fowler, are due to arrive in New York over the weekend in advance of the show's new season premiere, Sunday, Oct. 20. Perkins will also bring with him, for guest appearances, such animals as a South American toucan, a lion cub, alligators, a condor and several meekrats. Following his New York stay from Oct. 14 thru 16, Perkins and Fowler will take off for an African safari in search of new material for "Wild Kingdom."

Andy Williams, star of "The Andy Williams Show" will arrive in N. Y. from Hollywood Oct. 29 for a three-day round of appearances.

U.S. Draws a Blank

Naples, Oct. 8.

British, Danish, and Italian entries won the top video awards at the 15th annual Prix Italia, an international competition jointly sponsored (and financed) by 33 different radio and tv organizations from the world over.

French and Japanese radio entries monopolized prizes in the radio sector, with other honors going to items submitted by Belgium and by Switzerland.

The U.S.A., this year repped not only by the Broadcast Foundation of America (B.F.A.), but for the first time by entries submitted directly by ABC, CBS, and NBC, drew a blank, though some items came close to winning. (Yank entries were only in the tv section.)

The U.S. track record at the Prix Italia is not a brilliant one. Only one American entry copped a top prize: Donald B. Hyatt's "The Real West," in 1961. Other minor awards were won by Yanks in 1962 and 1956. Jury, which this year included a larger number of Americans than before, is made up of delegates from various participating nets and/or countries, with those entering a pic in a particular section of prize contest naturally forbidden from voting in that section.

Awards, announced in Naples' Capodimonte Royal Palace in presence of Italy's Minister of Communications as well as RAI-TV toppers and delegation members of the 26 nations (33 nets) participating, were given as follows:

"The Lesson," presented by the Danish Radio-tv net (DSR), with direction by Paul Preben Montell, won the prize for the best original musical presentation, with Italy's "Cavalleria Rusticana" (RAI-TV) winning the "City of Naples" prize in the same category.

Harold Pinter's "The Lover," an Associated Rediffusion production presented here by Britain's Independent Television Authority and Independent Television Companies Association, won as best dramatic presentation.

Italy's "Story of the Atomic Bomb" (RAI-TV), directed by Virgilio Sabel, ran off with documentary honors.

Radio kudos were as follows: Musical works award to Claude Prey's French (RTF) entry, "The Revelatory Heart" and to Umihiko Ito's Japanese contender, "The True Color of the Sky." In the drama section, the radio prize went to Michel Cournot's "Boys of the Tribunal," presented by RTF, and to Naoya Uchimura's Japanese entry, "A Marine Story—The Fisherman." Belgium won in the documentary class with E. Henceval and Philippe Dasnoy's "Sercq, The Last Western Feudalism," which Switzerland won in the special stereo-radio class with Pierre Walker's "The Refusal."

Yank tv entries, none of which received official recognition, though several won favorable press and other comment here, were: "The Labirynth" by Giancarlo Menotti (NBC); "Five Characters in Search of an Exit," by Rod Serling (CBS); "The Silent Spring of Rachel Carson" (CBS); "The Kremlin" (BFA); "The Vatican" (ABC).

'STAY OUT OF OUR BUSINESS'

The Big Yen for Madame Nhu

In all the jostling of the networks and indie stations for "exclusive" shows with Madame Ngo Dinh Nhu upon her arrival in the U.S. this week, ABC-TV walked off with the first fullscale interview with the controversial lady from South Viet Nam on the "Issues and Answers" show last Sunday (6). ABC correspondents Lisa Howard and Lou Cioffi taped the interview with Madame Nhu in Paris last Friday (4) in order to beat the other network shows planned for next Sunday (13). Madame Nhu, who insisted on being interviewed in her Paris hotel at big expense to ABC, was fulfilling a commitment she had made a few months ago to Charles P. Arnot, ABC's Southeast Asia correspondent.

Madame Nhu is due for more concentrated tv coverage during her stay in the U.S. than even Soviet Premier Khurshchev received on his visit to this country a few years ago. WOR-V has slated a one-hour interview with her tonight (Wed.) with Joseph Newman, of the N.Y. Herald Tribune, and reporter William Haddad. NBC has her pencilled in for the "Today" show Friday (11) and WNBC-TV, the web's N.Y. flagship, is devoting an "Open Mind" stanza to her. NBC's "Meet The Press" also is planning a session with Madame Nhu Sunday (13). CBS-TV which had her down as guest on "Face The Nation" the same day, cancelled; net's Diel Salant figured that much coverage no longer made her Nhu.

David Susskind entered the fray with a two-hour chat with Madame Nhu to be aired tonight (Wed.) on WPIX, N.Y. WPIX is scheduling the interview to beat the WOR-TV presentation by a couple of hours.

Radio's Gotta Feed Meaty Info Into Agency Computers: Maneloveg

Radio has got to come up with some meaty information for those hungry ad agency computers, or it will become strictly second class in an advertisers media mix.

That's what Herb Maneloveg, veepee and media director of BBDO, told the radio execs attending CBS Radio Spots Sales annual Station Clinic last week. He said agencies "desperately" need demographic facts and figures and research on the impact of radio commercials so that clients can be supplied with the basis of including radio in campaigning.

Radio, he said, suffers from no image and no profile, and the two important rating services covering the medium — Pulse and Hooper — leave much to be desired. Hooper he decribed as nothing more than a "quick, telephone popularity contest" restricted to telephone homes and metropolitan areas, while Pulse offers some demographic info in the very top markets.

A big mistake of the radio industry, he said, was supplying research for time buyers when the man at the agency to reach (the decision maker) is the planner. The planner, he said, is that strange young man out of Harvard business school, or stolen from P&G, who wants information he can show the client to prove radio's use in a campaign.

Maneloveg, whose agency ranks second for radio spending (N. W. Ayer is first), says BBDO is one of the few agencies that has a computer, and is probably the agency that uses it. Most needed radio info, he says, is the age, sex, occupation and family size of listeners, and a breakdown of listening to quarter and half hours.

This extensive research, he said, should be an industry project, since its too expensive for a single station. He feels sure major agencies will pick up part of the tab. Any of the major research outfits can do it, including Pulse, but it's vitally important for the radio medium that it be done sometime in the next year.

Paar's $4,000,000 Bid For TV Station

Jack Paar will emerge as a television station owner if his bid of $4,000,000 for WMTW-TV, Mt. Washington, N.H., is accepted. WMTW-TV, an ABC affiliate, operates from the highest point in the east and covers much of Maine, Vermont and New Hampshire. An FM stereo outlet is part of the package.

Paar would be barred from performing on WMTW-TV under his contract with NBC which still has another year to go after the current season. That is, if he gets the station. There are two other bidders in the picture.

Barry's No. 1 Rolls

Hollywood, Oct. 8.

The first of the five pilots being produced under the new CBS-Paramount TV development program started rolling before the cameras last night (Mon.) under the supervision of exec producer Jack Barry. Show has a panel format with Bob Crane, Herschel Bernardi, Joanna Barnes and Jayne Meadows. Game involves guessing about various contestants who have been selected in advance.

Barry said he will attempt to deliver one pilot a month.

Sarnoff in Tokyo Bid for a Global B'dcasting Setup

Tokyo, Oct. 8.

NBC board chairman Robert E. Sarnoff at a press conference here last (Mon.), said: "It is no longer fanciful to predict that within the next five to 10 years an audience of a billion persons, spread around the earth, might be watching the same program at the same time. And in a world where half the population is illiterate and semi-literate, no others means of communication can equal television's impact upon the human mind."

Sarnoff said he favored "a worldwide organization of broadcasters committed to maintaining free and open channels among nations, capable of dealing with the numerous problems and details inherent in the free and continuing international circulation of information and programs. An important function of such an organization would be the operation of an information center from which any broadcaster could learn what programs—live or recorded — were available in the world market or needed in those countries where production resources are limited."

Sarnoff noted that the last time he visited Japan there were 2,500,000 tv sets in this country. Now there are over five times that number, reflecting the rapid gorwth of Japan's technology and "electronic artistry."

Sarnoff said that in the U. S. color tv was "booming," predicting that over 750,000 color sets would be sold this year and twice that total next year. "Color promises to be the principal consumer growth industry in the U. S. in this decade," he said.

Sarnoff has been in Tokyo to sign an agreement with NHK for the exclusive tv rights to the 1964 Summer Olympic Games. (See separate story).

BLITZ OF BEEFS ON COM'L LIMITS

Washington, Oct. 8.

FCC's request for comments on its proposed commercial time limits was answered with a blitz of angry objections.

From the webs, big leaguer state associations and lawyers down to the smallest market stations, more than 100 complaints descended on the Commission.

Through the avalanche two messages to the Commission came out loud and clear: "Read your Constitution," and "If you think you have troubles now, wait until you try and enforce and make workable your ill-conceived venture into our private enterprise."

The complaints took all forms, ranging from one-page sheets of denunciation of Federal power filed by small station owners to the 71-page tome of Storer Broadcasting Company.

With an occasional adaptation or suggestion, most of the complaints took one or more of NAB's five arguments against the curbs. They were: FCC doesn't have Congressional authority; the Commission would involve itself in a station's private business affairs; FCC is prohibited from common carrier rate regulation of broadcasting; the rules run afoul of the First Amendment; self regulation would be doomed and the consequences to the public interest would be "tragic."

Only One Assent

The one comment favoring time limits was offered by Clara Logan, prez of the National Assn. for Better Radio and TV, based in Los Angeles.

The Oklahoma Congressional delegation backed the statement of their state Broadcasters Assn. against the curbs.

CBS called the proposed rules "unworkable" and said they would involve FCC "in virtually every aspect of a station's operation."

NBC said commercial time standards "best lend themselves to self-regulation," and warned against putting time limits "in today's rigid mold" through Federalizing them.

The net rejected FCC's premise that Codes were the "culmination of consideration and experience," saying that statement "dramatically illustrates the erroneous thinking" of the original notice.

ABC delved into a long explanation of the First Amendment to back up its opposition. The web also warned the limits would cause stations to make cutbacks which

Ingalls In Policy Row With ABC-TV, Quits 'McPheeters'

Hollywood, Oct. 8.

Don Ingalls, producer if MGM-TV's "The Travels of Jamie McPheeters" series on ABC-TV, resigned over the weekend because of "creative and artistic differences with the network on what constitutes 'The Travels of Jamie McPheeters'," he revealed.

Ingalls said his action was motivated because ABC-TV is "not going to do the series from the book on which it is based. Instead they plan a combination of 'Wagon Train' and the old style western. A network can't dictate artistic policy—not to me," he commented.

Producer said ABC-TV bought the pilot, which was "pure 'McPheeters'," then decided to change the format. "The network stepped in, and there was utter chaos," he remarked.

Ingalls had been producer of the series for a couple of months, succeeding the late Robert Sparks. Previously, he had been associate producer on the show, and prior to that had been producer of "Have Gun—Will Travel," and some segs of "The Virginian."

Where Sydney Newman Goes, So Go Producers, Directors, Writers

London, Oct. 8.

When BBC-TV acquired the services last January of its present head of drama, Sydney Newman, it picked up not only the most noted dramatic producer in British tv at the moment, but bought the magnet which attracts some of the weightiest of dramatic talent in this burg.

Since Newman's switchover in January, producers, directors and scripters hitherto associated with Newman at ABC-TV — a station for whom Newman established a prime reputation for drama — have also made the change from the weekend-only indie to the seven-days-a-week BBC web.

To start with Peter Luke, previously with Newman as script editor on "Armchair Theatre" at ABC (and subsequently as producer of ABC's 'Tempo") has now landed a top dramatic job at BBC, namely, as producer in charge of the "Festival" series of "spectacular" plays.

Verity Lambert, a production assistant at ABC-TV a while back (on "Armchair Theatre"), now gets her big break as producer on BBC's 52-week serial "Dr. Who." Irene Shubik, story editor of the "Armchair Theatre" skein, has quit ABC-TV to join BBC-TV in November as a story editor.

Directors like William (Ted) Kotcheff, Philip Saville and Charles Jarrott, who were three of ABC's "big four" contract directors, have now turned freelance and are working or have worked on Newman's new "First Night" and "Festival" drama projects. Alan Cooke, fourth of ABC's more notable directorial talents, also turns freelance at the end of the week, though it is not known yet whether he, too, will run to the Newman camp. Although these freelance directors still pact with the indie station for certain shows, the important point is that BBC or, more strictly, Newman, is siphoning off at least a half share of the talent which once was exclusive to ABC-TV.

Mood goes for writers, too, Alun Owen, for instance, is now scripting for BBC. Before he was ABC's boy. Others have made the switch, too.

Stanley Praeger Helms 'Kibbie Hates Fitch'

Hollywood, Oct. 8.

Stanley Praeger has been named producer - director of "Kibbee Hates Fitch," half-hour comedy pilot being readied by UA-TV and creator Neil Simon for NBC-TV, for 1964-65.

Praeger, who directs "The Patty Duke Show" for UA TV, was set for the pilot by Cy Fisher of the Frank Cooper agency. Project, to be shot in N. Y., is about a couple of firemen. Robert Alan Aurthur is exec producer.

4 Star's '62-'63 $22,076,740 Biz; Net Earnings Up

Hollywood, Oct. 8.

Four Star Television's net earnings after taxes, including nonrecurring income, for the '62-'63 fiscal year totaled $793,501 or $1.25 per share based on the 634,505 common shares outstanding at June 29, 1963, the end of the fiscal year.

In the previous year fiscal net profit after taxes was $734,077 or $1.20 per share on the 611,250 common shares outstanding at June 30, 1962.

Executives stated that the nonrecurring income was a tax free payment of $500,000 from a company-held insurance policy on the life of Dick Powell, former board chairman and one of Four Star's founders. Also reflected in fiscal '62-'63 earnings was a substantial writeoff of cost incurred in the development of a number of properties and pilot films over the last few years.

Four Star, according to prexy Thomas J. McDermott and exec v.p. George A. Elber, has evolved from almost entirely a producer of network tv shows, to a company successfully embarked in tv syndication, feature production, and, to a lesser degree, music publishing, records and albums.

He said that Four Star Distribution Corp., the syndie subsid, since it began full operations in Sept., 1962, to the close of the past fiscal year, recorded about $5,000,000 in sales.

Total gross of the company for the '62-'63 fiscal year was reported at $22,076,740 vs. $19,962,980 the previous fiscal year. Execs McDermott and Elber stated: "It is our belief that the substantial broadening of our operations should result in improved performance of the company on a longrange basis. To a certain extent, both '62-'63 and the current fiscal years can be considered transitional in nature and we shall begin to accrue the full benefit of our activities in the '64-'65 fiscal year and beyond."

700G SLASHED FROM FCC BUDGET REQUEST

Washington, Oct. 8.

The House Appropriations Committee cut $700,000 from FCC's money request, it was disclosed Monday (7).

President Kennedy's budget called for $16,500,000 for the commission. In trimming this to $15,800,000 the appropriations committee followed the recommendation of its independent offices subcommittee.

The committee's action would provide 20 of the 95 additional employees requested by FCC.

The amount voted by the committee was $894.450 over FCC's $14,950,550 appropriation last year.

The committee's report faces a House vote Thursday.

FCC Talks Up A 4th Network

Washington, Oct. 8.

A fourth network may be in tv's future, FCC predicted to Congress.

In testimony before the House Appropriations Subcommittee on Independent Offices, released Sunday, FCC said there may be a big enough batch of independent tv stations to support a new web.

FCC was testifying on its $16,500,000 budget request last March. Since Newton Minow was chairman then and doing most of the talking, the testimony may have some aspects of a dead letter.

When asked by Rep. Joe Evins (D-Tenn.) if the prospect for four networks was better than the prospect for two, Minow replied "I do." He told Evins FCC wouldn't look with favor on a merger of three webs into two. He noted FCC wants competition and referring to the three nets said, "They are all doing pretty well."

Replying to questions from Rep. Harold Ostertag (R-N. Y.) Minow said, "I would anticipate that there will develop another network or form of independent program service for independent stations." He said the web might be a combination of UHF and VHF stations.

Rep. Edward P. Boland (D-Mass.) wondered if this would be economically practical and Minow replied, "It depends on your view of the general economy. We are adding three million people a year

'Outer Limits' Orbits Into Cleve. Jam

Cleveland, Oct. 8.

Irate viewers, "by the hundreds" jammed the switchboard of WEWS, the two Cleveland dailies, the Akron Beacon Journal and even the opposition tv stations when the Scripps Howard outlet eliminated appearances of the monster in the showing (30) of ABC's "The Architects of Fear" on "Outer Limits."

The station already had gone on record in saying it would prescreen all episodes scheduled for the 7:30 p.m. showing since it feared reaction on moppet watching. On Sept. 16, WEWS moved the show to 9 p.m. for a more adult audience. A similar move on the Sept. 30th stanza was not possible because the 'net made a program switch in sending the film on Saturday. "It was impossible" said Dave Arnold, WEWS spokesman, "to make an adjustment because of program schedules' sponsors, etc., so we deleted several appearances of the monster in the last minutes of the program. The reaction we got was not in method, but in deleting. Our viewers felt the whole show should have been moved."

The monster clip was subsequently shown on the station's 11 p.m. news while the local press gave it much prominence.

The entire question of "Outer Limits" being shown in moppet time is reported being under close discussion by ABC affiliates.

Don Perris, WEWS assistant general manager, said "I don't expect this thing to happen again. We are not anti-monster except for the excessively repulsive types."

Philly Educ'l TV Sets Precedent With Live Opera Preem From Acad

Philadelphia, Oct. 8.

First live telecast of an opera from the stage of the Academy of Music will be the Philadelphia Grand's initial performance of the season, Puccini's "Turandot," starring Birgit Nilsson, over WHYY-TV, Oct. 16.

The precedent-setting telecast over the city's new educational station is being made possible by cooperation of the artists, unions, opera company officials two local tv outlets, WCAU-TV and WFIL-TV, and station WOR, Newark, representing some $70,000 worth of free talent.

The Philadelphia Grand's production will make no concessions to television other than the placing of six strategic cameras. Miss Nilsson has barred closeups while singing. Telecast will start at 7:30 with Paul Taylor covering opening night activities and an explanation of the opera by Joseph Bonaduce.

No money is involved in projeet with everyone donating services. No mention of the telecast was made until it was certain house would be a sellout.

The unions cooperating include AGMA, AFTRA, Local 77, AFM, and the IATSE. WCAU-TV is lending the educational outlet its remote crew with three cameras. WFIL-TV has provided director Edward Moore, and WOR is sending in its audio crew which handles the Metopera's "Broadcasts of the Air," along with special equipment.

The telecast will be further complicated by lack of a run-through or rehearsal of the entire company before air time.

$8,000,000 KOVR Sale to McClatchy

KOVR, Metromedia's station in Stockton-Sacramento, has been sold to the McClatchy Newspapers for about $8,000,000, subject to FCC approval. Metromedia acquired KOVR from the Gannett newspaper chain in 1960 for $3,500,000.

John W. Kluge, Metromedia prexy, said KOVR was sold in order to permit the acquisition of another tv station in a larger metropolitan market. Metromedia currently owns VHF stations in New York, Los Angeles, Washington and Kansas City, and UHF outlets in Peoria and Decatur, Ill.

Gordon To WNEW-TV

Dave Gordon has joined WNEW-TV, N.Y., as publicity and exploitation director. Gordon had been with Screen Gems for the past year.

It's a new spot at WNEW-TV since Phil Cowan, public relations v.p. for Metropolitan Broadcasting, had also been handling p.r. for the chain's flagship station.

Allied Artists Sales

Allied Artists Television reports new station deals on its "Bowery Boy," "Science Fiction" and "Cavalcade" packages.

Among the 10 markets inking for the 48 Bowery Boys features are: WBKB, Chicago; WBAP, Ft. Worth; and WMCT, Memphis. Science fiction pix were bought by WFIL, Philadelphia; WKBW, Buffalo; WNHC, Hartford-New Haven; WNBF, Binghamton; and WWLP, Springfield, Mass., among others.

ITC Vs. Four Star: Depends on What Product You Sell

Hard economic factors today bar any significant resurgence of first-run product for syndication, according to Len Firestone, v.p. and general manager of Four Star Distribution Corp.

In a rebuttal to Mike Nidorf, board chairman of Independent Television Corp., who saw a resurgence of first-run syndication, as opposed to off-network product, Firestone said:

"Producing a first-run series for syndication is basically a question of dollars. You have to put as much money into a syndicated series as into a network show in order to really compete. Before starting a series slated for first-run, you must have a guarantee of a block of sales in the form of a big regional sponsor or a lineup of stations. Only then is it sensible to put up the dollars for stars and production necessary for quality series."

Firestone said he would "welcome the comeback of first-run syndication. The problem that must first be solved is a question of economics," adding that when that problem is solved, Four Star would go into the first-run syndication field.

Four Star and ITC, in their key selling activities, find themselves with different product. Four Star has off-network product; ITC, which is owned by Associated Television, of England, with first-run product for the American market. Firestone and Nidorf, in their appraisal of the current market and their forecast of the future, find their views differing on a number of key factors.

Nidorf feels that the off-network hours have bombed in the ratings. Firestone, in rebuttal, says in general, hours and half-hours, "according to the ARB and Nielsens our off-network shows have been outrating many network series."

PRODUCERS CITE BROADER APPEAL

A long, uphill struggle to win a place on the tv screen for foreign product, ranging from the muscle pix of Steve Reeves to the art pix like India's "Panther Panchali," is being waged and won in today's marketplace.

The victory isn't countrywide, but in the more sophisticated markets, pix are judged more on the basis of their commercial value than their country of origin. The number of markets which fall in the sophisticated category is increasing yearly, too.

As one savvy top exec put it "integration between Hollywood and non-Hollywood cinematic product" is going on in television. "Ten years ago," Walter Reade-Sterling's Sol Turell explained, "station buyers wouldn't even see you. Our day is coming," he added, pointing to the rating and prestige success of his own pix and the international attractions of others.

Jonny Graff, tv syndication topper Joe Levine's Embassy Pictures, also addressed himself to the boom-boom going on for international attractions. "It's gotten so," he added, "that some producers or entrepreneurs here and abroad think that 'anything' will go in the U. S. tv market. That just isn't so," Graff said. "There's a market for quality non-Hollywood product," referring either to the boxoffice of a "Hercules" or the artistic merits of some other pix. He said the "nowhere" pix which couldn't win a theatrical berth in the U.S., or never even made it in their native countries, can't be peddled to U.S. stations.

Another distributor, who has been handling both Hollywood and non-Hollywood pix finds grossing potential of non-Hollywood less than Hollywood product. He said this was so despite the growing playdates secured on American tv for foreign pix. He added that the market for non-Hollywood product is much better than in years past, but that the process of education still is going on, and it'll take more time before the true potential of foreign pix is realized.

This distributor estimated that a given picture of equal caliber will gross 50% more in today's market if it bares a made in Hollywood stamp, an estimate which might be challenged in some quarters, but reflective of the greater potential of made in Hollywood pix, even in today's market.

Helping the forward march of international attractions, the preferred moniker with some justification, is the comparative scarcity of post-'48 pix product. As to the justice of the "international attractions" label, one distributor raised the question of whether it's correct to call a pic such as "Bridge on the River Kwai" foreign. Another distributor, aware of today's theatrical boxoffice scene, questioned whether "David and Lisa" should be termed as "art picture," a moniker which denotes to the trade a lesser boxoffice, but a fine pic. The quality and boxoffice in the case of "David and Lisa" happens to be fine.

Walter Reade-Sterling has racked up about $2,500,000 with

Hill-Reynolds Clash With Madigan Breaks Up That Old WBBM-TV Gang

By LES BROWN

Chicago, Oct. 8.

They're breaking up that old gang that has made WBBM-TV the commanding news station in this market since the mid-'Fifties. In the wake of the disclosure last week that newscaster Frank Reynolds was pulling stakes came the resignation of Hugh Hill, the station's (and probably the tv market's) foremost news digger. That brings the tally to three principals who have ankled the CBS outlet's news staff since early last summer, when former news director Bill Garry cued the exodus.

But as the old order breaks up at WBBM-TV, it reestablishes itself at WBKB, which is beginning to loom now as a formidable third contender in the video news league here. Hill and Garry have both "escaped" to the ABC anchor where, they aver, the climate is nicer and the journalistic freedom greater, and at deadline Reynolds was on the verge of joining them there if CBS News failed to come up with a good and concrete offer for a Washington berth.

The threesome — if Reynolds does come along—join WBKB's present mainstay, Alex Dreier, who is himself a pilgrim from the No. 2 news shop, WNBQ, having skipped over to WBKB for somewhat similar reasons a couple years back. That would give news director Con O'Dea a solid personality and investigative nucleus (include also Norman Ross) on which to build a meaningful operation.

All three departures from WBBM-TV were caused by the presence of John (Red) Madigan, late of the Chicago American and earlier of Newsweek in Washington, who succeeded Garry as news director after contributing to his resignation. In any change of administration, the adjustment to new leadership and new restrictions comes hard to the fellows who were baptized by the old regime; but the Hill-Reynolds clash with Madigan seemed to go beyond that and might be summed up as a difference of opinion about news values mixed with some personal dislike.

Hill went on record, when he resigned, that the new journalistic policies at WBBM-TV were too

Kenya Bans 'Amos'

"Amos 'n' Andy," distributed by CBS Films, has been banned from telecasting in Narobi, Kenya, according to published reports from Kenya.

Kenya's Minister of Information and Tourism, R. Achieng Oneko, was quoted as saying the ban stemmed from "Amos 'n' Andy's" portrayal of the American Negro. The skein long has been subject to attack by the National Assn. for the Advancement of the Colored People, NAACP contending that series carries unfavorable stereotypes.

"Amos 'n' Andy" was one of a number of series sold to Kenya Broadcasting Corp. by CBS Films, the others being "Gunsmoke," "Twentieth Century," "Perry Mason" and "Mighty Mouse." "Amos 'n' Andy," among other shows, recently was sold to the Nigerian Television Service, in Lagos.

Set Up Unit To Push Plans For TFE-'64 Meet

Syndicators have moved forward on their plans for Television Film Exhibit 1964 (TFE-'64), scheduled for Chicago, April 5 through April 8, to coincide again with the 1964 NAB convention.

A new exec committee has been appointed to spearhead the second exhibit. Bob Rich and Bob Siedelman, who spearheaded TFE-'63 to success and laid the groundwork of cooperation with the NAB for '64, have stepped down as co-chairmen.

In the meantime, representatives of 20 tv film distributors met and chose the new exec committee. The committee is comprised of a six-man board, including Richard Carlton, Trans-Lux Television, (co-chairman); Alan Silverbach, 20th-Fox Television (co-chairman); Harvey Victory, Jayark; Barry Lawrence, United Artists Television; Richard Harper, Metro TV; and Len Firestone, Four Star Distributing Corp.

Carlton, Silverbach and Victor all served on the original TFE '63 exec committee.

WNOX SCRAMS CBS TO PLAY TOP 40

Knoxville, Oct. 8.

WNOX, 10,000 watter here, has adopted a new programming formula as a "Top 40" station with good music, in the wake of its disaffiliation from CBS. Scripps Howard station had been a CBS affil for 30 years.

Station announced that its news department has been doubled in size and will add the facilities of UPI Audio, becoming the first station in the south to utilize the UPI Audio service.

Fait Accompli

Chicago, Oct. 8.

Newscaster Frank Reynolds and reporter Hugh Hill both received their requested release from WBBM-TV yesterday (Mon.).

Reynolds, who had been considering a spot with CBS News in Washington, decided at last minute to accept the WBKB offer, supposedly as a concession to his wife, who wanted to remain in Chicago.

'C' Tag Poison To TV Distribs

Most distributors of non-Hollywood product shy away from handling pictures carrying the "condemned" tag of the Catholic Legion of Decency. There are some exceptions, though.

Walter-Reade-Sterling, distributing "Expresso Bongo," feels that by cutting out a nudie scene, objected to by the Legion, it corrects the reasons for the "C" Legion tag.

Key distributors, for the record, don't wish to engage in a public debate on justice of the Legion's classification and whether a "C" tag should be enough to keep a pic off tv screens, even in late evening periods, when the feature presumably is being played to adult audiences. Selling a "C" pic to stations is tough and that's business reason enough in the view of distributors to forego such cinematics. Operating as a force, too, is self-censorship, with some distribs feeling that the climate of tv isn't as free as that of motion pictures theatre.

Big Regional Buy On 'Battle Line'

Pacific Gas & Electric, in a major regional buy, inked for Official Films' "Battle Line" series for full sponsorship in seven California markets.

Official Films prexy Seymour Reed reported that with the Coast deal sales for the skein now has reached the 100-station mark. He described the Pacific Gas deal as another indication of a revitalized approach to regional broadcast advertising by way of first-run syndication. Official, he went on, is now negotiating similar deals with several other advertisers.

The World War II documentary series narrated by Jim Bishop will debut in the seven western markets during the week of Nov. 3. The episode for the week will be

'Univ. of the 7 Seas

Donald D. Davis, long chief of KMBC at Kansas City, now a consultant in pasture at Tucson, Arizona, is to be lecturer on public relations for the "University of The Seven Seas." This is a chartered motor ship of the Holland-American Line which puts out from New York on Oct. 28. It will be fully staffed with 38 professors and instructors and carry a maximum of 300 students.

Idea is to combine regular college credit classes with the benefits of world travel. Obviously the tuition and travel costs preclude the sons of the working class from qualifying.

Main sponsor is a California business man, William T. Hughes, president of Whittier Pipe & Supply Corp. It's stated that the voyage will stand $1,000,000 overall in expenses. Against this some $600,000 in promoted donations is in hand.

Students hit 21 ports. They pay from $1,990 to $2,390, depending upon state room accommodations.

Perry Como's Pitt TV Origination: 'The Hottest Ticket (7,000) in Town'

Pittsburgh, Oct. 8.

"Right now it's hard to say within $100,000 what the additional cost will be but we feel it was certainly worth it," said Maury Holland, v.p. in charge of production at the J. Walter Thompson ad agency on the placing of the first of Perry Como's seven specials in Pitt's Civic Arena on Thurs. (3). Holland said that Kraft foods would certainly benefit by the tremendous impact on the city made by the first appearnce of the show in cities outside the usual originating points of New York and Los Angeles.

From the time late in August when the announcement was made that the first special would come from the Arena, interest has been tremendous. From the first day, the ticket was the hottest in town with very few being available to the general public. 1,500 were allotted to Como's home town of Canonsburg and WIIC, the NBC station here was given 350 to be distributed to the local presss, ad agencies and city officials. Due to an oversight, Como's former employer, a barber in Canonsburg, was overlooked but the star took care of that detail himself by calling the man up to tell him there were five tickets waiting for him at the boxoffice.

Kraft had the rest of the 7,000 tickets and distributed them among their wholesalers, supermarket heads and various other handlers of the firm's products. Interest in the show was kept at a fever pitch with continuing news stories and the general frustration of the public in its attempt to get a ticket. WIIC officials said they could have used at least 70,000 tickets. The station was also unable to get any of the show's principals, Como, George Burns, Cyd Charisse, Allen Sherman or June Allyson to make any appearances due to the exclusive clause

Adding to the economic value of the show to the city was the week long stay of 126 people from New York and the hiring of 32 stagehands, 26 musicians and the various workers associated with the Arena. Mayor Barr asked all the downtown buildings to turn on their lights for the scheduled opening of the building's dome but it was too breezy and this part of the show had to be cancelled about five minutes before the show went off the air.

'N'west Reviewing Stand' in 30th Yr.

Chicago, Oct. 8.

"The Northwestern Reviewing Stand" starts its 30th consecutive year on radio (and 28th on Mutual Broadcasting System) next Sunday (13), ranking it only with Don McNeill's "Breakfast Club" on ABC for three-decade durability on network radio.

Coincidentally, both programs emanate from Chicago. The Northwestern U. discussion series originates at WGN (which is not now a Mutual affil) and is carried by 125 MBS stations and indies in markets not served by that network.

McNeill, in a congratulatory message to "Reviewing Stand," quipped that his show has been on the air "much longer—30 years and four months" and added that both programs may not merely be the only network radio shows from Chicago but in fact could well be "the only radio shows emanating from anywhere."

TV Nations: Top 10

Toronto, Oct. 8.

Top 10 nations in the world tv market (after U.S., with 577 stations, all commercial) are: Russia, 128; Japan, 124; West Germany, 98; Canada, 80; Italy, 70; Britain, 55; Brazil, 52, Australia, 42; France and Sweden, each 39. Outside the U.S. there are 1,143 tv stations in 102 nations.

Those figures are given by v.p. Graeme Fraser in Crawley Films Ltd. Newsletter, which he's written for 18 years.

Crawley, incidentally, is currently producing an hour of animation for Videocraft, N.Y. (an NBC web color special for "General Electric Fantasy Hour"); nine films for McGraw-Hill, N.Y.; seven for Encyclopedia Britannica, Chicago; a theatrical feature for U.S. release; plus smaller jobs for below-the-border customers.

Desilu's Domestic, O'seas Sales Spurt

Hollywood, Oct. 8.

Desilu Sales, in a two-week hot sales spurt, chalked up sales of eight shows in 17 domestic markets, and made deals for nine shows in nine foreign countries.

The Spanish tv system acquired seven programs from the Desilu syndication arm, in one of the biggest multiple deals in Desilu's record. Series involved include "Desilu Playhouse," "Untouchables," "Guestward Ho," "Lucy," "Jazz Scene, U.S.A.," "Greatest Show on Earth" and "Travel Time."

On the domestic front, fastest mover was "Fractured Flickers." Show was picked up by WNAC, Boston; KENS, San Antonio; KTVA, Anchorage, Alaska; KLYD, Bakersfield, Calif.; WCCO, Minneapolis; WEEK, Peoria; and WGHP, Highpoint, N.C. Last station, a newcomer to the air, also bought "Untouchables."

Other "Untouchables" sales were scored in Bangor, Me., New Orleans and Fresno. A week earlier, same show had been bought by NBC's Chicago o&o, WNBQ.

Fast paced sales activities continue in foreign markets, according to v.p. Dick Dinsmore.

TEXAS 'EARLY BIRDS' HOLDS A REUNION

Dallas, Oct. 8.

A reunion was held here of former members of the cast of the "Early Birds" program which was aired for many years over WFAA. The show was a top favorite in the 1930s, 1940s and even as late as the 1950s. The program went off the air in April, 1957.

During the years it was on the air the show held a yearly anniversary party before an audience composed from all over the state and even out of state.

Since going off the air there has been talk of a reunion during the years and this is the first one to be held. The get together was held at the home of Mrs. James E. Jenkins, known to the "Early Bird" audience as vocalist Terry Lea.

A number of stars were produced during the broadcast days of the series including Dale Evans, the Cass County Boys, Eddie Dunn and Fred Lowery.

WWJ's $1,200,000 Studio Expansion

Detroit, Oct. 8.

WWJ-TV will spend $1,200,000 to modernize and expand its studio facilities. James Schiavone, general manager, says project will begin in about a week and will extend over a two-year period so as not to disrupt operations.

Among the tons of new equipment to be installed are 12 specialized tv cameras and four film projection units, two of them tint. There will be eight 4½ inch cameras for studio use, breaking away from the traditional 3 inch models.

Two new colorized video-tape machines will be added to the pair already in operation, making WWJ-TV one of the few stations in the country to possess four such recorders.

The master control room, film projection room and tape areas will be redesigned. All studio and master control equipment will be replaced by new transistorized circuits and apparatus.

SINATRA SWINGFEST SET FOR 31 STATIONS

A lineup of show biz golfing enthusiasts, including Bob Hope, Dean Martin, Jackie Gleason, James Garner, Sammy Davis Jr., Bing Crosby, Jack Benny, Mickey Rooney and others will participate in the event.

Britain's 14% Quota on Outside TV Product Blasted by McCarthy

Television Program Export Assn. prexy John G. McCarthy, in a memorandum to the U.S. State Department, filed a strong protest against the British tv quota, barring telecasting of foreign programming to 14% of its schedule.

McCarthy, calling for State Department help, said the quota is having "a disastrous effect on the sale of U.S. television programs in the United Kingdom." In his memorandum, he cited specific reasons for Washington to step in at this time.

At the same time, McCarthy laid his case against the quota before Great Britain's Chancellor of the Exchequer, Reginald Maudling, at a conference in N.Y. before the British official's return to London over the weekend.

In his State Department petition, McCarthy stated that "the inconsistency of the British posture as the world's second largest exporter of television programs, while at the same time it maintains the highest protected market in the world by an enormous margin over any other market, is apparent and violates all precepts of commercial relations and foreign trade."

McCarthy made it clear that TPEA is not asking the U.S. Government to intercede with Great Britain for anything more than a "reasonable relief from the 86% figure"; that this would make "our marketing situation at least more tolerable." He conceded that his association is under "no illusion that any major or drastic revision in the British quota will be forthcoming immediately, because under the protection of this high quota the British industry has invested enormous sums in large studios and production facilities."

TPEA prexy apprised Washington that the opening of the second BBC network next spring, as well as increased rentals and additional levies, "may mean less production of program serials and other programs and hence a greater receptivity on the part of British program contractors to buy foreign and particularly U.S. programs." He emphasized, however, that the 86% quota will prevent development of access to this U.S. program material unless it is reasonably reduced.

UA-TV: One Umbrella

United Artists Associated, as a corporate entity to the trade, will bow out of existence the same way the Ziv tag went thataway. Both United Artists Associated and Ziv had been subsids of United Artists motion picture company.

For some time now, the parent company, along with its tv subsids, has been working towards the goal of having all UA's tv activities under the umbrella title of United Artists Television (UA-TV). There have been some consolidation of functions in such departments as shipping and accounting. It's understood though, at this point, there's no move to consolidate the respective sales forces of the feature operation with that of the syndiaction of network operation. There's been no change in the top management of the respective divisions, either, at this point.

'Open End' Preem: For Moppets Only

David Susskind's two-hour "Open End," which starts its six season next Sunday (13) on a new New York outlet, WPIX, and at a new time, 6:30 p.m., will kick off with a panel of moppets aged from eight to 10. Show, titled "Out of the Mouth of Babes," is a spinoff of an idea which Susskind has for a network tv entry. The kiddies will sound off on current events.

Jean Kennedy, who has served as producer of "Open End" virtually from its start on the now defunct WNTA and through its couple of years run on WNEW-TV, helped do the screening of the 100 or so children who were considered for the panel. She was assisted by Michael Burton, who has been added to the staff as associate producer. Ed Cooperstein, first director of "Open End" when it was on Channel 13, is back again this year in the same assignment.

Second show of "Open End" will examine the question of inter-racial marriages with a panel consisting of two White-Negro couples and one child of such a marriage. A show on Sen. Barry Goldwater has also been set along with another session with authors Nelson Algren and Norman Mailer.

'SONS OF HERCULES' AS LEVINE TINTERS

Package of 13 features in color, titled "Sons of Hercules" is being offered in syndication by Joseph E. Levine's Embassy Pictures.

According to tv sales v.p. Jonny Graff, each of the 13 pix is being made available, effective Nov. 1, in two ways:

1. As full-length features for primetime programming. 2. As one-hour versions for "cliff-hanger" programming, specially prepared with "See Part Two" end-titles, recaps and narration-over-flashback sequences.

The 13 pix, according to Graff, are styled in the same epic manner as Levine's rating winners "Hercules" and "Attila."

Titles in the new series include "Ulysses Vs. Hercules," "Hero of Babylon," "Venus Meets the Son of Hercules," "The Son of Hercules Returns," "Urusus In the Land of Fire," "Night Creatures Against the Son of Hercules," "Goliath, the Rebel Slave," "Fire Monsters Against Hercules," "Triumph of Maciste" and "Empress Messalina Meets the Son of Hercules."

Drug Center's Pix Buys

Skags Drug Center, large drug chain operating in 11 western states, has made its debut on television with full weekly sponsorship of the Seven Arts package, "Films of the '50s," over KSL-TV here. Films are being shown on Friday nights from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m.

ITC's Hot 'Saint' Into 40 Markets

London, Oct. 8.

ITC, Associated TeleVision's wholly-owned production and selling subsidiary, is finding the Roger Moore starrer "The Saint" one of its hottest properties. So far the British-made series has been sold in 40 markets throughout the world, including WNBC, New York.

Hourlong show has, among others, been shifted to France, Finland; Malta, Venezuela, Switzerland, Nigeria, Portugal, Rhodesia, Uraguay, Japan, Australia, Sweden, etc. It has even been picked up by such Iron Curtain countries as Poland, Hungary and Yugoslavia.

That Fast-Fast-Fast Move-In To Preempt '100 Grand' Affil Time

One of the first syndication companies to move in on the situation caused by the axing of ABC-TV's "100 Grand" is Four Star Distribution Co. Outfit has contracted ABC-TV affils, offering them Four-Star off-network series for the time slot.

Firestone says "we have several tentative sales in the works and should have confirmations within a few days."

As a postscript, it should be noted that in one or two-station markets, NBC-TV and CBS-TV will be vying with syndicators in getting a slot for their unberthed web shows in place of the axed "100 Grand."

"Chronicles" is one of many television shows that looks better in blueprint than it does on the air. It seems a reasonable enough venture, for instance, to profile the mentality of France through that nation's literature: one makes a certain observation about the French psyche, finds a passage in a noted work that might support it and, repeating the method several times, winds up with something like a self-portrait. It didn't work quite so neatly in the premiere program, however.

Perhaps it's Charles Collingwood's identity as a newsman that struck the wrong note here, but the running commentary and the illustrative dramatizations didn't seem to be serving a common purpose; rather, they got in the way of each other. The former contained a note of informational urgency, the latter an artistic leisure. In the end, Collingwood's exposition seemed only an excuse for the presentation of literary excerpts, and any of the conclusions arrived at about France and Frenchmen were of no particular consequence.

The program struck a somewhat scholarly pose and, for all its good intentions, probably pleased no one wholly. Passive televiewers looking for diversion would have rejected it as too intellectually demanding, those of an academic bent must have found the thought content superficial, and the aesthetically discriminating were doubtless disappointed by the performance quality of the dramatic scenes.

Despite an impressive cast, and with the possible exception of Kim Stanley's telephone monolog in the Jean Cocteau story, "The Human Voice," the dramatics were undistinguished. Most of them seemed under-directed and under-rehearsed, like the workshop pieces in tv's Sunday basement. The "Catcher in the Rye" observation that "they act like they're acting" was generally appropriate in the sketches and never more so than with Barbara Harris' performance in deMaupassant's "Ball of Fat."

Other scenes were from Balzac's "Pere Goriot," Anouilh's "Ardele" and Camus' "The Plague," each chosen ostensibly to point up a French characteristic noted by Collingwood. "Chronicles" still sounds like a good prime time idea, but it will have to try to achieve less in a television hour than producer Richard Siemanowski strived for in the premiere. Otherwise it's just going to be a cultural throwaway in the family hour at 7:30 p.m., where it rotates with "CBS Reports." Les.

ADDRESS OF THE STARS
With Robert Buchanan, guests.
Exec. Producer: Milt Frankie
Producer: Shelly Saltman
Director-Writer: Dom Ortuso
30 Mins.; Tues., 7 p.m.
WJW-TV Cleveland

The constant argument as to how many, and what kind of commercials should go into any given segment of a broadcast period might well be answered by this bit of pleasant fluff aired by this Storer outlet. Using a controlled degree of imagination, careful editing, and a wide range of ingenuity, the station offered a full 30-minutes of CBS and local promotions to highlight the upcoming fall season.

Robert Buchanan, station general manager, served as the emcee and tied the entire package with a ribbon of invitation that brought into focus the relationship of the stations offerings, those of CBS and various syndicators. In almost every instance, local programs were filmed within the area of their presentation, and the personalities were aided by close cooperation of film editors, photographers and Van Timmons art direction.

A pleasant 30-minutes of watching that certainly can be considered by agencies whose imagination can be projected to full-scale entertainment commercial. Mark.

SID CAESAR SHOW
With Joey Forman, Gisele MacKenzie, others
Producer-Director: Greg Garrison
Writers: Goodman Ace, Selma Diamond, Jay Burton, Tony Webster
30 Mins., Thurs. 10 p.m.
CONSOLIDATED CIGAR
ABC-TV, from N. Y. (tape)
(Papert, Koenig & Lois)

Take the obvious and say it's the Goodman Ace touch that has made it so, although Greg Garrison's directorial hand must certainly come in for a share of the credit. With thanks to whomever, the Sid Caesar stanza on ABC-TV this year looks considerably better than it did at any time last season. The comedy is more deft, the routines more inspired and the overall presentation neater and brighter. It's still not the Sid Caesar of old—or maybe it is, and the audience has changed—but he's a more rewarding television satirist and slapstician than he's been for several years.

His first solo venture of the new season, in the Thursday night spot he shares with Edie Adams, won't be long-remembered like some of those "Show of Shows" efforts; but it was a pleasant affair that profited from a simplicity of form and a small but competent cast. Ace and the writing company fashioned a serviceable pair of skits that touched satirically on commonplace experience, and left sufficient latitude for Caesar's stock-in-trade exaggerations. The first had to do with the disillusionment on returning to the old neighborhood, the second with the trials of spending a family evening at a drive-in movie.

With Joey Foreman and guestar Gisele MacKenzie giving capable assistance, the skits earned a good volley of laughs both for the meaningful gambits—such as the conversation traps when old friends reminisce—and the strictly nonsensical. There was, unfortunately, more business in the latter classification than in the former, and this proved the program's major flaw. Caesar still can't resist playing it more broadly than he needs to, and he has a regrettable tendency to reach too far for a laugh.

For instance, the second skit was going well enough with Caesar making all the possible (and a few improbable) mishaps that might befall a fellow at an ozone movie. And then, as if desperate for guffaws, Caesar took a totally unnecessary pie in the face and blunted the satiric edge of the whole thing. The bit undoubtedly got laughs from the home viewer. Les.

THE MIKADO
With Eric House, Andrew Downie, Irene Byatt, Howell Glynne, Heather Thomson, Arthur Sclater Kathryn Newman, Anne Linden, Maurice Brown, others

BELL TELEPHONE OF CANADA

(McKim)

Switching to Wednesday nights prime time, the "Festival" series started off its fourth season with Gilbert & Sullivan's "The Mikado." Norman Campbell staged the work to the best of his ability by tightening the dialog, avoiding the encore choruses, cutting entire numbers out, but leaving in the pop songs, with backing by Louis Applebaum and his 30-piece National Festival Orch.

All eight principals were in top voice, including the zany antics of Eric House as Ko-Ko, the Lord High Executioner; Howell Glynne, the basso Pooh-Bah; Kathryn Newman, the soprano Pitti-Sing; Andrew Downie, the tenor minstral; Arthur Sclater as Pish-Tush; Heather Thomson as Yum-Yum; the burlesqued Katisha of Irene Byatt; and the elegant second act entrance and singing of Maurice Brown as the Mikado.

The show was a photographed lift of the Stratford (Ontario) G & S production, complete with camera shots of the theatre audience. "The Mikado" tv production had to be cut from two hours to 90 mins.—minus the four minutes of commercials—this necessitating the abolition of the choruses in both acts, but the singing highlights were there.

Louis Applebaum, as the baton-wielder was periodically on-camera; but the Campbell-directed "Mikado" is still an old-fashioned operetta photographed onstage. Sets were by Robert Lawson; the costumes by Suzanne Mess, Alan Lund staged the choreography, and all registered well. McStay.

NBC-TV (film)

In the annals of television there have been few timeslots less enviable for a new show than that which NBC-TV has assigned to "Espionage." It's smack up against two of last year's Top 10 shows and this year's most intriguing combatants, "Ben Casey" and "Beverly Hillbillies," which is tantamount to two strikes against it from the start. And a pity it is, too, because this Herb Brodkin entry, is at the very least, a better-than-average teledrama and prospectively one of this season's more mature and thought-provoking series.

The preem offering could well have been a respectable "Playhouse 90" or "Studio One" opus of season's past. It posed the question of whether premediated murder is ever justified morally, even for exigencies of an underground movement in wartime, and was throughout an engrossing and well developed play. As supposedly all "Espionage" episodes will be, it was a fictional treatment of an actual occurrence. Scripter Peter Stone apparently didn't take too many liberties with his fabrication, because the teleplay rang true in all respects.

Bradford Diliman and Don Borisenko gave realistic portrayals as a pair of young Norwegians who had worked together in the resistance and, at the time of the main action, were standing trial in postwar Norway for the murder of an elderly Jewish couple whom they were trying to smuggle across the border to Sweden. Stone's fine script skillfully wove together the drama of the trial, the mental anguish of the two men involved and flashbacks of the circumstances leading up to the murder with, climactically, the revelation of the true motive.

The old people were killed when their deliverance to Sweden seemed hopeless, because the young men reasoned that their capture by the Nazis might jeopardize the whole underground movement if they were tortured into telling what they knew abuot it. To clear their own consciences the boys needed a verdict from the jury (symbol of society) that would acknowledge the rightness of their act. Instead, they got a not-guilty decision based on pity, which left them free but tormented in the end; and it became the viewer's burden to pass on the moral question himself.

Stuart Rosenberg's tasteful direction was a key contribution to the overall quality of the program, and there were effective performances by the entire supporting cast. Les.

FIREBALL XL5
(Planet 46)
With (voices) Paul Maxwell, Sylvia Anderson, David Graham, John Bluthal, others Producer: Gerry Anderson
30 Mins., Sat., 10:30 a.m.
NBC-TV (film)

NBC-TV, in an effort to capture the young-fry Saturday morning, has added "Fireball XL5" to its lineup. Series, with the old and new suggestion in its title, is a puppet excursion into the interplanetary space age.

Opener, titled "Planet 46," had a good story line, telling the yarn of way-out planet heavies planning to explode good, ole mother earth. Script penned by Gerry and Sylvia Anderson moved from cliff-hanger to cliff-hanger, in a way suggested by the "Fireball" part of the title.

The "XL5" part of the title was furnished by the setting and special effects, well engineered by Derek Meddings. He had a motorcycle that rode in space, space guns, oxygen pills allowing people to float in space; ground stations and the space ship, "XL5." If the series catches fire, it will be because of these special way-out effects. Some of them were eye-popping.

Half-hour skein was produced and created by Gerry and Sylvia Anderson, and distributed by Independent Television Corp., the same team that scored successfully in syndication with "Supercar."

Animation of the puppets, judging from the preem, fell down only in facial expressions. Limbs, etc. of the puppets moved freely, but emotional facial range was lacking. Puppeteering, era '64, may be ahead of the space age. Horo.

BOB HOPE PRESENTS CHRYSLER THEATRE
With Stuart Whitman, Melvyn Douglas, Angie Dickinson, Joseph Calleia, Robert Emhardt, others
Exec Producer: Alan J. Miller
Producer: Dick Berg
Director: Alex Segal
Writer: Rod Serling
60 Mins., Fri., 8:30 p.m.
CHRYSLER
NBC-TV (film) from H'wood
(Young & Rubicam)

Rod Serling, who is probably television's finest fictionist, came back to dreary, old realistic earth for the teleplay that launched the new Chrysler anthology on NBC-TV, but something seems to have happened to him during his sojourn in the "Twilight Zone." He went slick. And as a result, the 60 minute opus titled "Murder at Sundial," that looked for a while like it might sweep all the dramatic prizes in the next Emmy balloting, grew to be just another manufactured tv story. It was almost real, and almost outstanding.

Perhaps Serling needed a longer format to develop his situation properly. For the first half hour he had a thoroughly engrossing drama going, with three of four intriguing people in his crucible; but as he neared the climax he began to let the plot rule the characters, and they changed unnaturally for the convenience of the story. Serling's ironic ending came right on time, but it seemed artificially arrived at, rather than inevitable.

The play was reminiscent of "High Noon," in the revenge motive, the street setting, the deadline on the man's life and the ingratitude of the townspeople when it was a question of their well-being or their debt to him. Melvyn Douglas, as the bigoted town boss who is fingered for assassination, gave a superb performance up to the point at which he had to admit his terror and plead for his life. That's where the characterization was destroyed and the story weakened. Stuart Whitman was excellent as the sardonic young Indian who had grown cocky with wealth and whose single aspiration was Douglas' death in repayment for his father's hanging. Joseph Calleia, as the wise old tribal chief who sacrificially took the bullet meant for Douglas, gave dignity to a stock role, and Angie Dickinson made an improbable character as believable as possible under the circumstances.

Serling still writes some of the best dialog around these days, and he's a master of teleplay technique. His play was finer than most anthology offerings on tv, but disappointing because he's capable of much better. Alex Segal's direction was expert.

Bob Hope is an unlikely host for a series of serious dramas, but he carried off the chore successfully and rewarded the Hope fans with a few self-deprecating funnies before getting down to business. Les.

JOAN SUTHERLAND SHOW
With Margreta Elkins, London Symphony Orch (Richard Bonynge conducter)
Producer: Peter Bernados
60 Mins., Sun., 8 p.m.
WNEW-TV (film)

The magic of Joan Sutherland's voice was caught in an hour film show produced in London and shown on New York's WNEW-TV Sunday (6) and again the following evening. It's a film presentation that will hold up for a long time as a definitive showcasing of the famed operatic soprano.

Miss Sutherland had virtually all of the hour to herself, but even when she was joined in duet by Margreta Elkins there was plenty of joy for the ear. Miss Sutherland was also helped by her husband, Richard Bonynge, who conducted the London Symphony.

For those who want to hear Miss Sutherland solo on Meyerbeer's "Les Hugenots," Verdi's "Traviata" or Donizetti's "Lucia," this film has it in tip-top form that's worthy of repeat showings. Gros.

ELIZABETH TAYLOR IN LONDON
Executive Producers: Norman Baer, Philip D'Antoni
Producer-Director: Sid Smith
Writers: Lou Solomon, S. J. Perelman
60 Min., Sun., 10 p.m.
CHEMSTRAND
CBS-TV, from London (film)
(Doyle, Dane, Bernbach)

It's quite obvious that the whole purpose behind the making of "Elizabeth Taylor in London," the hourlong film special by Norman Baer and Philip D'Antoni which was shown on CBS-TV Sunday night (6) was to capitalize on the name value of the star. It was a cinch to fetch a walloping Nielsen. Yet any resemblance between the Miss Taylor of today and the intent to capture the sounds, the sights and the feel of jolly old Londontown was purely coincidental (unless, of course, the viewer was willing to "buy" the linkage of Miss Taylor being born and reared in London until she was seven.)

What might have been a diverting and entertaining travelog unfortunately turned out to be something else altogether, for to be quite blunt about it, Miss Taylor, pompous and so very very cultured, got in the way of the cameras — and for nearly two-thirds of the program. As designed by the producers, it were as though Miss Taylor were in competition with London. It's too bad that Miss Taylor won out.

For some strange reason they chose to pose her in long-suffering anguish as she went through the agonies of recitatives in remembrances of things past and present. Whether it was an elaborately negligeed Miss Taylor in her Dorchester Hotel penthouse suite declaiming Elizabeth Browning, or along the banks of the Thames or strolling on the park greens bedecked in the latest strolling fashions in espousals of Keats, Queen Elizabeth the First, Queen Victoria, Conan Doyle or Churchill, curiously enough it all seemed to come out the same. And from a tormented soul.

Interspersed in the other 20 minutes or so were the rewards of the program — the glimpses of Buckingham Palace and the inevitable Changing of the Guard; the Hampstead of Keats, the cockney of the pubs and shills of Soho; the sinster streets and alleys of Fagin and Jack the Ripper; Scotland Yard; the huntsman getting his fitting on Saville Row; the Chelsea beatniks and the glimpses of Battersea and London Bridges; the pushcart peddler of Billingsgate and the cabbie, the Bobbie and the street cleaner, plus assorted capsules of the legend and the nostalgia that's London. Only then did it hold interest. Rose.

60 Mins., Thurs. 10 p.m.
KRAFT
NBC-TV, from Pittsburgh
(J. Walter Thompson).

Perry Como, always noted for his ease, is really taking it easy this season. He's taking himself off the weekly grind and scheduled only seven hour-long shows for the 1963-64 season.

The new routine apparantly has taken off a lot of pressure from star and staff because the opening show (live from Pittsburgh) flowed at a comfortable pace. Singing, dancing and comedy were spotted with production savvy making the hour relaxed and enjoyable.

Como's singing still carries plenty of charm, but it all was bolstered by his string of topflight guesters. George Burns' careful monolog and old-fashioned singing style, June Allyson's reprise of some of her pic musical songs, Allan Sherman's workover of a couple of his diskings, and Cyd Charisse's legology (with James Mitchell as partner) added up to a fine evening's entertainment.

All the production aspects, especially from the Mitchell Ayres Orch and the Ray Charles Singers, were topflight.

Como will take his troupe to various spots around the country for each successive shot. He's due next on Nov. 21 from San Francisco. Gros.

DIRECTIONS '64
With Marian Seldes, Robert Milli, narrators; others
Producer: Wiley Hance
Director: Lloyd Tweedy
Writer: Marc Siegel
30 Mins.; Sun., 1 p.m.
ABC-TV (film)

"Directions '64" is one of the better religioso shows on the networks. In its Sunday (6) seasonal preem, the elements of good production, broad perspective, and a working intelligence were evident.

Preem outing, first in a series of five episodes on the same theme, dealt with the popular passion in Israel for archeology. Broadly, the five-part series, done with the cooperation of the Jewish Theological Seminary of America, had a general, cultural interest, which would appeal to anyone with a curiousity about man's past. What would have helped would have been some sharper cutting. More information could then have been offered.

On the whole, though, the show was well-mounted, replete with interesting interviews with interesting people, and location shooting which indicated the expense and care put into production for this Sunday early afternoon half-hour entry.

Location shots took in the many remnants of the past, some as old as 6,000 to 9,000 years. The resaon why archeology is a popular sport in Israel was explained by some Israeli leaders and Abba Eban, deputy premier of Israel, one of the leaders interviewed offered this gem: "You can be provincial by living only in the present."

Marian Seldes and Robert Milli were okay as narrators reading the workmanlike script of Marc Siegel. The narrators were off-camera, the documentary rightfully resting on the picture story captured by sound and sight.

MAN NAMED MAYS
With Charles Einstein, narrator
Producer-Director: Lee Mendelson
Writer. Einstein
60 Mins.; Sun. 10 p.m.
UNITED VINTNERS, SHELL OIL
NBC-TV (film)
(Honig, Cooper & Harrington; Ogilvy, Benson & Mather)

Willie Mays is one of the magic names of baseball and nothing, not even Elizabeth Taylor's guided tour of London on CBS-TV at the same hour, could be more important than this one-hour tribute, particularly to old New York Giant fans and the nouveau San Francisco rooters. Here was Willie, bigger than life size, glorified into a super-star and magnified into one of the greatest players the game has ever known. At least that's what Stan Musial said and Mays presumably would have been glad to say the same thing about Musial.

This one-hour special was a sports-dominated study of Mays. There were a couple of sparkling touches, such as the bullfight music at the opening of a ball game and a stop-motion gavotte around a disputed play at third place, that suggested the possibilities of a fresh look at the national pastime. These bits, however, were overwhelmed by the show's idolatry of Mays, which was what the fans wanted.

There was no psychoanalysis and no sociology in this show. Mays was depicted as a superlative baseball machine who broke into the game as a 12-year old with Birmingham semi-pros and who climbed upwards through the Negro ranks until he was discovered by a New York Giants scout. Mays' subsequent big league feats as hitter, fielder, thrower and base-runner were documented fully in a series of old baseball film clips. Estimations of Mays as one of the game's great players, if not the greatest, came from Casey Stengel, Alvin Dark and Leo Durocher.

The personality closeup of Mays was interesting, if not as dramatic as his in-uniform heroics. Charles Einstein, narrator and interrogator, pitched questions about the game, such as the rival pitchers' practice of dusting off Mays, that Mays answered very ably. There was also a brief sequence in Mays' expensive San Francisco home and a passing mention of his marital difficulties. There was no talk about the Negro's role in society in general and sports in particular, although the show did close with an old statement by A. G. Spalding about baseball representing the true democracy of talent. Herm.

IX WINTER OLYMPIC GAMES
With Jim McKay, Curt Gowdy, others
Producer: Chuck Howard
Director: Andy Sidaris
30 Min.; Sat., 6:30
PARTICIPATING
ABC-TV

The preem outing of ABC-TV sports department's "IX Winter Olympic Games" was primarily a preview of what is to come during the 14 shows in the series. For the next several weeks a team headed by Jim McKay and Curt Gowdy will indoctrinate viewers with all manner of info about the winter sports events which will make up the 1964 Winter Olympics at Innsbruck, Austria. In the process, the web will be presenting one of the longest and costliest commercials ever seen on tv for one of its own shows.

As stated, the opener was mostly an introduction of what is to come, including the presentation of guest experts and others who will assist McKay and Gowdy in both the upcoming programs and the Olympics coverage itself. ABC-TV sports viewers will be familiar with most of these pros, since they have appeared on the web's "Wide World of Sports" shows discussing appropriate events. They have, in the past, proved excellent assistants to the commentators, who have themselves been fine sportscasters, and the combination seems likely to provide an interesting series of sports shows.

In addition to the introduction of the experts, glimpses of past performances of the various events were provided, often discussed briefly by McKay, Gowdy and the pros. These were solid teasing devises and served well to intro the experts. The latter will include Dick Button, Art Devlin, Stan Benham, Bob Beattie, Willie Schaeffler and artist Robert Riger who's drawings will be used to explain various maneuvers etc. performed by the athletes. Some personality peeks at the stars was also given as a preview of another upcoming feature of the series.

Aside from its exclusive tv coverage of the upcoming Olympics, ABC-TV is obviously quite involved with the international event. During a fundraising pitch on behalf of the U.S. team, McKay mentioned that the web had guaranteed $250,000 to the coin-collecting effort.

Outlay will be nicely backed up by solid coverage and the series of shows which will lead into the actual games themselves should prove interesting and entertaining fare for sports buffs. Kali.

INTERNATIONAL ZONE
(Conversation with U Thant)
Producer: George Mevshon
Director: V. R. Sarma
30 Mins.; Sun. 12 noon
WNBC-TV, N.Y. (film)

"Conversation with U Thant," preem program in the new United Nations Television series, "International Zone," didn't provide any headline news but it was, by design, a good briefing on the UN's current aims and future aspirations. Responding to the urbane Alistair Cooke's well-framed questions, Secretary-General U Thant ranged widely over such subjects as UN finances (the org is solvent, except for its peace-keeping operations), changes taking shape in the UN because of the vast number of new Asian and African member states, and the essential differences between East and West.

Because it seemed obvious that all the questions had been discussed in advance, there were no surprises in the 30-minute seg, but the Sec.-General came across as an articulate UN spokesman, firmly dedicated to the proposition that world body can and must work. In contrast with the oversimplified views re world affairs expressed by most people on tv, U Thant's ideas were refreshingly long-range and thought-provoking, especially his point that the division of the world between rich and poor is a much more explosive situation than the division between ideologies. He didn't suggest, however, that the two divisions may well be the same thing.

Technically, show was okay. If the lengthy close-ups of U Thant and Cooke tended towards monotony, the spoken word—and not the filmed picture—was the important thing. Anby.

MERV GRIFFIN'S WORD FOR WORD
Producer: Robert Lane
Director: Dick Schneider
30 min., Mon.-Fri., 10:30 a.m.
PARTICIPATING
NBC-TV from N.Y.

Merv Griffin has had his ups and downs with NBC. Having risen from daytime game show jockey to one of the web's fair-haired personalities via his subbing during Jack Paar's "Tonight Show" exit and having then been given his own version of that show on weekday afternoons, he's now back to format game shows and doesn't seem too happy with the reversal.

A slick handler of such hosting duties, Griffin nonetheless doesn't look like he's got his heart in this latest daytime quizzer, "Word for Word." In the show, contestants compete for prizes by trying to get the most three or four letter words out of a larger word. This competition is played for seconds which are then used by the winner for time in which to unscramble a jumbled word. The number of such words he or she can untangle determines how many prizes the contestant wins.

Prizes, as in most game outings, are impressive. They include cars, overseas vacations, jewelry, washer-dryers and the like. There is some audience involvement in what goes on as viewers and studio folk also try to do their best, but the show is quite average in format and, therefore, offers little to attract special attention. This plus Griffin's mild, albeit polished, hosting don't add up to enough excitement.

Interestingly, on the show caught there was a Negro femme participant. This fits with patterns in tv this season which have seen a marked increase in participation of Negroes. This lady lost, however.

Robert Lane is producer and Dick Schneider directs. Frank Sims assists as the show's announcer and does a solid job. In all, however, "Word for Word" does little for either NBC's or Griffin's star. Kali.

FRONT PAGE CHALLENGE
With Gordon Sinclair, Pierre Berton, Betty Kennedy; Frank Tumpane, guest panelist; Fred Davis, moderator
Director: Drew Crossan
Writer: Paul Wayne
30 Mins., Tues., 9:30 p.m.
GILLETTE, DU MAURIER
CBC, from Toronto (tape)
(Spitzer, Mills & Bates; Vickers & Benson)

In its seventh season, "Front Page Challenge" continues with three of its permanent panelists and the same moderator. It's a weekly quiz program based on newspaper headline stories since the turn of the century and is predicated on such a popular base to warrant its continuance.

For the preem, "Front Page Challenge" secured such personalities, placed unseen from the panel, as dancer Ruth St. Denis (in her 80's); Bobby Gimby, bandleader at the King Edward Sheraton Hotel, Toronto, who composed the national anthem of the new Malaysian Republic while on a tour of the Far East, and Arnold Peters, Quebec legislator, who had much to do with divorce procedure in Canada during the Federal government's session last August.

Miss St. Denis, unguessed, revealed after-questioning, that her semi-nude dancing in 1907 had scored round-the-world headlines; that, with Ted Shawn, she had danced in New York's Central Park this summer in a Shakespearean production.

Based on breezy questioning of the panel, plus the hearty commentary of Fred Davis, the directorial abilities of Drew Cossan were exemplified by film clips and closeups of the questioned interviewees. Whipping up the tempo was Lucio Agostini's big band, though they were never on-camera. McStay.

NEW YORK, NEW YORK
With Bill Beutel
Producer: Edward W. Jones
Writers: Bernard Morris, Arthur Alpert
60 Mins.; Sun. 11:30 a.m.
PARTICIPATING
WABC-TV. N.Y.

"New York, New York," WABC-TV's new informational show, promises to make a solid public service contribution by bringing into the spotlight this metropolis' leading personalities and its knottiest problems. The kickoff show, "The Fair Face of Robert Moses," was a sharply etched portrait of one of Gotham's most respected and most criticized citizens drawn against the background of his latest achievement, the New York World's Fair.

Unfortunately, this show was filmed before Moses was embroiled in this latest brouhaha with the politicos over reduced admission prices for children attending the Fair. Moses, however, indicated what his answer would have been. He asserted on this show that New York had more than its quota of critics. Moses, in praising the Franco regime in Spain, indicated a preference for leadership and discipline, that is, his own leadership and the discipline of others.

Moses' vigorous comments were made while riding in a car that was making a tour of the Fair grounds, now a confusion of half-finished buildings but which will surely be whipped into shape by Moses by the opening date come next April 22. In this connection, Moses chided New York's Park Commissioner Newbold Morris for tolerating the delays in the construction of Shea Stadium, neighboring the fair Grounds.

Moses spoke diffidently about his own career, terming his chairmanship of the N.Y. Fair only another "interesting episode" in a career marked by a superlative record of road, bridge and park building. The Fair, for Moses, is only a way of turning the Flushing Meadows into one of New York's finest parks.

As reporter, Bill Beutel interrogated Moses in a penetrating, but respectful manner. Because filming was done on a couple of different occasions, there were some questions that were repeated in order to fill out the hour. Perhaps some history of Moses' work over the past four or five decades would have made an appropriate intro to the show. Herm.

FLASHBACK
With Maggie Morris, Alan Millar, Allan Manings, Bill Walker, moderator, others Producer-Director: Don Brown
30 Mins., Sun., 7:30 p.m.
TIMEX: SHERWIN-WILLIAMS
CBC, from Toronto (tape)
(Ronalds, Reynolds: Cockfield, Brown)

Their panel show returned for its second 26 week season on 44 tv stations of the Canadian Broadcasting Corp. but Bill Walker, as moderator and successor to Paul Stoles, had better question the interviewees as to what they are doing now, the essence of "Flashback."

Last seasons' personalities included Gloria Swanson, Adolphe Menjou, Sally Rand, Chester Morris, Francis X. Bushman, Agnes Moorehead, Basil Rathbone, Jeanette McDonald and host of others.

It is that "Flashback" feeling of nostalgia which is the secret of the series but this was missing from the teeoff. This was particularly noticeable in the opening stanza highlighting Jessical Dragonette, the star of early radio days.

(VARIETY uncovered that Miss Dragonette used the family name, that she is Mrs. Nicholas Meredith Turner, is living in New York City with her businessman husband and still records sacred music. She has just issued an album of her trademarked "Ave Maria" and "Panis Angelicus" and has included Gregorian music in her hymnology).

Also included in the kickoff was Goody Rosen, the first Canadian to cross the border to be signed by the Brooklyn Dodgers in their halcyon days. The other was Gordon Buearig, the Canadian maker of the Cord car—who got in a plug for the Ford Motors of Canada Ltd, with whom he is with the desinging section. McStay.

ELEVENTH HOUR
(Cold Hands, Warm Heart)
With Ralph Bellamy, Lola Albright, Kevin McCarthy, Preston Foster, Ann Seymour, others
Exec Producer: Norman Felton
Producers: Irving Elman, Sam Rolfe
Director: John Newland
Writer: Theodore Apstein
60 Mins., Wed., 10 p.m.
PARTICIPATING
NBC-TV (film)

Ralph Bellamy, replacing Wendell Corey, as the running star of Metro's "Eleventh Hour," had the good fortune of having a solid outing for his preem show. Titled "Cold Hands, Warm Heart." The preem didn't have the theatrical gifts associated with outstanding television, but the hour did have some solid values to commend it.

The sensitive theme of a frigid woman and a philandering husband, and the misery of such a marriage, was captured, in the workmanlike script of Theodore Apstein. With some minor reservations, the subject of psychiatry was treated with knowledgeable savvy by all concerned. Bellamy, as the psychiatrist, came across as the understanding therapist.

Lola Albright projected some of the cold beauty, longing, and distress of a woman, trapped by her feelings that sex is ugly and dirty. Kevin McCarthy, as her husband, while less in focus in the story, did convey the conviction of the husband in the troubled situation. Ann Seymour, as the mother of the problem girl, was more of a caricature than a personality. Preston Foster, as the father, lent some gentle warmth to the proceedings.

John Newland's direction was brisk and to the point. Where the workmanlike script by Apstein bogged down was in two areas—one, a reliance on stock images on occasion to give the viewer needed information, and two, the use of types for characters rather than relying on creative powers to instill the characters with individuality and life.

One of the stock images was the character of the mother. She was so caricatured that the confrontation between mother and troubled daughter, which could have been the big scene, bordered on the ludicrous.

To review a life in an hour is a tall job. That the preem delivered less than outstanding television is forgiveable, when the positive aspects of the opener are considered. "Eleventh Hour" might have a competitive toughie in "Danny Kaye" this season, but if it sticks to its therapy, in the workmanlike fashion of its opener, it should retain its following.

Horo.

NEWS IN PERSPECTIVE
With Lester Markel, Max Frankel, Tom Wicker
Producer: Nazaret Cherkezian
Director: Lee Polk
30 Mins.; Tues., 9 p.m.
WNDT, N.Y.

The N.Y. Times and NET, collaborating on this once-a-month show, could develop this hour into an important contribution to television news analysis if they arrive at a firm conception of what they want. Unfortunately, the kickoff stanza tended to be a rambling review-type of commentary which failed to dig in at any point or shed any new light on the headlines.

The program, however, indicated the potential to be tapped on the Times staff. Max Frankel, diplomatic correspondent, and Tom Wicker, the Times' man at the White House, both impressed with their lucidity and articulateness. Lester Markel, Sunday Times editor who moderated, posed the questions competently, although sometimes tending to cut off the speakers in the middle of an idea.

The basic flaw, however, was the show's attempt to go all over the map in hit-and-run style. Nothing useful could come out of a discussion of a half-dozen domestic issues, including Kennedy-Goldwater, the balance of payments and the racial crisis, on top of the split in the Communist camp, our headaches with De Gaulle and Vietnam, etc. Focus on one or two of these problems would have had far more meaning.

Use of maps and charts to illustrate the points under discussion was an excellent adjunct that could be exploited even more fully to reduce the static quality of the straight seminar format. Herm.

Foreign Television Reviews

THAT WAS THE WEEK THAT WAS
With David Frost, Millicent Martin, Kenneth Cope, David Kernan, Roy Kinnear, Robert Lang, Bernard Levin, Al Mancini, Lance Percival, William Rushton, Irwin C. Watson
Producer: Ned Sherrin
50 Mins., Sat., 10:30 p.m.
BBC-TV, from London

It wouldn't be possible to maintain the commotion that attended last season's launch of this major finger-to-nose show. Familiarity will breed indifference. This may be a good development for the program as a whole, for shock tactics and name-calling win easy headlines. Wit which is its claimed stock-in-trade, grows in a less hectic climate.

Its return seemed to indicate that it will carry on much as before. Producer Ned Sherrin continues to lay the mechanics bare like a skeleton, and the approach suits the format. There were two additions to the resident team. Actor Robert Lang, who has been Olivier's understudy and belongs to the National Theatre company, looked to be a valuable acquisition. He gave the professional touch to a neat monolog in which, as a judge, he sentenced a couple of newlyweds—because they would inevitable add to the divorce rate.

Less happy was Irwin C. Watson, imported by Sherrin from Harlem's Apollo Theatre. His quiet patter, with an anti-segregationist bite, was too tentative, but he might settle down—and his theme certainly fits with the show's campaigning zeal.

Emcee David Frost, with less provocative hair-style (he combed it like the rest of us), was somewhat subdued. His main contribution was a somewhat ponderous roundup of absurd views about premarital sex, ramming points home with a bludgeon rather than a scalpel.

Journalist Bernard Levin reclaimed his normal seat as inquisitor. He grilled Tory politico Sir Cyril Osborne, who has strong restrictionist ideas about sex, drink, and other pleasures. Although Levin couldn't keep his victim to the point, the encounter generated a fair amount of heat. The item, as usual, depends on luck, and had it this time.

The most striking bit was a barbed attack on the Pope's attitude to the Jews, pegged to the London opening of Hochhuth's much-discussed play, "The Representative." The bitter lyric had a fine cutting edge. The other major topic was the Denning Report, and easy points were scored.

The show's thrush and mascot, Millicent Martin, delivered her usual modern-jazz lyric, to Dave Lee's swinging backing, and introduced the show with headline pointers. And there was a witty collage of MacMillan clippings, accompanied by a Sinatra waxing.

Only two items fell quite flat—a facetious attack on BBC-TV's program, journal, "Radio Times," and some weak guying of the chart-topping "Beatles." It wasn't a bad percentage.

The show is still welcome for its nonconformity, zest, and unpredictability. If it doesn't achieve the high novelty rating of last season, it will find its alert public. Having broken through, it needs to consolidate. Otta.

THE BLACK & WHITE MINSTREL SHOW
With the Mitchell Minstrels, Leslie Crowther, George Chisholm, John Boulter, Dai Francis, Tony Mercer, Benny Garcia, the Jackpots, the Television Toppers, Margaret Savage, Bob Burgess & Doreen Freeman, Eric Robinson orc
Producer: George Inns
45 Mins.; Sun., 7:25 p.m.
BBC-TV, from London

This show, practically an institution, returned without any hardening of the arteries. A legit version has already been seen by more than 1,000,000 customers and will run into 1964. Producer George Inns blends song and dance in a headlong and inventive mixture, with versatile camera work and strict adherance to a melody-a-minute. Once the odd idiom of blackfaced men, a few non-integrated whites, and leggy girls is accepted, the program makes an accomplished exercise in nostalgia.

Hard core of the performers is the Mitchell Minstrels, a lusty and well-trained glee club, who scored in this segment in a fetching arrangement of "Three Blind Mice." The tunes are packaged to mix with various themes. Thus a music-hall setting brought out the old knees-up ditties, a suggestion of "Cleopatra" framed a set of exotic numbers, and a dancing roundup was accompanied by appropriate oldies.

All the warblers are well provided with lung power, the tenor of John Boulter clicking in "Just a Little Love" and Dai Francis and Tony Mercer never putting a quaver wrong. Slight comedy came from Leslie Crowthers & George Chisholm, the latter also showing his prowess on trombone.

But individuals do not matter much in this zippy potpourri. Roger Andrews's sets were cunningly clued in to the black-and-white medium, and added visual pleasure. Merely as an example of light entertainment expertise—which copped it a prize at the Montreux tv fest—it is outstanding, and its appeal ranges the age brackets. Otta.

OUR MAN AT ST., MARK'S
With Leslie Phillips, Anne Lawson, Joan Hickson, Gillian Gosling, Kevin Bennett, Diana Lambert, Joan Ingram
Producer: Eric Maschwitz
Director: Christopher Hodson
Writers: James Kelly, Peter Miller
30 Mins., Wed., 9:15 p.m.
Associated-Rediffusion, from London

Picking a parson as central figure for a situation-comedy skein is fraught with peril. Most of the dangers were met head-on in this initialler, which made a highly discouraging impression.

The Rev. Andrew Parker (Leslie Phillips), with a rural parish, was supplied with girl friend, Anne (Anne Lawson), and crusty housekeeper (Joan Hickson). They were largely concerned that he would not wear his clerical collar at a local dance—and a coy crisis was averted by Andrew climbing down.

The other minimal event was a little schoolgirl thinking she was pregnant because she had been kissed by a little boy. Andrew explained that babies didn't arrive that way. The utter coyness of this had to be seen to be believed.

An occasional titter came from the deft playing of Leslie Phillips, although his anguish sometimes showed through. The script creaked, and the production and direction were both past-tense. On this showing, it was a misbegotten Otta.

LIFE AND AL READ
With Lionel Blair, the Springfields
Producer: Ronnie Taylor
Director: Helen Standage
30 Mins., Sun., 3:30 p.m.
ABC-TV, from Manchester

Strongly rooted in his native Lancashire, comic Al Read is one of those North-country funsters with a lesser following in the London region. But this skein, which is being networked, promises to remedy the deficiency. Read, whose forte is the domestic gag with an anti-wife bias, scored with a lively, humane, and sympathetic set of monologs. His timing was exact, his face-play comical, and his observations brought an immediate response from an audience, it seemed, of marital misfits.

Read chirpily investigated the perils of a picnic with the family and teaching a spouse to drive. His other subjects—which were given rather like party pieces, and might have been helped by more continuity — took in the partisanship of football fans, and an idiot trying to make a call from a phone booth.

A nice note of geniality was struck throughout, and the show, which was straightforwardly directed, varied the mood with a contrived dance solo by Lionel Blair and some volatile warbling by the Springfields. Despite its scheduling, the program might easily click, and Al Read, who has shied off tv up to now, hasn't got to compete with over-exposure. Otta.

THANK YOUR LUCKY STARS
With Brian Matthew, John Leyton, Freddy Cannon, the Tornados, Mike Berry, the Big Three, Pete MacLaine & the Clan, Sandra Browne, Bo Diddley, Janice Nicholls, Don Moss
Producer: Phillip Jones
45 Mins., Sat., 5:50 p.m.
ABC-TV, from Manchester

Recently voted top disk show for teenagers, "Thank Your Lucky Stars" returned in snappy form, sticking to its tried and popular format. Hosted pleasantly by Brian Matthew, who is crisp without being fulsome, the program corralled a good selection of local waxers, guaranteed to draw whinnies from the live audience.

The transatlantic guest spot was filled by rhythm-and-blues singer Bo Diddley, accompanied by white-satined Jerome and the Duchess. Diddley made a zesty noise with a couple of items, including his latest waxing, "Pretty Thing," but the lyrics were anybody's guess. Most polished singing come from Sandra Browne, an agreeable thrush who scored with her "You'd Think He Didn't Know Me" in plaintive vein.

A demonstration of "The Monkey," hopefully described as the new dance craze, came from Freddy Cannon and a languid group of terpers, who weren't of one mind about the routine. Two guitar-and-drum groups, the Tornados and the Big Three, purveyed slightly different sounds, which could be distinguished by congnoscenti, and Mike Berry issued an anguished "Really Doesn't Matter."

Climax was John Leyton, big in these parts, who only had to move a limb to arouse squeals. Leyton, who has notched an LP, extracted "Soft and Tender Caress" from it, but was more effective in his latest single, "On Lovers' Hill," which looked as if it might climb.

A panel of kids was joined by deejay Don Moss to air their views on three American waxings, and opined that Chuck Berry's "Let It Rock" was the best. Philip Jones produced with pace and zing. Otta.

COMEDY PLAYHOUSE
(On the Knocker)
With Ronald Fraser, Alfred Burke, Diana Hope, Neel Johnson, Betty England, Beatrix Thompson, Richard Coleman
Producer: Douglas Moodie
Writers: Harry Driver, Jack Rosenthal
30 Mins., Sat., 9:45 p.m.
BBC-TV, from London

The original "Comedy Playhouse" skein got its continuity from its scripters, Alan Simpson and Ray Galton, who wrote every segment. From it stemmed the blockbusting "Steptoe" series, which germinated from a half-hour one-shot. This comeback has very little to link it with the past except the title and Ron Grainer's sprightly signature theme. Various writers will be used, including John Chapman (who authored "Hugh and I" and has slick ideas for taking Brian Rix's trousers down) and the "Rag Trade" team of Ronnie Wolfe and Ronald Cheney.

This opener, from Harry Driver and Jack Rosenthal, was competent rather than inspired. Its chief fault was over-indulgence in words, which blocked the action. Its chief benefit was to provide a meaty opportunity for Ronald Fraser, an accomplished comic thesp who, as this column has urged before, deserves a regular showcase.

Fraser was a door-to-door debt-collector, complete with little book giving "topics of conservation" for each housewife. After some discomforting moments—for they all knew his regular patter before he opened his mouth—he arrived at Mrs. Lewisham (Diana Hope), who had never paid a cent on her time payment commitment. She tricked him into baby-sitting while she went out to play bingo. But, although she won a few dollars, Fraser didn't get it. A window-cleaner who had money owing collected first.

The situation was okay, but needed sharper writing and a witty deployment of character. But it was made fairly entertaining by Fraser, whose woebegone capers rose to a fine climax of frenzy. Other thesps were soso, and Douglas Moodie produced heavily. Otta.

DINNER PARTY
With Prince Bernhard of the Netherlands, Sir Fitzroy Maclean, Alan Moorehead
Producer: Francis Coleman
30 Mins., Tues., 10:45 p.m.
Associated-TeleVision, from London

Eavesdropping on after-dinner talk by celebs makes a chancey formula for a program, and the return of "Dinner Party," wreathed in cigar smoke and oiled by brandy, was an unfortunate specimen of its kind. The conversation lacked guidance from an opinionated host like Lord Boothby or Malcolm Muggeridge, both of whom attended intermittently, and rambled disconsolately and boringly, almost coming to a dead halt. It was certainly a capture to obtain the Duch Prince Bernhard, who made an affable, no-nonsense impression, but his fellow diners tended to prod him into responses, rather than contributing much themselves.

The Prince declared his interest in the World Wildlife Fund and a European cultural committee, and the chief topic was the value of preserving livestock and art treasures. Alan Moorehead considered that no one cared, and was softly beaten down by the Prince and MacLean. Thereupon they wandered into a brittle argument about democracy, and the way it would always survive. MacLean instanced the liberalization of the Soviet Union as an example, and declared his faith in human nature.

The halting affair was smoothly produced by Francis Coleman, but, given the eminence of those taking part, it appeared that more stirring views might have emanated from a late-night bar. Future segments may be more provocative. Otta.

MONITOR
With Huw Wheldon
Producer: David Jones
40 Mins., Sun., 10:50 p.m.
BBC-TV, from London

This long-running minority skein, which takes all the arts as its orbit, returned in typical form from its summer siesta. Hosted as usual by Huw Wheldon, whose studied relaxation is now part of the show's image, it took in two main items.

First came a filmed account, nicely directed by Melvyn Bragg, of the birth pangs of Gillian Lynn's new dance company, which first appeared before the public at the Edinburgh Festival and is now having a London run. The report engagingly covered the enterprise from the first limbering-up to the preem, illustrated part of its repertory, and obtained from Miss Lynne an outline of her ambitions and purposes. It was the kind of background explanation that "Monitor" usually does well, and its only irrelevancies were shots of some of the dancers in their lodgings, or archly distributing publicity literature. Another drawback was that Miss Lynne's company has garnered a spoty reception from the critics, and this, to some extent, diminished the importance of the segment.

The second session also stemmed from the Edinburgh fest, which had featured prominently Indian musicians. It took the form of an encounter between the British guitar virtuoso, Julian Bream, and Ali Akbar Khan, fast-fingering his native instrument, the sarod. Together the couple provided prodigies of improvization, kicking off with variations on "Greensleeves" and continuing with a specially-written theme. Result was an intriguing blend of sound and tradition, and Humphrey Burton's direction was impactful.

Final minutes were taken for a tribute to two poets, Louis MacNeice and Theodore Roethke, who had recently died. Kenneth Haigh and Duncan Macrae delivered two poems that were well-chosen to show their writers' styles. David Jones produced effortlessly throughout. Otta.

THE CHARLIE DRAKE SHOW
With Charlie Drake, the Eight Charlies, the Square Pegs, Chris Rayburn, the Skylons, Bunty Turner, Albert & Les Ward, Sheila Liddy, Ania Marson, Elizabeth Benzimera, Jack Parnell Orch
Producer: Colin Clews
Writers: Drake, Lewis Schwarz
35 Mins., Sat., 8:25 p.m.
Associated TeleVision, from London

Baby-faced, half-pint-sized, and golden-curled, Charlie Drake has the advantage of an immediately funny impact. He also has a well-judged line in slapstick and pathos. This skein, conceived in tv terms throughout, looks a likely contender for high ratings. Not a minute was wasted in idle chat or intros, brief blackout items following each other in swift succession. Some of the gags missed out, but there was always another crowding it.

Typical jape was Drake as a milkman, stripping coyly off behind his cart and then entering a nudist colony. Another had him giving a polysyllabic talk on physics to schools—to an audience of one-year-olds, whose gurgles and tears were neatly cut in as reaction. With a success rate of about 60-40, these thumbnails provided a decent quota of yocks.

The comedy was occasionally interrupted by music, which took in a harp solo by Sheila Liddy, and by a scene from "Henry V," given to allow tyro thesps to show their paces. This latter interlude, promised as a regular, didn't jell with the rest, and might easily be dropped.

Drake also danced, and mimed to other voices, and his script, written in partnership with Lewis Schwarz, was well contrived to show his full range. Colin Clews produced with fine speed. Otta.

THE SENTIMENTAL AGENT
With Carlos Thompson, Anthony Bushell, Peter Arne, Burt Kwouk, Clemence Bettany, Annika Wills, Dora Reisner, Riggs O'Hara, Jeremy Bulloch, Hugh Futcher, Stewart Giudotti, James Luck, Tony Quinn, David Blake Kelly, Brian Cant, Wilfrid Downing Producer: Harry Fine
Director: Charles Frend
Writer: Julian Bond
55 Mins., Sat., 7:30 p.m.
Associated TeleVision, from London

Success of this filmed skein—one of the commercial web's major enterprises for the new season—will largely hang on response to Carlos Thompson. As the import-export agent, involved in various shady shenanigans, he makes a change from the run of thick-ear heroes, and the suave man-about-town was established through a foot-long cigaret-holder and many changes of snappy outfits. Thompson himself, called "the most handsome man in the world" by the flacks, was more dashing in his looks than his gabbing. He played it cool, and, at first, seemed to throw too many lines away, but the quiet irony became quite fetching before the end.

Julian Bond's script for the initialler had Carlos, somewhat inexplicably, as business manager for an American modern-jazz outfit. British security warned him that they were being used to pass secret information to the Reds. Carlos found that it was all being coded into a special arrangement given to the feminine vibes player. Meanwhile, he romanced a pretty agent, working for the British, but she got herself caught. He effected her escape by writing a false arrangement in bop-time, thus hoodwinking the Reds into letting her go.

The tale was highly improbable, and conviction wasn't helped by Bond's provision of beat lingo for the jazz players, which struck a phoney note. But Harry Fine's production was elegant, and Charles Frend's direction competent. The segment looked affluent, and the gloss helped to disguise the reach-me-down material. Among the guest thesps, Anthony Bushell scored as a weighty security boss and Annika Wills had pert charms as the vibes manipulator. Otta.

Tele Follow-Up Comment

Jerry Lewis Show

The truth is that Jerry Lewis may have to depend on the big marquee names to get by on his Saturday night ABC-TV telethon. While a Kay Stevens, a Mort Sahl (whose weekly participation has thus far had dubious merit), a "Time After Time" rendition by a Jack Jones, a guest band interlude, an on-too-long Julius Sumner Miller as a physics expert applying his gimmicks to show biz—while any or all of these offered a few pleasurable moments, none of them was sufficiently sock to make up for or counter the disappointments in Lewis himself. For, as of his last outing on Saturday (5), Lewis was still indulging in endless and meaningless palaver from hernias to Sen. McClelland; the show had little style, pace or direction. There was nothing to give it that extra dimensional plus to justify "two hours of live spontaneity" that, in fact might not have gained by pretaping.

Lewis works hard, but too much of the time he works aimlessly. Granted the crazy dance is one of his great bits, the six time repitition merely accents the show's inadequacies. Again in pursuing last week's censorship hassle involving that Mort Sahl JFK deletion on the tape Coast repeat, Lewis had a funny going for him in explaining how he's now squared away with ABC continuity acceptance, listing the things he can now talk about. Natch, it came out muted but with the lips moving. As a bit of throwaway comedy it was good for a laugh. But to go on endlessly with it, and then into a whole routine about rehearsing the bit, can't help but strain patience with the show. And allright already with that cigaret ad routine.

At any rate, next week Sammy Davis Jr. comes on. Thanks to a Davis guestshot on last week's "Ben Casey", it out-Trendexed "Beverly Hillbillies". It's possible Davis could bring to the Saturday show what Lewis has tried but failed to do so far. Rose.

Danny Kaye Show

Danny Kaye, in the right setting, could emerge as one of tv's powerhouses. In these weekly CBS-TV's outings, he continues to project on the tv screen with the same naturalness, warmth and buoyancy that mark his theatre appearances. Kaye, in fact, has shown a capacity to project his personality even over the hurdle of routine situations into which he is placed.

On last Wednesday's outing, Kaye was badly served by the writers. A series of sketches, with great potential for Kaye's capers and mimicry, were diluted with weak gags and obvious punchlines. The opening bit, in which Kaye, as a toreodor became increasingly fearful as he crossed paths with some of his gored confreres, was a sharply conceived bit that contrasted with the rest of the show.

Jose Ferrer, guesting, teamed with Kaye in each of the routines. In one, they were astronauts en route to the moon and proving to the world that an encapsulated couple could still remain comrades. A takeoff on Shakespeare, as the Bard might have written for television, was lamentable vaudeville. Another routine, in which Ferrer was a British intelligence officer and Kaye played a dual role as a captured German general and as a British private, wasted too much time getting to the gag. Kaye's final monolog about learning to fly had a folksy appeal, but could have been far more pointedly written.

Musically, the show had Kaye delivering "There's a Benevolent Brotherhood of Man" as opener and closer and spotlighted the Red Norvo combo in one esoteric jazz routine and one good uptempo piece in which Kaye and Johnny Mann joined in a scat version of "Three Blind Mice." Herm.

Judy Garland Show

It's little wonder that a last minute switch was made in the second Judy Garland show of the season. All concerned seemed awed by the result of the session with Barbra Streisand, and so the hour-airer with George Maharis as top guest, will be presented later.

The combination of the Misses Garland and Streisand, with Ethel Merman in a brief bit, was a combine of major talents and styles which resulted in superb entertainment. Judy and Barbra have diverse singing manners. Miss Garland is sentimental, open and frequently joyous, Miss Streisand sophisticated, sometimes ironic and frequently devious. Yet there was an extremely harmonic play and a sympatico feeling between them. When sitting on a pair of stools and bantering tunes back and forth, it was a true delight. It provided a vocal highlight of the season even though the current annum is only two weeks old.

Miss Merman, according to her version, was taping the Red Skelton show down the hall, and came in to see what it was all about. The trio, and it looked unrehearsed, rendered "No Biz Like etc." and was again a memorable moment. The rest of the elements in the show included the Smothers Bros. whose humor is sophomoric, but very effective. Jerry Van Dyke, is used in a manner that minimizes his value as a comic or as an adjunct to the show. Jose.

Jack Paar Show

There's a very definite character (that's all to the good) about the Jack Paar Show, now in its second season as an hour NBC-TV weekly entry. And there's no reason why it shouldn't establish itself as a tv "standard" from here on in, as with the Ed Sullivans, the Garry Moores, the Bob Hopes and the Perry Comos. For it's a show that has a distinct and unique style, quite apart from featuring of top headliners as guestars. Its impact stems primarily from Paar himself. There's a unmistakable aura of professionailism about him and most of the things he does. And when, as with last Friday's show, he shares the spotlight with such talent as Nat King Cole and George Gobel both at peak performance, along with young comic Bill Cosby, the combination was bound to be surefire. The need for short-cuts via the "shock treatment" or dubious headline-making no longer exists. Paar can deliver legitimately.

The Gobelisms made for an engaging interlude. Cole (accompanied by his Merry Young Souls mixed chorus); Cosby's "Noah and the Ark" comicalities; Paar's curtain raising foray into topical events from Cosa Nostra to BBC's "TWTWTW", plus his filmed vox-popping of Britishers trying to name past U. S. Presidents (one woman insisted on the inclusion of Bevan's name) made for diversity and moments of high entertainment. Rose.

The Great Adventure

The troubles with the premiere of CBS-TV's Friday night "Great Adventure" series seem to have been compounded on the John Houseman-produced second installment last week. It was the first of a two-parter on the life & times (and inevitable destruction) of Sitting Bull. (Next week: Massacre of Running Mill).

There was no stinting here, with no less a marquee than Ricardo Montalban, Joseph Cotten, James Dunn and Lloyd Nolan on deck for this "slice of history", along with Van Heflin's narration. But, as with the first week's entry, the narrative technique and the dramatization aspects just didn't mesh. As sheer adventure story (and who is to say with so much going on where historical fact and accuracy began and fiction left off), Walt Disney does this sort of thing more effectively. On the other hand, as a segment of pure Americana, it was dull and ponderous.

It took up where Sitting Bull struck down Custer and his Seventh Regiment, quickly spanned 14 years to the climatic days of 1890 when the Indians were shunted off to the reservations and badlands of the South Dakota Grand River to resort to paganism and ghost dances. The white man—in the form of the Seventh, Ninth and 10th Cavalry as embodied in Nolan, Cotten, Dunn, (all wasted in their roles)—return for a fresh encounter with Sitting Bull. As the latter is shot down and the viewer asked to return next week, it's quite obviously the twilight of the Sioux.

The issues were not always clearly defined in Otis Carney's script; it wasn't always evident whether viewer sympathy should lay with the exploited Indian or his white pursuer. If, as Van Heflin insisted, Sitting Bull was the victim of ignorance, one could more easily have pinned the "ignorance" rap on the whites. Or was it intended that way? The viewer, for one, never know. Rose.

Syndication Reviews

BATTLELINE
With Jim Bishop
Exec. Producer: Seymour Reed
Producers: Sherman Grinberg, Jim Sage, John Gilligan
Writers: Grinberg, Gilligan
Distribution: Official Films
PARTICIPATING
WABC-TV, N.Y.

"Battleline," a syndicated entry by Official Films, registers as an excellent documentary series about the last war. Jim Bishop, as narrator is seen for a brief intro to the events and thenceforth is heard only on the film soundtrack.

Last Thursday night's stanza (3) reprised the story of the attack on Pearl Harbor. It was told through the eyes of a Japanese flyer and an American sailor, both stories being presented with understanding and sympathy, a fact which marks the great distance the nation has come since the hate-the-Jap days of the early 1940s.

The most striking aspect of the show was great footage culled from both the Japanese and U.S. war film archives. Sequences of the Japanese forces training for the surprise strike and then taking off for the devastating blow against the men and the ships at Pearl Harbor were so vivid they made the viewer wince. Truth is not only stranger, but strong than fiction. Herm.

DEATH VALLEY DAYS
With Gilbert Roland, Patricia Huston, Andrea Darvi, Butch Patrick, William Zuckert; Stanley Andrews, narrator
Producer: Robert Stabler
Director: Tay Garnett
Writer: Zetta Castle

KNBC, L.A.

Four score and seven years ago, our forefathers were paid a visit by the emperor of Brazil who, while touring California, got off his train at a watering stop to have a breath of fresh air and a look-see at the countryside only to have the choo-choo chug away without him and leave him stranded. To start its 34th season on the airwaves, the last dozen of them on television, "Death Valley Days" added just enough syrup and philosophy to this 1876 incident to dilute its authenticity and make it slightly uncomfortable going for any adult viewer. But most moppets probably didn't mind having the cockles of their hearts warmed, so don't bet that "D.V.D." won't still be around 34 years hence.

Gilbert Roland, a remarkably durable actor, persuasively limned the emperor who is mistaken for a criminal by a typically hospitable (?) California pioneer woman (Patricia Huston) and turned over to the authorities at gunpoint, over the protests of her daughter (Andrea Darvi), who fancies herself a princess and believes Roland's story, to her ultimate satisfaction.

Others involved in the Zetta Castle-Francis Rosenwald dramatization were Butch Patrick and William Zuckert. Tay Garnett directed, and the western strains were composed by Marlin Skiles for producer Robert Stabler. Still aboard as narrator is "The Old Ranger," Stanley Andrews. Tube.

Foreign TV Followups

Play of the Week

David Rudkin, whom knowing critics voted "Most Promising Newcomer" for his legit "Afore Night Come" at a London club theatre last year, contributed a highly offbeat segment to Associated Television's "Play of the Week." Despite the undoubted imaginative power of his "Stone Dance," it proved quite a forbidding morsel for a mass audience and its boldness of imagery and theme demanded sympathetic comprehension from viewers. Those who could give it were well rewarded.

Said theme was the resolution of the tormented soul of Simon Iorweth (John Hurt). Son of an arid bile-punching pastor (Michael Hordern) and his mean, repressed wife, Simon was studying for the same kind of zealous priesthood. The family came to Cornwall to hold a revivalist meeting, and the pastor pitched his tent amidst a pagan survival, 19 stones that legend said were young girls, transfixed because they had danced on the Sabath.

Simon's natural instincts had been stifled by his inhibited upbringing. His awareness of this was sparked off by Daniel Morvah (Michael Bryant), who worked joyously with his hands and contemplated matrimony in its full sense. The pastor intoned against sexual indulgence, and Daniel rebelled against him. The dilemma and the anguish brought Simon to the brink of madness, expressed by drawing potent images on a wall, and his final break with puritanical rigidity.

All this was couched in lucid and evocative language by Rudkin. Peter Wood's direction was somberly atmospheric, and survived a few dull patches, when too many words threatened to make the whole thing come to a halt. John Hurt clicked as the sensitive Simon, getting to the heat of his inexplicit passion, and he was well partnered by Michael Bryant as the sincere, life-loving Daniel. Michael Hordern was fine as the blinkered preacher, and Rachel Thomas and, Rachel Kempson scored in support.

Although for specialized palates, the play was a memorable and challenging event for aficionadoes. Otta.

Armchair Theatre

"Armchair Theatre," the bimonthly hour dramatic entry from ABC-TV, moved into its eighth season on the commercial network. But, this term, it has a new producer in Leonard White, who picked up responsibility from Sydney Newman when latter moved over to BBC-TV to head up that web's dramatic output.

Unlike Newman who helmed ABC-TV's dramatic set up as well as producing the "Armchair Theatre" plays, White is solely concerned with the latter chore George Kerr being the new ABC overall dramatic bigwheel with the administrative worries.

White's accession to the helm of this toprated Sunday night drama show has cued in one of two major changes in policy. For instance, while Newman was a stickler for showcasing specially-written-for-tv material, White feels there's a place for stage plays, novel adaptations etc. as well as original writing. Newman pionered what was tabbed "dustbin drama" which accelerated the skein many rating points ahead of its competitors. White is broadening the scope to embrace several different aspects of playwrighting. But one thing they have in common: they are both out for impact.

First effort of the new season was "Mr. Big," a Ken Taylor adaptation of Ray Bradbury's novel "The Swarf." It was a sexed-up, keyhole-peeking yarn and as near "sick" drama as likely to be seen on tv which, undoubtedly, will get the new-look "Armachair Theatre" talked about.

Story revolved around a lustful fairground Johnnie who ran a mirror-maze; his dumblonde femme assistant who consistently rejected his advances, and a midget who came to look at himself in one of the distorting mirrors which reflected him as tall, slight and elegant.

The girl fell for the dwarf who turned out to be a writer and left the mirror-owning slob after he switched distorting mirrors on the dwarf (making him look stumpier than he actually was) in an attempt to get rid of the competition.

Tale was endowed with superb sets by Voytek, matching direction from Philip Saville and the fine acting prowess of Peter Vaughan as the slob and, Rosemary Leach as Amy, his dumb but shapely wench. George Claydon, as the midget, was adequate in an undemanding role.

Combination of its plusses, however, couldn't equate the one big minus of an unattractive story. Watt.

Maupassant

After a short break, Granada TV has restored this drama skein, based on the stories of Guy de Maupassant. Despite the high level of adaptations, the series loses much of the dry irony of the originals and does not compare in general entertainment value with the same company's Saki dramatizations, or with the successful ransacking of Somerset Maugham's tales. But enough remains to make them welcome, and "The Inheritance," chosen to reintroduce the skein, was skilfully rendered by Hugh Leonard.

The highly Gallic situation concerned the suspected impotence of Lesable (John Wood), who had married the daughter of an office colleague. The girl was due to inherit a million francs—but only if she produced a child within three years. Crux of the matter was whether this would be achieved, and it was, in the nick of time—through the helpful intervention of a dashing friend.

It took too long for the plot to gather momentum, and, when it did the saucy implications of Lesable's despair egged on to procreation by his father-in-law, Cachelin (Norman Bird), were agreeably conveyed. John Wood was superb as the worried husband, anxious to hide his physical shortcomings by long country vacations. Jennifer Jayne charmed as the wife, and Norman Bird was okay as the typical money-grabbing French provincial.

Gordon Fleming directed Philip Mackie's production neatly, but mighty have sped more swiftly over the early scenes, establishing Lesable's ambitious nature, which sidetracked the main point. Other segments of the series take in two or three of Maupassant's tales, and these might reduce the danger of loitering. Otta.

Bernard Kalb

pared his byline impact at the N.Y. Times with the impact of television. "When they called me Marvin it was the overwhelming impression of tv on people."

Asked about the transition from being a newspaperman to becoming a radio-tv correspondent for CBS News, Kalb said he essentially is the same reporter. "The techniques change. There's the use of pictures." He went on to explain his close relationship with Severn, who joined him in the year's adventure. Severn, prior to coming to CBS News, had been a cameraman for KING-TV, Seattle. He and Severn, never apart on assignments work closely on all the picture stories.

The setting for the interview was Sardi's East, in deference to that section of the globe covered by the subject. Walking back to CBS headquarters, the conversation turned to ratings and the N. Y. news telecasting situation, which finds WCBS-TV o&o telecasting the Cronkite half-hour web report from 6:30 to 7 p.m.

There was an exchange of information about what the ratings mean, why WCBS-TV may have chosen the earlier half-hour, when the sets in use aren't as great, the possible role of the FCC in the matter, the different results of the different rating services, among other things.

Last seen, he was heading up Park Ave. to his temporary home at CBS News in N. Y., where life for Bernard Kalb, when he isn't covering cyclones, revolutions and wars, and being called Marvin instead of Bernard, may be simpler.

"I don't know what the ratings are," he said.

Granada TV, London, bought "Desilu Playhouse," and "Fair Exchange" and Wales TV (TWW) also bought these two. "Travel Time," color series, was sold in The Netherlands, Manila, Japan and France, while "Untouchables," in addition to being sold in Spain, was acquired in France, Iraq, and Kuwait.

"Jazz Scene" was sold in Hungary and Czechoslovakia; "The Texan" and "Travel Time" in Japan; "Mussolini" and "Eva Peron," both one-shot specials, to WGN-TV, Chicago, which also bought "Travel Time;" "Guestward Ho" to WATE-TV, Knoxville, and "Journey of a Lifetime" to KYW-TV, Cleveland.

pravity is told. Most doubted whether "The Lover" (shown over British TV this spring and recently also staged in London as a play) could ever be shown in Italy—or many other countries for that matter—despite the "Italia Prize" recommendation that all entries, and especially winners, be screened by all participating nets.

The level of other works was likewise good. CBS' drama entry, "Five Characters in Search of an Exit" reportedly almost won a prize, as did the same outlet's "The Silent Spring of Rachel Carson." Giancarlo Menotti's NBC entry "Labyrynth" got rather divided notices, but ABC's "The Vatican" appealed to many, as did "The Kremlin" (NBC), though in all cases, the lack of subtitles or simultaneous translation hampered total penetration of these U. S. distributions.

Others deserving mention, from among many entries in each class, were Switzerland's "A Sunday in May", sensitively told story of two unfulfilled loves; France's "The Third Concerto", about a pianist with amnesia; Sweden's "Happiness Comes and Goes", concerning a married man's out-of-town adventure (again an improbable entry for most nets due to in-bed scenes and outspoken dialog); and Britain's "Affight", routine but well-acted police item.

In the documentary sector, praise went to Japan's "Monkeys and the Naturalists", Denmark's "New Religions in Japan", Spain's "Fiesta at Pamplona", France's "Five Englishmen at Christmas", and Britain's "A Man is Hungry". Generally speaking, drama and documentaries proved more universally acceptable than the musical presentations, which got the most divided reactions.

its "Cinema 70" package, winning berths in the markets of N.Y., Chicago, Philadelphia, San Francisco, Washington, Milwaukee, Indiana, Seattle, Johnstown, Pa., Rochester, N. Y., and Hartford, Conn. Turell's outfit recently bought 127 J. Arthur Rank pix for tv distribution, one hundred of them falling into the rerun category, having already had a tv distribution round in the U.S. Turell, who said the 127 represents the best of the Rank library, said he will put the rerun pix to "sleep" for awhile before marketing them again.

At about the first of the year, Walter Reade-Sterling, one of the major distribs of international pix, will have another package on the market, to be called "Cinema 90."

Graff, of Embassy Pictures, reports sales of its package of 35 pix to 74 markets. Embassy Pictures package is in such markets as Nashville, Tampa, Atlanta, Roanoke, Charlotte, Moline, Richmond and Toledo. Because of the popularity of the "Hercules" type pix, Embassy has added 13 more muscle pix for availability in January. Latter 13 muscle pix have been dubbed, but have not been played theatrically in the U.S.

uniform on each of the stations, though the day and time will vary. Areas included in the PG&E deal are San Francisco, Bakersfield, Chico-Redding, Eureka, Fresno, and Santa Barbara.

In another development, Reed said he and producer Sherman Grinberg have secured hundreds of thousands of feet of previously unreleased film shot by the Axis forces for inclusion in at least four upcoming "Battle Line" episodes. New footage had been in the libraries of Japanese and German governments, in private collections and in source files of various newsreel and motion picture producers.

Most dramatic footage includes the Kamaikaze Corp. in action at Okinawa and enemy coverage of the fighting on Guadalcanal and, in the European theatre, enemy coverage of the Battle of the Bulge and Dieppe.

ATAS' 9 Chapters, 6,000 Membership

Mort Werner, NBC programming v.p. and prexy of the National Academy of Television Arts & Sciences, delivered a progress report to the Academy's N.Y. chapter at the Americana Hotel last Thursday night (3). He noted that since the national academy was founded in 1947 under the presidency of Ed Sullivan, the industry organization has grown from two chapters with 3,000 members into nine chapter cities with almost 6,000 members.

Werner disclosed that recent decisions by the Academy's board of trustees will result in the chartering of new chapters in Boston, Dallas, Philadelphia, Denver and other keys. He also reported on the Academy's diversification into such activities as the publication of Television Quarterly with the cooperation of Syracuse U.; its Foundation fellowship and scholarship grants; its projected library and museum of television and the Academy's forums and seminars. Through the newly formed International Council & Academy, the organization is also seeking to establish a continuing exchange of the arts, sciences and techniques of television with broadcasters throughout the world, Werner said.

This was the first of a series of talks to Academy chapters. Werner is due to tour St. Louis, Columbus, and Washington, D.C. early in December.

PARTICIPATING
WOR, N. Y.

Peter Lind Hayes & Mary Healy are one of the more charming couples in show biz. They have rich backgrounds in the theatre, seem abreast of current events, and can converse articulately and entertainingly. In their bow on a breakfast show on the space previously allocated to Dorothy Kilgallen & Dick Kollmar, they indicate a long and pleasant stay on the petit-dejurner circuit.

Hayes' background, of course includes his upbringing as the son of the vaudster Grace Hayes, and he had a rich tenure in both vaudeville and supper clubs, before he combined with Miss Healy in all show biz fields. They were for many years the foremost man-and-wife team on the boards.

The duo speak entertainingly, seemingly for the prime benefit of each other rather than the home audience. Yet their talk is of general interest and the tuners-in can absorb their discussion without feeling like eavesdroppers. They speak without self-conciousness filling in opinions with anectoda, reminiscenses of theatrical personalities, all without giving the feeling of being name-droppers.

The five-times weekly layout should be one of the more popular gab shows on this Mutual flagship.

Dietrich's WNBC Exit

WNBC Radio, which has been experiencing trouble in coming up with the correct programming format for the highly competitive N.Y. market, has dropped George S. Dietrich as manager. His resignation in effective Oct. 29.

Dietrich, who has been with NBC since 1950, had been director of radio spots sales for NBC, prior to his appointment as WNBC Radio. No replacement has been announced as yet by Ted Walworth, NBC v.p. and general manager for WNBC Radio and WNBC-TV.

Cedar Hill, Tex.—The city council is scheduled to act on the application of KTVT-TV, Fort Worth, for a zoning exception on 112 acres adjoining Cedar Hill High School. The property is now zoned as residential and KTVT-TV want a zoning exception to permit the use of both television and radio tower equipment on the site. The application has been "under study" for several weeks.

German TV Documentary On PX Headquarters

Nuernberg, Oct. 8.

A West German television station is now making a 25-minute documentary on the European Exchange System, which operates the Army's post exchanges throughout Europe.

This will give the German audience its first glimpse of what it's like inside the American buying centers, and how the military tries to simulate the American way of life across the ocean.

The show was filmed partially at the post exchange in Fuerth, showing the retail store, snack bar, gift wrapping service—and also the Palace of Justice in Nuernberg, where the Nazil trials were held after the war, and which is now the headquarters of the EES.

Show, made by Bavarian Television, is due to be shown later this fall on the West German First Channel.

See Beaverbrook Vs. Roy Thomson Battle for Scottish TV Contract

London, Oct. 8.

Beaverbrook vs. Roy Thomson.

That is the intriguing possibility in the new bid for commercial tv contracts. The Thomson group, publishers of a major chain of national and provincial papers, which pioneered the Scottish commercial television outlet some eight years back, is expected to have the Beaverbrook group as a challenger when it seeks a renewal of its contract.

Beaverbrook Newspapers, which publishes the Daily and Sunday Express, the Evening Standard, the Scottish Daily Express and the Glasgow Evening Citizen, is emerging as a serious contender to Thomson for the Scottish tv rights.

Leading trade and political sources believe that it is unlikely that the Beaverbrook group, despite its powerful publishing resources, will be able to upset the grip on the station which the Thomson group already holds, but it is thought likely that steps will be taken to give the challengers a chance to acquire a substantial minority holding in Scottish Television.

The Beaverbrook press, which has never stopped sniping at commercial television, gave its first indication last May that it was prepared to get in on the act At that time it responded to a statement, by Associated Television's deputy chairman, Norman Collins, that the new tax levy would make commercial television unprofitable, by offering to take over that company's contract.

VARIETY was the first paper to would be reflected in programming quality.

Metromedia devoted 18 pages to legal arguments that the proposed limits violate the First Amendment and run counter to earlier FCC and Congressional statements.

Calling the rules "anti-business and anti-growth," Metromedia said FCC's proposals were "completely at odds" with Kennedy Administration policy and the Presidents speeches encouraging business expansion.

Storer's long statement was pegged to the reasoning that the rules were "inconsistent with the statutory concept of broadcasting as a competitive free enterprise system."

Triangle complained that no other media competing for the advertising buck had to operate under inflexible Federal authority which would limit the amount of advertising it could carry.

Taft & Westinghouse

While opposing the rules, Taft and Westinghouse offered their own suggestions. Taft said FCC should continue to judge "overcommercialization" on the case-by-case basis but publish "rule of thumb" standards for advertising. It also suggested continuing modifications of the standards "rather than leaving them a mystery."

Westinghouse said FCC should consider adding a new section to its station license renewal forms.

It would require stations to describe their commercial policies in detail and their application to the demands of their particular area and operation.

Wilner & Bergson, a law firm repping 13 licensees, charged the rules would cripple marginal stations. If they are put into effect, tv stations won't be attractive investments, especially in small markets where most of the expansion will take place, the firm warned.

Cohn & Marks

Filing one of the most caustic comments was the Marcus Cohn and Leonard Marks communications law firm. In a brief submitted by Cohn, the firm said the most serious harm resulting from the curbs would be to FCC's administration of the Communications Act and its regulation of broadcasting.

The firm said FCC's notice "strongly suggests" it "has affirmatively chosen to abandon any effort of its own to create a basic policy concerning overcommercialization."

"The adoption of inflexible rules would constitute the most gross abdication of the Commission's basic responsibilities," the firm said.

Station Representatives Assn. broached the suggestion that the Code Authority file the Codes and updatings with FCC. The reps warned inflexible government rules could destroy programming values in the new and still-developing tv industry.

The reps said their proposal would avoid this, while at the same time giving FCC sanction to crack down on stations violating Code commercial limits.

Little Stations Too

But all comment wasn't left to the biggies. The little stations had their day and sounded off, if not with the same legal finesse, with more venom.

WJZM, Clarksville, Tenn., said the rules "boil down to the Commission imposing its own ideas of what is most enjoyable in viewing or listening on the industry."

KSEI, Pocatello, Idaho, predicted imposing the curbs "would result in pandemonium."

WSRC a daytimer serving Negroes in Durham, N.C., said it is already at a handicap in garner advertiser support. NAB's codes are too restrictive for small market and minority stations, the outlet said.

4th Network

to the population and it is hard to predict what will happen. When the third network came in many people thought the third network could not survive."

One reason Minow gave for the possibility of a fourth web was that it would offer smaller businesses a chance to advertise a local firm. He said many cannot afford to now.

The FCC appropriations quizzing was generally a love feast and surprisingly no blasts were made at the Commission or broadcast programming.

Subcommittee chairman Rep. Albert Thomas (D-Tex.) was especially pleased FCC was turning $310,000 back to the Treasury from its New York UHF experiment. Saying, "We like to do business with you," Thomas praised FCC's budget presentation.

On another point, Minow told Ostertag it was possible "a long way away" that all tv might be in color. Minow said it would depend on the cost of color tv sets, but "I think it could happen."

predict that the Beaverbrook group (which is now helmed by Max Aitken, the son of Lord Beaverbrook) would be among the serious applicants for new tv contracts. It was felt in the industry, however, that it would follow through on its original challenge to ATV. There is some relief among the broadcasters that it is now deciding to pitch its might against a rival publishing giant.

Operators of other commercial outlets are hoping that the Beaverbrook group's application will meet with some success in the belief that this may well lead to the end of the persistent sniping that has gone on in the Express and its associated newspapers ever since commercial tv got off the ground just over eight years ago. The Beaverbrook group, and any other challenger, has until mid-November to lodge an application with the Independent Television Authority. Contracts will be awarded early in 1964.

British TV Season

Grade (who, incidentally, still has the "Espionage" ace up his sleeve).

American shows on the commercial network have, as per normal, faired well if not excellently taking the first reports as a guide. ABC's new acquisition "Greatest Show On Earth," out of Desilu, bowed with a Sunday peak time 40 rating against BBC's smash-of-a-season-ago "Black & White Minstrel Show." "Beverly Hillbillies," at last in London after some success around the regions, followed "Armchair Theatre" with a tasty 34 rating, which is considered bullish for a show starting at 10:35 p.m. on a Sunday. ABC's "Lawman," in the same slot in the North and the Midlands, did even better.

But the weekend ratings, phoned through to the stations from TAM sources, do not reveal at this stage how BBC-TV has fared in the first two days of the new schedule skirmishes. Fuller and more telling details will be out at the end of the week. That's when the real analysing will start.

NAB prexy LeRoy Collins named a 10-man committee to plan the Broadcast Engineering Conference. The meet is held as part of NAB's convention. Clyde Hunt, v.p. for engineering of the Post-Newsweek stations in Washington was appointed chairman.

Other members are: Frank Marx, prez, engineering division, ABC; James Parker, director, television engineering, CBS; William Dutton, director, allocations engineering, NBC; Leslie Learned, engineering director, Mutual; Malcolm Burleson, engineering v.p. Metromedia; James Butts, engineering director, Mullins Broadcasting Co., Denver; Russell Pope, chief engineer, Golden Empire Broadcasting Co., Chico, Calif.; Wilson Raney, chief engineer, Cowles Broadcasting Service Inc, Memphis, and Orrin Towner, engineering director, WHAS Inc., Louisville.

WHLI, Hempstead, L.I., strengthened the broadcasters' right to equal access to the news by gaining permission to record the proceedings of a public hearing conducted by the Nassau County board of supervisors. Last year, this same board denied WHLI's Bill Nelson the right to record the proposed budget hearings but after a vigorous editorial campaign by WHLI prexy Paul Godofsky, the board reversed its long-standing policy and installed at its own expense recording and broadcasting equipment.

WHLI was present at Monday's (7) hearings by the board on the Town of Oyster Bay's road paving program.

When Capt. Tom Brownrigg was named general manager of Associated-Rediffusion on its inception in 1954, he indicated to the board that he did not want to go on working when he was much over 60. Now, in his 61st year, he has implemented that statement and his resignation takes effect at the end of the year. His decision to retire, however, has nothing to do with reasons of health, as erroneously reported in the Sept. 25 VARIETY. After he quits his g.m. post at the turn of the year he will be retaining an active interest in tv via a number of directorships. As previously reported, he will be succeeded as general manager by John Macmillan, now A-R's program controller.

Educational Broadcasting Corp., operating WNDT, N.Y., received $25,000 from the Louis Calder Foundation and $12,500 from the Rockefeller Brothers Fund.

This marks the Calder Foundation's first grant to educational tv. The Rockefeller Brothers Fund had previously contributed to the acquisition fund for Channel 13 in 1961.

For the fifth consecutive year, Zenith Radio Corp. has already produced and sold (to retailers) 1,000,000 or more television receivers. This year the million mark was reached in the first nine months, a month earlier than last year, which augurs a new production record for the company.

conservative, too careful about controversy, too "cut and dried." He said he yarned for the opportunity to go out after his own story and bring it back the way he saw it, as he was encouraged to do under the Garry regime.

It is no exaggeration to say that the development at WBBM-TV is a little like breaking up the Yankees, so far as the rest of the trade is concerned. WNBQ, which has made some progress in recent years toward closing the gap between first and second place, sees an opportunity now to grab the lead—especially with the extra-added Huntley-Brinkley impetus. The NBC station has been creating additional newscasts everywhere possible in the schedule, partly because they're saleable and partly to promote its news identity.

As for WBKB, if it can make its new personnel acquisitions jell into a proper news image with Dreier & Co., it conceivably can get a healthy slice of the pie. And in the event of a three-way race, WGN-TV, despite the news disadvantages of an independent, may get inspired to join in the fun.

But this is all pure speculation about what might happen, and the fact remains that WBBM-TV is still the front-runner by a good margin. The news-weather combo of Fahey Flynn and P. J. Hoff, veterans of the old team, have been kings of the hill in the crucial 10 p.m. competition for a long time and seem in no danger at this point of being toppled. Furthermore, the avuncular Flynn, whose "believability" factor is probably greater than that of any newscaster hereabouts, will also move into Reynolds' vacated spot at 6 p.m., so it doesn't figure to be severely weakened, if at all.

John Drury, the "sex appeal" newscaster who dominated the Milwaukee market before WBBM-TV spirited him away, has been waiting in the wings for some time and will get his big chance before the hausfrau viewership in Reynolds' noontime slot. Possibly he'll also get Hill's early morning camera chore. The loss of Hill is not to be belittled, but the station does have an aggressive understudy in Mike Nigoff plus a few other able legmen like Jerry Harper and Wendell Smith to keep the situation uncritical.

Clark George, the CBS veepee in charge, apparently isn't shaken by the sudden loss of Hill and Reynolds. He's put his bet on Madigan to run the show and is keeping it there, figuring that the dissidents might just as well leave for the good of the operation. But he'd undoubtedly feel a lot more comfortable if they didn't skip to the competition.

Negroes for Teleblurbs

Hollywood, Oct. 8.

Negroes are going to be represented in teleblurbs, an area in which the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People has claimed the Negro has had no representation.

Actor Hari Rhodes filmed Gillette teleblurbs for the SIB company at Paramount, blurbs which were telecast during the World's Series opening day, and also in connection with the "Friday Night Fights" on ABC-TV.

Rhodes commented he hasn't even tried to get a teleblurb job, feeling he wouldn't have a chance, but SIB overturned his agent, Hal Shafer, and that's how he got the work.

Rhodes, an actor for eight years, attributed the change in climate to "the timing, the pressures of the day, the integration movement. "They decided they need representation of the Negro in commercials," he said.

Nancy Wilson, Negro singer, also has been set for commercials.

Going Live Can Be Deadening

of Ernie Glucksman and Perry Cross and the attitude that is so refreshing that Jerry himself now realizes that television is a very demanding thing, and is going to work extremely hard to continue the development of this show."

While Moore pointed to what he called the "terrific" rating of Lewis' second show and predicted that "we're going to cut down that 'Gunsmoke' runaway," his Lewis sponsors, who were given those same ratings the "bankrollers'" eagle eye, seemed somewhat less sanguine. They drew scant comfort from the quality of the shows or the declining Nielsens which suffered a 29% dropoff in the Nielsen 30-markets for the program's second week.

Since Lewis has some 36 more two-hour shows to go in his first ABC year of a longterm deal, there's considerable speculation as to what has gone wrong and what can be done to make good on Moore's closed-circuit prediction that "Lewis is going to be really very successful."

Several key tv agency execs feel Lewis could stage a comeback if (and this is acknowledged to be a mighty if) he can let somebody else boss the show. Those who acknowledge Lewis' great abilities in front of or behind the "live" tv cameras are convinced he can't be both places at once, particularly in a truly "live" show.

Ernie Glucksman, billed as the "executive producer," it's pointed out, has been a Lewis associate and on the Lewis payroll for years. Lewis, it's strongly believed, serves as Glucksman's boss, not the other way around as would be necessary if the show were to acquire the showmanship "discipline" so vital to recruiting those big Nielsen audiences.

In his Paramount-distributed feature film releases, tv experts note, Hal Wallis is the true boss and guiding genuis who actually "produces" the Lewis boxoffice successes. If ABC could stand up to Lewis and make him realize that the network must appoint a "tv Hal Wallis" to take over creative control—thus allowing Lewis to function as performer rather than the mastermind showman—then and only then, as the agency men see it, would Lewis have a good chance to make ABC's expensive gamble pay out.

On the question of taste alone, it's felt, Lewis needs the strong hand of a producer from whom he takes orders, not a producer to whom he gives orders. For example, no tv-wise producer, it's felt, would let Lewis get away with last Saturday's leering aside to the over-exposed lady in the front row —"the boys in the band might get cramped from round shoulders." As one ABC affil put it, "This might wow them in the Catskills, but people will tune out this kind of a show in the home."

This failure to provide the strong producer, from whom the star must take orders, it's felt, was the key reason for the deep and chronic disappointment that has attended almost all "live" efforts in recent seasons, be it a Steve Allen or a Frank Sinatra. Somebdoy other than the performer, it's argued, must supply the creative direction. While this criticism seems to apply to Lewis, it's recognized that with Bob Banner at the Jimmy Dean creative helm, other adverse factors are at work with respect to Dean.

Meantime, of course, Lawrence Welk continues to prove the exception to the ABC "live means evil spelled backwards" rule. For while only three of ABC's new shows scored No. 1 on the 30-market Nielsens throughout their time period, Welk showed his old "live" showmanship form by beating both "Defenders" and Saturday Night at the Movies.

At least Lewis has a good lead-in.

four outside broadcast units—two from the Danish web and two from BBC—which provided a total of 10 cameras. In the region of 150 lamps were used and an entirely new lighting technique had to be evolved by Bob Wright, BBC's lighting supervisor.

And while Kronborg Castle afforeded such interiors as the largest Great Hall in Europe for the duel scenes, a magnificently decorated chapel ("Get thee to a Nunnery" scenes), and King's and Queen's chambers, etc. the technical problems running parallel were immense.

For example, initial worry of Hans Jensen, in charge of nearly 50 Danish OB engineers, was the fact that there was no source of power in the castle. This was overcome by laying on a cable from Elsinore. Another headache: sound reproduction. External noises from the sirens of passing ships, the fog horn adjacent to the castle and 'planes overhead figured among the frequent distractions which held up production.

According to producer Lake: "One big problem in a production like this, in time (it took a fortnight to shoot). You have to be careful that people don't work themselves into the ground and so don't give of their best. The Danish camera crews are incredibly patient, one or two of them are so dedicated that they are artists."

On the theeping side, too, the exhilaration of working with the surrounding castle tapestries, furniture, paintings etc. were countered by working long hours, often in uncomfortable conditions. The shooting fortnight produced such weather hazards as thunderstorms, fog and a gale.

On-screen, the drama will emerge early next spring as part of BBC's celebration of the quartercentenery of Shakespeare's birth. (It is expected to be transmitted in the Scandinavia countries at approximately the same time as BBC projects it).

Edited versions of the 150-minuter are to be sold around the world and, according to Sydney Newman, BBC's drama chief, who visited Elsinore during the production, there is a "queue of interested American and European buyers" for what he describes as "the most wonderful, complicated and exacting production ever done for television."

315 Suspension Bill Gets Thru Senate Without a Murmer

Washington, Oct. 8.

With scant palavering, the Senate unanimously agreed to suspend equal time rules for the 1964 Presidential and Vice Presidential campaign.

In contrast to the earlier House brawl, spokesmen for Southern Democrats and Republicans urged passage of the legislation suspending equal time Sec. 315 for the campaign.

The bill passed by voice vote.

Because of two minor changes made in the House version, the bill will have to make the trip back to that body.

The Senate bill changed the beginning of suspension from Aug. 20, 1964 to Sept. 3.

The change was made because in the interim between House and Senate votes, the Democrats chose the week of Aug. 23 for their National Convention.

The Senate also dropped the requirement for FCC to report rates charged politicians by stations.

Insiders predict the House will accept the changes and sent the bill to the President. If for some reason, objections to the Senate changes are raised by the House, the differences will have to be worked out in a conference committee of the House and Senate Commerce Committees.

The measure was sheparded through the Senate by Sen. John Pastore (D-R.I.). It was backed by Sen. Spessard Holland (D-Fla.) and Norris Cotten (R-N.H.).

Cotton said: "From a strictly political point of view and as a Republican, perhaps I should be pretty chary about this legislation because there is a substantial body of evidence to indicate that Vice President Nixon may have lost the 1960 election as a result of the great debates which resulted from our suspension of Sec. 315 for the 1960 Presidential campaign."

Nevertheless, he said he backed the bill "so that every American will have a reserved front row seat in front of his tv-set for the 1964 Presidential campaign, which may be one of television's alltime great spectacullars."

Sen. Vance Hartke (D-Ind.) again pushed for outright repeal of Sec. 315 but backed the suspension bill.

As Britain's Labor Party Goes So Goes Future of Educ'l TV

London, Oct. 8.

If a Labor Government is voted in at the next general election, chances are Britain's fourth tv channel will be devoted to educational programming. Alternatively, time may be taken from the three channels — BBC-1 and 2 and the commercial web — and the fourth (presumably another commercial enterprise) when allocated.

These very broad teachvee plans for providing the U.K. with a "university of the air" have been revealed by Harold Wilson, leader of the Labor Party, who wants to provide facilities for home study (up to university and high technical standards) in order to ease Britain's educational problems.

Politico envisages the formation of an educational trust comprising broadcasters, teachers and other interested parties—such an outfit would be state-aided—to run the etv project which, it's planned, would be backed by provision of text books and other material. Papers would be set and marked under the aegis of universities and technical colleges, etc. His thought that one-year diploma courses could be provided.

Meantime, British broadcasters are already giving etv programming a lot of attention. The commercial web, which has been running a Sunday morning etv experiment for many months past, is prepping to launch a second round of it in the fall.

Associated-TeleVision, which is putting on special science programs as well as French language etv broadcasts, has already linked with leading publisher here, Penguin Books, to provide a "written companion" for the teachvee shows. ABC-TV, a prime mover in the establishment of etv in this country, is experimenting with a series of do-it-yourself transmission kicking off with auto mechanics.

Rome today to set final plans for the filming. So far no stars or directors have been signed and the project hasn't been budgetted but the first is definitely slated to roll in a few months.

U. S. Fix For TV

After the Ponti series are completed, Embassy will shift its attention to the States for the production of tv films in Gotham and on the Coast. No details of the domestic production plans are ready yet but again Embassy cash will be the major financing for the projects. The Italo series are the second major deal in 1963 between Levine and Ponti, the first having been the $8,500,000 production of four features, two of which have been completed, one of which is now lensing and the fourth soon to start. These are "Ghost at Noon," "Empty Canvas," "Yesterday, Today and Tomorrow" and "Casanova."

On the film production side, Embassy has projects in the works which will involve filmmaking in Hollywood, New York and London. In coproduction with Paramount, "Where Love Has Gone" is shedded to begin shortly on the Coast, to be followed by "Nevada Smith." There is a deal for the filming in 1964 of two films starring Italo star Marcello Mastroianni, these pix to be made both in New York and on the Coast. And there are other domestic projects in the works, many to involve Embassy cash primarily. The Par coproductions are financed by Paramount with 50-50 ownership by Embassy and Par.

In London there are projects blueprinted for the production of three pix, again involving Embassy production coin primarily. Bill Zimmerman, Embassy production v.p., planed there yesterday (Tues.) to further these deals. In addition, the company has negotiations in progress for the production of two pictures with British producer-actor Stanley Baker, one to be made in Cyprus and the other in London. And there are two other British deals known to be in the works. In the case of the first three, however, everything is arranged and it's now just a matter of signing the proper documents.

Also on the Embassy production schedule are "Tropic of Cancer," which will be made in 1964 in Paris with a French coproducer. Then there's "Imperial Woman," plans for which still aren't settled, "The Idol," a pet project of Lightstone's which is also in the future, Herman Robbins' still unwritten "The Adventurer" and others. Recently completed are the Ponti pix, "Carpetbaggers" (with Par), the Russian-Italian-Embassy coproduction "Italiani, Brava Gente" and others yet to be released like "Zulu."

A while back, Levine stated his intention to enter production in a big way and he now appears ready to do so. The new wrinkle, and an important one, is the addition of tv films to scheme. In addition to the continued purchase of foreign product for distribution in the U.S., these Embassy-produced pix will give the indie one of the largest catalogs in the biz and also make the company one of the most active outfits in the industry, indie or major.

Levine has often said that the way to run an indie company is to think like a major. Well, he's doing just that.

Texas City, Tex. — KTLW has expanded its broadcast facilities, and through arrangements with the Metro Broadcasting Corp. has opened studios in Houston to better serve its increased biz.

Mitchell Trio's 'Mind,' Dana's 'More,' Makeba's 'World,' Heath's 'Brass,' Allen & Rossi's 'Words' Top New LPs

CHAD MITCHELL TRIO: "SINGIN' OUR MIND" (Mercury). Among the ever-growing ranks of modern folk singers, the Chad Mitchell Trio has achieved a special prominence because the group not only delivers the standard tunes in exciting fashion but also fulfills one of the original functions of the folksinger—to comment on the times. The Trio has a big, lusty sound and a sense of humor for solid satire. Latter is demonstrated by "Alma Mater," a look at things at Ole Miss and a zippy rewrite of "Twelve Days of Christmas", which comments on the Nazi ranks during World War II. Interspersed are solid straight folk items, all of which result in a top-flight pop folk session.

VIC DANA: "MORE" (Dolton). With the single click, "More," as the marquee lure for this package, Vic Dana should build his stock as an album seller. He's a young singer, but his song-selling savvy is bound to attract the adult disk trade even with such current teen clicks as "Danke Schoen" and "The End of The World." The backing by Ernie Freeman is of great help to the overall effect.

"THE WORLD OF MIRIAM MAKEBA" (RCA Victor). Miriam Makeba, the South African songstress, again turns out a highly attractive set of folk songs. In this collection, she does tunes from tribal Africa, some Latin numbers and a group of modern ballads. In the latter category are such interesting items as "Forbidden Games," "Wonders and Things," "Where Can I Go" and "Little Boy," a grippingly dramatic item. Hugh Masekela orch back up excellently.

TED HEATH & HIS MUSIC: "SATIN, STRINGS & BOUNCING BRASS" (London). Designed to give the stereo buff the utmost in sound reproduction, this latest Phase 4 session by London Records features the work of Ted Heath & Co. It turns out to be a useful album for both Heath and London. The crisp, clear sound should give stereo fans lots to crow about. Heath's big band comes across with fine quality as it covers various musical moods with full-bodied renditions and performance. Tunes are from the familiar big band songbag and are presented, both by the band and the disk, in very enjoyable fashion.

MARTY ALLEN & STEVE ROSSI: "TWO FUNNY FOR WORDS" (Reprise). Now on the Reprise label after a succession of platters on ABC-Paramount, Marty Allen & Steve Rossi have another solid comedy LP, loaded with fast routines. Recorded at the Concord Hotel, Kiamesha Lake, N.Y., the session is funny and slickly-devised. Material covers "Cleopatra," Playboy Bunnies, folksingers, football, the CIA, bullfighting and topical material concerning today's newsmakers. The lines come fast, and the Concord audience seems to be having a good time. Disk listeners will also enjoy this outing too, as the duo continues to be one of the brightest units on the comedy scene.

"THE WONDERFUL WORLD OF GENE McDANIELS" (Liberty). Gene McDaniels is a singer with lotsa range for handling ballads and swinging material in tasty and stylish fashion. He displays his talent in this session which includes blues, straight swinging stuff, ballads and other ditties. Arranged and conducted by Marty Paich, one of the workingest chart men in the biz, the outing has a solid sound that ably showcases McDaniels' slick vocal abilities. The LP deserves lotsa attention.

JERRY STILLER & ANNE MEARA (Verve). One of the new comedy teams to enter the nitery circuit, Jerry Stiller & Anna Meara are a bright duo that pack a lot of laughs into these grooves. Although there is nothing way-out about the approach, the team does have a good ear for parody and mimicry. Their comments range over tv commercials in a very good series of brief bits, a more dubious item about the astronauts, an after dinner argument and a neat boss-secretary routine. This LP was recorded at the hungry i in San Francisco.

TENNESSEE ERNIE FORD-ROGER WAGNER CHORALE: "THE STORY OF CHRISTMAS" (Capitol). This is a fine Christmas package, combining the contrasting talents of the polished Roger Wagner Chorale and the rugged voice of Tennessee Ernie Ford. The repertory mostly covers traditional ground, including such standards as "Joy To The World," "God Rest Ye Merry, Gentlemen" and "Adeste Fidelis," among others. There is also some unfamiliar material, notably "Some Children See Him" and Ford's reading of the story of the Nativity from the Gospel of St. Luke. Set has been taken from the track of an upcoming Christmas tv show.

LIVING VOICES: "SMOKE GETS IN YOUR EYES" (RCA Camden). Like the Living Strings, RCA Camden's Living Voices are a reliable producer of listenable music. For this fine vocal unit delivers a set of ballads in smooth and effective style, with arrangements by Anita Kerr who also conducts the outing. The tone is soft and pleasant as the Voices render such tunes as "Smoke Gets In Your Eyes," "Be My Love," "Over the Mountain," "Old Cape Cod" and others. It's a solid album that should provide material for home and "good music" programmers.

PAMELA BROWN & ANTHONY QUAYLE: "ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA" (Caedmon). Latest from the Caedmon spoken word shop is this disk version of Shakespeare's "Antony and Cleopatra." Starring Pamela Brown and Anthony Quayle, the album is another fine release for the diskery, sparked by solid performances and good adaptation. As usual, Howard Sackler has directed the session and has done so with dramatic effectiveness and style. The text of the waxing is included in a separate booklet with the platter, which adds to its educational value. One of Shakespeare's more exciting dramas, it has been strongly captured here.

BURGESS MEREDITH: "THE WONDERFUL 'O'" (Colpix). James Thurber's "The Wonderful 'O'" has been strikingly captured in this disk, narrated by Burgess Meredith and featuring a full cast. The session has a haunting quality, spiced with humor and dramatic music. J. Raymond Henderson has provided the musical portion of the presentation which does a lot to set mood and style of the session. The cast likewise does a fine job of capturing mood and style of the piece. Meredith is a strong narrator for the presentation, and whole package adds up to an interesting, specialized platter.

BILL SHELBURNE: "VERY GLAD TO BE UNHAPPY" (Sir). There's a soft and intimate style to Bill Shelburne's way of singing but it's full of sophistication and chic. Devotees of the small nightclubs where a doodling piano and a casual vocal style are the main attraction will find plenty to enjoy in this Shelburne repertoire. He does a lot with Bart Howard's "First Warm Day In May" and "My Love Is A Wanderer," among others but his treatment of G. Wood's "Merry-Go-Round," Comden & Green's "Some Other Time," Coleman & Leigh's "It Amazes Me" and Rodgers & Hart's "Glad To Be Unhappy" are gems that the chic set will cling to.

Elvis Presley's "Bossa Nova Baby" (Presley†) is a high-powered item with a strong beat that's sure to keep up his phenomenal spinning streak. "It's A Mad, Mad, Mad, Mad World" (United Artists*) is the title song from the same pic and it, too, will get across its spinning point.*

WAYNE NEWTON . . . . . SOMEONE'S AHEAD OF YOU
(Capitol) . . . . . Shirl Girl

Wayne Newton's "Someone's Ahead of You" (T.M.†) comes on the heels of his "Danke Schoen" click with a rocking buildup that can't miss. Also in its favor are the big string and choral support. "Shirl Girl" (T.M.†) is a fair try at the teen idiom.

JOHNNY CASH . . . . . THE MATADOR
(Columbia) . . . . . Still In Town

Johnny Cash's "The Matador" (Cash†) has the similar spinning dash of his previous "Ring Of Fire" click and its moment-of-truth bullring theme works out into an exciting project. "Still In Town" (Pampert) has some neat ballad effects to win occasional play.

* * *

DARLENE LOVE . . . . . A FINE FINE BOY
(Philles) . . . . . Nino and Sonny

Darlene Love's "A Fine Fine Boy" (Mother Bertha-Trio†) has a big and effective sound that features a vocal drive and shout that big catch-on qualities. "Nino and Sonny (Big Trouble)" (Mother Bertha†) loses out by its overburdened message.

* * *

MARVIN GAYE . . . . . CAN I GET A WITNESS
(Tamla) . . . . . I'm Crazy 'Bout My Baby

Marvin Gaye's "Can I Get A Witness" (Jobete†) is a high-flying uptempoed item with a blues beat that will rock the teen fans. The femme chorus in the background gives it an added fillip. "I'm Crazy 'Bout My Baby" (Jobete†) has the kind of beat that draws sometime juke action.

* * *

MAJOR LANCE . . . . . HEY LITTLE GIRL
(Epic) . . . . . Crying In The Rain

Major Lance's "Hey Little Girl" (Curtom-Jalynne†) is another shouter from the "Monkey Time" exponent with a swinging feel that never fails to win the payoff spinning action. "Crying In The Rain" (Jalynne†) is just a so-so ballad affair.

DEMETRISS TAPP . . . . . LIPSTICK PAINT A SMILE ON ME
(Brunswick) . . . . . If You Find Love

Demetriss Tapp's "Lipstick Paint A Smile On Me" (Painted Desert†) taps the moody blues ballad field with a winning and warm vocal styling that earns payoff spinning time. "If You Find Love" (Barton†) will find some spinning fans because of its honest ballad treatment.

BOBBY VEE . . . . . NEVER LOVE A ROBIN
(Liberty) . . . . . Yesterday And You

Bobby Vee's "Never Love A Robin" (Roosevelt†) is a tidy ballad that's enhanced by a deft multi-tracking vocal job and a clean and clear arrangement. "Yesterday and You" (ABC) is out of Kurt Weill's German jazz school which makes it an okay bet for some juke play.*

* * *

THE NEW CHRISTY MINSTRELS . . . . . SATURDAY NIGHT
(Columbia) . . . . . Wheeler Dealers

The New Christy Minstrels' "Saturday Night" (Cherrybell) follows the free-wheeling folk pattern of the "Walk Right In" click and shapes as a natural to follow their "Green, Green" click. "The Wheeler Dealers" (Miller*) has the folk action going for it and could be turned into a spinner-winner.*

DICK KALLMAN . . . . . FROM THIS DAY ON (Capitol) . . . . . Say It Isn't So

Dick Kallman's "From This Day On" (Regent†) is a big message ballad that has a lot of sound gimmickry (chimes, strings and multi-tracked chorus) but it's done with a musical taste that the spinners dig. "Say It Isn't So" (Berlin) is given a distinctive ballad feel that should pick up programming interest.*

* * *

DORIS TROY . . . . . TOMORROW IS ANOTHER DAY
(Atlantic) . . . . . What'cha Gonna Do About It

Doris Troy's "Tomorrow Is Another Day" (Premier-Hill & Range†) comes across with a solid terp beat that makes it a natural for teen approval and a cash-in entry to follow her "Just One Look" click. "Watch'cha Gonna Do About It" (Premier†) asks a familiar question in a familiar way.

SOLOMON BURKE . . . . . YOU'RE GOOD FOR ME
(Atlantic) . . . . . Beautiful Brown Eyes

Solomon Burke's "You're Good For Me" (Cotillion-Vogle†) has an insinuating blues-gospel feel with definitive pop markings that will help carry across the jock and juke spinning circuit. "Beautiful Brown Eyes" (Mellin-Cotillion†) has a neat flair that rates turntable time. Gros.

ARMADA Board Backs FTC Disk Biz Probe, Urges Industry to Cooperate

Chicago, Oct. 8.

The board of directors of the American Record Merchants and Distributors Assn. is convinced that it has a friend in court in the Federal Trade Commission and that a trade practices conference to be held next spring under FTC auspices will unsnarl a business described by ARMADA prexy Amos Heilicher as "a bucket of worms—you can't tell where one starts and another begins."

The ARMADA board met at a motel outside Chicago last Tuesday (1), only a week after the FTC had announced plans for the trade conference. Apparently hopeful that some progress was being made in the worsening situation for indie distribs, the board meeting was the best attended in the history of the Assn.

The distribs spent the day figuring out ways in which ARMADA could help the FTC in analyzing the situation, and concluded with a resolution expressing the Assn.'s appreciation for the Commission's action and asking the record industry to cooperate in the hearings. Leading the discussions was Earl W. Kintner, ARMADA Washington counsel and a former FTC chairman.

While the indie distribs were hopeful following the meeting, several expressed doubts as to whether FTC authority could provide the "top-to-bottom set of rules" desired by some of the members. A more likely probability is that the FTC will isolate and identify those distribution practices that are patently illegal under various rulings by a wide range of Government agencies.

In its announcement of the trade practice conference, the FTC said that it wanted to look into such practices as discriminatory pricing and advertising allowances, misrepresentation of products, commercial bribery (freebies), deceptive pricing and use of names, substitution of products and deceptive invoicing.

In other action, the ARMADA board selected Edgar M. Jones as executive secretary. He had been interim secretary, and before that was associate director of pubrel for the national USO. The organization also scheduled its next board meeting for January in Chicago, and tentatively set its sixth annual convention for the Broadmoor Hotel in Colorado Springs.

Chi Court Dismisses Vice Rap Vs. Ralph Marterie, Calls His Arrest 'Illegal'

Chicago, Oct. 8.

Bandleader Ralph Marterie was found not guilty last Thursday (3) of charges of arranging a meeting for purposes of prostitution lodged by Vice Squad detectives. Judge Wayne C. Olson dismissed the charges on the basis that the arrest of Marterie at a northside cocktail lounge Sept. 11 constituted illegal entrapment by the police. The woman involved pleaded guilty to six vice charges, reversing an earlier plea.

Marterie told reporters the case had cost him a television job and $80,000 in band bookings. He said he was dropped by a cigaret company sponsor for whose commercials he had supplied the music. The bandleader described the arrest as a "smear attempt."

Marterie's attorney said the bandleader "simply had meant to be friendly" when he complied with vice detectives' requests to arrange a meeting with a prostitute. In his statement, Judge Olson said: "We don't want police to cause crime but curb it or prevent it from being committed."

Maxin's Concept For Globe's Rising Disk Nationalism

A new concept of international artists & repertoire is being devised by Arnold Maxin, president of MGM Records, to crack through the global disk scene. It's aimed to fill the needs of a growing nationalism in the major markets around the world by supplying disk material required by each individual country.

According to Maxin, a U. S. diskery with a worldwide distribution setup must now a&r for the various countries separately instead of just sending the same product all over as has been the practice in the past. "A record," he pointed out, "now has to be made with a particular country in mind and that goes for its current sound and lyric fashions as well as its language."

In an effort to produce records that fit into each country's particular market trends, Maxin's international a&r concept calls for more assistance and advice from his company's affiliates and licensees around the world. Maxin has alerted them all to submit material and ideas for particular artists in the MGM (and subsids) roster that they feel will have a chance to compete with the native talent in their own lingo and with their own musical fads. Maxim also figures that the material submitted by his global a&r network can be recorded here as well as in Europe. "Nashville and Nola are as good as any recording setup they've got there," he said.

On a recent trip to Europe, Maxin discussd the potential in various countries on the Continent of Roy Hamilton, a comparatively new pactee, with a view towards giving the singer a country-by country push with disks indigenous to particular areas.

Among the foreign markets which now hold Maxin's prime interest are Germany, France, Italy, Spain and Japan.

UA INFRINGED 'GRASS' 'TRACK, SUIT ALLEGES

Charging United Artists and others with infringing the soundtrack of the film, "Bed Of Grass," by copying the song, "Ilya," and using it in the pic "Never On Sunday," Parnassus Films filed suit last week in N.Y. Federal Court for an injunction and damages. Other defendants are United Artists Records, RCA Victor, Decca, Columbia, Melina Films Ltd., Jules Dassin, Melinda Mercouri and Manos Hatijidakis.

Parnassus claims it was assigned the rights to the film, an original work by Gregory Tallis of Greece, and secured all rights in 1957. In addition to the injunction, the plaintiff seeks delivery of all the "Never On Sunday" film prints for impounding and an accounting of damages allegedly sustained from the unlawful use of the soundtrack, words and music of the tune.

He launched his trek in Tokyo with a sales meeting sponsored by Toshiba Musical Industries and attended by Tokyo record dealers as well as the entire Toshiba promotion and sales staff.

Similar sales meetings have been set up for Hong Kong, the Philippines, Singapore, Australia and New Zealand.

Tokyo Web's New Pubbery to Fight O'seas Competish

Tokyo, Oct. 8.

The Tokyo Broadcasting System, one of Japan's leading radio and tv stations with affiliates that make it effective as a network, has launched a music publishing company. The new outfit, called Nippon Ongaku Shuppan Sha, has taken International Music Publishers under its wing and amenable to deal with other Japanese publishing houses.

The TBS offshoot organization will make funds available for more intensified promotion of music catalogs. It appears designed to give the Japanese publishing industry muscles for competish with branches of foreign publishing houses expected to open here.

The move hopefully will be another step forward in the comparatively recent alignment of Japanese music publishing practices with international requirements, managing director of TBS. Kitagawa, former president of IMP, becomes general director of that company, which he says will retain autonomy in the new setup.

Regarding IMP, which he organized three years ago—at a time when there were no bonafide publishers here—only pirate printers—Kitagawa told VARIETY, "I am afraid the foreign publishers we represent have not been satisfied with the results thus far. I made a mistake," he added. "I thought we did not need large investments, but just had to collect royalties, deduct our shares and forward the balances.

"I have since learned that there must be promotion of the music," he said. With the funds now available to IMP, Kitagawa noted that he would put money into promo-

VICTOR LOADS BALLY GUNS FOR THE PAGE 7

As part of the buildup for its new musical group, The Page 7, RCA Victor will bring its recording equipment into New York's Basin Street East within the next couple of days for a "live" disking. The group opened at the club Monday (7).

Meantime, the diskery has its advertising-promotion guns trained on the group's first Victor LP, "The Page 7—An Explosion In Pop Music." The combo will also head out on an extensive promotion tour covering such cities as Philadelphia, Washington, Pittsburgh, Cleveland and Kansas City.

The Page 7 was formed recently by seven Coast musicians headed by pianist Page Cavanaugh, who long headed his own trio. Along with the maestro in the combo are Lew McCreary (trombone), Dave Wells (trombone), Bob Jung (sax), Jack Sperling (drums), John Pisano (guitar) and Don Bagley (bass).

H'vard Music Hits PP&M Pub With 200G Piracy Suit

Harvard Music filed suit in N.Y. Federal Court last week against Papamar Music and Peter Yarrow for alleged infringement of its tune, "The Cruel War Is Raging." It's claimed that the defendants' song, "The Cruel War," was copied from the plaintiff's work.

The suit seeks damages of $200,000 against Yarrow and wants the alleged infringement enjoined. The suit also asks that Papamar be restrained from licensing or exploiting "The Cruel War."

The complaint states that in February, 1961, Yarrow created "The Cruel War Is Raging," which he assigned to Harvard between February, '61 and July, '61. It's charged that after July 26, '61, Papamar infringed by publishing "The Cruel War" copied from plaintiff's work.

The suit also claims that in '61 Yarrow warranted that the tune was an original. Harvard claims that Papamar will assert as a defense that the work is in public domain and does not contain sufficient new matter to support a copyright. In event should this defense be sustained, Yarrow is liable to the plaintiff for $200,000 by reason of breach of warranty.

The action alleges that a recording was made and released in November, 1961 and that Yarrow and Paul Stookey assigned "The Cruel War" to Papamar. The suit claims that Papamar, knowing of Harvard's agreement with Yarrow, wilfully participated with and aided and abetted Yarrow in the breach of the agreement.

Yarrow and Stookey are members of the Peter, Paul & Mary folk singing act. Papamar is the trio's music publishing setup.

D.C. GETS ITS 1ST FOLK SERIES ON SEASON BASIS

Washington, Oct. 8.

Stanley-Williams Presentations, which inaugurated a Festival Concert Series of folk performances last year under auspices of the National Folk Festival Assn., has launched a 1963-64 subscription series of six concerts in Washington, D.C. This is Washington's and S-W's first folk series on a season basis. The concerts will be held in the 1,500-seat Lisner Auditorium.

Opening concert is set for Oct. 16 with Josh White. On tap thereafter are The Clancy Bros, with Tommy Makem, Bob Dylan, Richard Dyer-Bennt, The New Lost City Ramblers & Bonnie Dobson, and Martha Schlamme.

The Folk Festival Assn., a nonprofit group founded in 1933, has staged annual folk festivals every year since then except during the war. Its affiliation with S-W in 1962 marked its first venture into the concert field. S-W also presents concerts independently and plans a number of special events in other halls during the season.

London, Oct. 8.

Apart from the many disk artists who appear on television, and duly make records, British tv sources are providing the local wax industry with hitherto straight artists. The latter, for one reason or another, will go well on disks, the record companies believe.

For instance, EMI has taken Rupert Davies out of the "Maigret" series for a novelty platter called "October Dreams" backed by "Smoking My Pipe." Release is coincident with a first-time dish by new Emher artist Philip Lowrie, who portrays Dennis Tanner in Granada-TV's smash vidshow. "Coronation Sheet's" Pat Phoenix is ditto for EMI.

Also just on release is a Pye disk by Joe Brady of NBC's tv outing, "Z Cars," titled "The Great Train Robbery." Still another EMI release is actor Wilfred Bramble (of "Steptoe And Son") on single with "Second Hand" in a direct association with the tv comedy about two junkmen. Harry H. Corbett, the other junk merchant in the BBC-TV comedy, has also been cutting waxes since his rise to comedic fame on the small screen.

Ken Dodd, noted local comedian who has a regular monthly series on BBC, is now winning fame as a straight balladeer and is in direct competition with local pop singers on certain numbers — as, for instance, on "Still" which is recorded by domestic topseller Karl Denver.

In addition to such straight actors as Tom Courtenay—who waxed "Mrs. Brown You've Got A Lovely Daughter" for Decca after his vidperformance in "The Lads" —comedians like Charlie Drake, Dick Emery (straight songs, incidentally) Benny Hill, and many others have supplemented their tv fame with disk followups.

Phono Sales Dip

Washington, Oct. 1.

Distributor and factory sales of phonographs slipped slightly in July, Electronic Industries Assn. disclosed.

But sales in both categories for portables and consoles for the first seven months of 1963 are still running ahead of comparable figures in 1962.

Total July distrib sales were 298,981, compared to 315,043 in June. Seven month distrib sales were 2,058,451 in 1963, a big jump over last year's 1,721,967.

EMI, Decca to Hypo Bally In Oct.-Dec. to Tap Rising Album Market in Britain

London, Oct. 8.

The fast-growing album market in this country is to come under renewed exploitation vigor during the next two vital months from the two major British disk houses, EMI and Decca.

Latter org is preprepping a major buildup for RCA Dynagroove disks which it markets here in the November-December period, the two most profitable months for the local music biz.

EMI reveals it is organizing a "big push" in the album field coincident with the Decca drive, but marketing manager Rex Oldfield won't go into specifics. He merely says that EMI will be hitting the market from various angles, probably spearheaded by a new disk series called "Classical Music To Live With."

New push on the LP front by the majors, which will involve renewed promotional activity, comes after they have undergone some goading from the record retailers. Latter maintain that the various record clubs which operate locally do a harder selling job than the diskeries.

It is hoped in music circles that the "Big Two's" new approach to what is seen as one of the most difficult marketing problems, the shifting of albums off the shelves, will curb the inroads that cutrate albums offered by the record clubs have made into the "legit" market.

GRIM DODGER NOTE: NO GLADIATOR MUSIC

Los Angeles, Oct. 8.

John V. Trachitella, American Federation of Musicians local prexy, had this to say at conclusion of Sunday's World Series finale, aimed at Dodger chief Walter O'Malley:

"In this series, the Dodgers have been big league in every respect but music. The Yankees used the orchestras of Guy Lombardo and the Tommy Dorsey band to add class to the sight and sound of the game. What did Papa O'Malley give us? One organist. This is maybe okay for the regular season but hardly appropriate for the World Series. As far as we musicians are concerned, a great team like the Dodgers deserves better from its management. O'Malley's use of one organist instead of an orchestra made Los Angeles look like a bush league, even though we have the best team in baseball."

AGAC's Broader Auditing Program Rolls in Europe

The American Guild of Authors & Composers (AGAC) has begun its auditing program in Europe. First company coming under AGAC's broadened auditing operation is Mills Music Ltd. It's a continuation of AGAC's audit of Mills in the U.S.

According to Miriam Stern, AGAC exec secretary, the total collections for 1963 will probably hit the $2,000,000 mark.

Also, AGAC has scheduled its next general meeting for Nov. 14 in New York. Election of offices will take place then. Burton Lane is current AGAC president.

Miss Stern also has set the wheels in motion for publication of an AGAC bulletin. It will be a quarterly publication with the first issue due in December.

tion, printing, translation of lyrics and publicity material, an enlarged sales force and an expanded accounting division.

He said IMP would begin to send agents to schools, music shops, nightclubs, tv and radio stations and dance halls in a drive for sheet music sales. Kitagawa pointed out that this kind of effort has previously only been made by IMP in Tokyo.

Among the world publishers repped here by IMP are Leeds, Warner Bros.' MPHC, Joy, Ricordi, Hans Gerig, Fermato Do Brasil and RCA Espagnol. The company is keeping its old Asakusa office for promotional functions, with Kitagawa and his accounting staff having moved into the Nippon Ongaku Shuppan Sha quarters in the Akasaka section of this city.

Kitagawa said that other Japanese music publishers could also receive financial assistance from Nippon Ongaku Shuppan Sha. In addition, he disclosed that the new company would encourage establishment of more publishers here.

"If there were more publishers claiming royalties, then the Japanese entertainment companies will more easily understand and recognize copyright regulations," said Kitagawa, who is also managing director of the Japan Music Publishers Assn., organized two years ago.

Another aim of Nippon Ongaku Shuppan Sha, Kitagawa said, is to promote Japanese music better here and abroad. One step would be to acquire rights to Japanese music rather than have them go to foreign publishers. "This is not only for national pride and increased income for us," Kitagawa said, "but it's silly, expensive and time-wasting for an orchestra here to have to send to Italy, for example, sheet music to a Japanese symphonic work."

In this direction, he is also seeking to break the so-called "slave contracts" Japanese composers and lyricists have with recording companies here. Under this structure, these artists must give exclusive rights to the diskeries, which do not permit recording of the material by rival labels. Kitagawa noted, "When publishers want to acquire a copyright from a composer and author, they can't get it." The answer to this, he said, is to encourage these artists to go freelance.

Inside Stuff—Music

Brown Meggs, Capitol Records' director of eastern operations and parttime gourmet, offered his estimate of New York's restaurant scene in a letter to the N.Y. Times Magazine (22) following Craig Claiborne's roundup of the Gotham eateries. Meggs wrote, " . . it is my impression that we, the diners—not the restaurants are at fault. We accept the bad service, the canned sauces, the exorbitant wine prices, without cavil or complaint; and we compound the felony with perfunctory tips that in no way reflect our satisfaction or lack thereof. In short, we have the restaurants we deserve. When confronted with grave deficiencies in a grand luxe, grand prix restaurant, there are two remedies available to all courageous gourmets: 1) complain to the maitre d'hotel, and 2) refrain from tipping—the waiter, the wine steward, the captain.

"Frankly, what we need around here are some more active complainers, like Mr. Claiborne, for example. I'll bet he doesn't tip the sommelier who holds back the wine list while proposing 'a nice Beaujolais' at eight bucks a throw."

The National Academy of Recording Arts & Sciences (L. A. chapter) will initiate a special course and lecture series at the U. of California at Los Angeles. Cosponsored by the university's Extension Department of Arts and Humanities, the course is designed for both the layman and the professional on the workings of the recording industry—its history, background and development, its issues, problems and potentials, and its significance in the cultural and social scene.

The opening meeting of the course will take place Oct. 10 with Goddard Lieberson, Columbia Records president, assisting in the launching. Also on the panel for the first session will be John K. (Mike) Maitland, president of Warner Bros. Records, who will speak on the businessman's view of the recording industry, and Andre Previn, who'll provide the artist's view. Each class meeting thereafter will feature panel discussions, field trips and demonstrations by industry execs and artists.

"Elsinore, a musical comedy with music by Rory Butler and lyrics by Alan Greengrass, produced by the Columbia Players of Columbia U., has copped first place in the third annual Broadcast Music Inc. Variety Show Competition. BMI will shell out $500 each to Butler, Greengrass and to the Columbia Players. First honorable mention award was made to Charles Collins, who wrote the lyrics and music for Texas Christian U.'s "Reach For The Stars." Second honorable mention went to Frank Gannon, of Georgetown U., writer of music and lyrics for that school's Mask & Bauble production of "Bonaparte."

Judges who selected the winning works from 31 entries included Jerry Bock, Sheldon Harnick, Morton DaCosta, Robert Fryer, Lehman Engel, who serves as director of BMI's musical theatre workshop; Joe Linhart, of RCA Victor; and Robert B. Sour, v.p. in charge of BMI's writer relations department.

For the fourth consecutive year, Capitol Records Distributing Corp. is launching a promotion aimed exclusively at the college market. CRDC's 1963 college promotion is tied around a football and fraternity theme and carries the tag line "Kappa Kappa Capitol Men Are Better Than People. To reach the students, Cap is going direct—through ads in college newspapers—and via dealers and disk jockeys. To stimulate airplay, Cap is sending disk jockeys kits containing beer mugs, membership cards in the Kappa Kappa Capitol fraternity, and a booklet called "Instructions For Making Your Own Fraternity Paddles." Albums being stressed in the campus push are by The Four Freshman, The Journeymen, June Christy, Jonah Jones, Wayne Newton and Fred Waring.

Capitol Records has opened its new exec offices in New York in the recently-completed Sperry-Rand Bldg. on the Ave. of the Americas between 51st and 52d Streets. For the past 13 years, the label's N.Y. headquarters has been located in the Mutual Life Building at 55th St. and Broadway.

In addition to the new Sperry-Rand offices, Cap will continue to maintain sales offices. (New York branch, CRDC) at West 44th St.; and studio facilities at West 46th St.

Student composers residing anywhere in the Western Hemisphere are eligible to win awards totaling $18,550 in the 1963 Student Composers Awards (SCA) sponsored by Broadcast Music Inc. BMI annually sponsors the competition designed to encourage the creation of concert music by young composers. The '63 contest is the fifth in which composers from countries other than the U. S. and Canada are eligible to compete. Since 1951, 84 student composers have received SCA awards. The announcement of the '63 awards will be made no later than June, '64, with sums ranging from $250 to $2,000 to be granted at the discretion of the judges.

The Sam Donahue-Frank Sinatra Jr. etc. show at the Americana Hotel three weeks ago, now Peter Duchin at the St. Regis' Maisonette, Buddy Greco with Enric Madriguera's return (new show at the Americana), and kindred bookings, are bringing out the songpluggers in a manner not seen around New York for some time. The comedians are not music biz fodder but as the diskery names get key hotel bookings the music contact men have become more in evidence. Incidentally, the new breed of songplugger is very After Six formals-minded, many of them changing from business mufti commensurate with the "class" of the rooms.

A four-man Toronto outfit, Topic Records, is not only producing disks but films—hiring extra staff on contract as needed. Founder-president is Fred Edge, ex-Toronto Telegram reporter who's had many plays on tv and a couple of years ago was a tv scripter in Hollywood. Topic's first commercial disk, just out, is "The Fort Henry Retreat Ceremony"—an "authentic" reconstruction, cum fife & drum, of a battle in the U.S.-Canadian war of 1812, which both sides claim to have won. Its first film is a short on seat belts for federal Dept. of Transport, directed by Leo Orenstein of CBC-TV.

A Community Service Award for the station doing the most outstanding public service will be cosponsored by the New Jersey Broadcasters Assn. and SESAC. The music licensing society has inaugurated the annual award as a step to promote more public service broadcasting at the local level. Competition for the first award started Oct. 1 with the award to be made next fall at the annual meeting of NJBA. Any station (AM, FM or tv) duly licensed in New Jersey is eligible.

Jack Strachey, the composer who has written a string of tunes, notably "These Foolish Things" and the tune-opener of the BBC's "Housewives Choice," is now on a different wicket. He is writing his life story and, so far, has collected 12,000 words. He admits that a friend is helping him. Could it be A-R topper Eric Maschwitz, who scribed the lyric of "These Foolish Things?"

Tad Tadlock will do the choreography for the first set of 10 color films for Cinebox. Working with name recording artists, vocal and instrumental, Miss Tadlock will stage the production numbers that will be shown on Cinebox's 23-inch screen simultaneously with a record selection. Miss Tadlock was formerly with The Hamilton Trio and has danced on tv and in Broadway musicals.

Finley comes to MGM/Verve after a stint with Dot Records, where he was director of premium sales. Prior to that he was a deejay at KFWB in L.A. He'll headquarter at MGM's offices in New York.

Ruth Wallis Disks May Be Banned in Aussie, But She'll Cut An LP There

Melbourne, Oct. 8.

Despite the fact all her disks are banned by the Aussie Customs, Ruth Wallis—here for a dual Federal Hotel date at Menzies and Savoy-Plaza—told VARIETY she'll be doing an LP for Festival, an Aussie recording company. Though she says most of the numbers will be in her familiar risque format, it's not anticipated there'll be any trouble in releasing the album here. Deejays, however, won't be able to touch most of it.

This is Miss Wallis'. third visit Down Under. She said she intends to work 10 weeks out of every year in Australia in the future. She also will be making her English debut early next year at the Talk of the Town in London for a four weeks' stand for Bernard Delfont.

On her present tour, Miss Wallis has already appeared in Surfer's Paradise, and after Melbourne is booked in Perth and Sydney.

British Music Biz Losing U. S.-Induced 'Inferiority Complex': Tony D'Amato

London, Oct. 8.

Tony D'Amato, a British-based American a&r manager with London Records (a wholly-owned U.S. subsidiary of British Decca), opines that the British music biz and, indeed, other aspects of entertainment, are beginning to shake off their "inferiority complex" brought about by American dominance in the field.

D'Amato is over here to mine the goldfields of British talent. Time was when local arrangers spent most of their time trying to emulate leading Yank counterparts; artists endeavored to imitate American singers, diskers strived to reproduce Negro music a la the U. S. and so on. But now, in D'Amato's experience, all that is changing and "British music is coming into its own," he says.

Certainly, D'Amato has been successful in recording domestic talent for the American market—still regarded here as the criterion—via his Phase 4 stereo LP recordings which got off the ground in the U. S. with a bang.

Such has been the success of these disks across the Atlantic—it is estimated that they have paid for themselves at least five times over—that London has decided to base D'Amato here on a permanent assignment, with trips back to the U. S. two or three times a year for briefing.

"There is little point," he says, "in the British boys trying to copy Americans. They are much more successful when they develop their own style. One arranger I use, for instance, used to copy Billy May's style slavishly, now he hardly ever listens to any disks, he's too busy writing his own stuff. When he's at his best, he's as good as anyone in America.

"And what's the use of trying to imitate Elvis Presley? You can only sound like an imitation. I have noticed that certain artists here who hav been strongly influenced by American artists are now developing their own talent. It is a good healthy thing. It's the way it should be."

D'Amato's role finds him mostly concerned with production of LPs for the American market. But using talent on the domestic scene—the Mantovanis, the Ray Nobles, the Johnny Keatings, the Georgia Browns, the Ted Heaths et al., he does on occasion move into the singles field.

"I don't think it right that the British should chase the Negro sound either. That belongs to America, he says. "What you hear over here is not the real thing, anyhow—it is white man's interpretation of it. Britain gets it second hand. That is what British producers are trying to copy."

With the success of the Acker Bilks, the Kenny Balls, the Shirley Basseys, the Matt Monros, and one or two more, D'Amato believes the big breakthrough is coming. The day may still be some way off, he adds, but the signs are that local music men are generally less "inebriated" with what is exported from the U. S.

UA's 'Mad, Mad' Promotion Pitch

United Artists Records wound up a special three-day session in Las Vegas' Flamingo Hotel last week in which the fall line for UA and its subsid labels were unveiled.

Art Talmadge, the diskery's president, presided at the meet. Si Mael, veepee - comptroller; Lloyd Leipzig, director of creative services; Joe Berger, national sales manager, and Jay Jacobs, national director of sales and merchandising, also officiated. Represented from the parent film company were v.p. David V. Picker, and Michael Stewart, exec v.p. of United Artists Music.

UA's promotion peg for its 25 new album releases will be centered around the Stanley Kramer pic, to be released by UA, "It's A Mad, Mad, Mad Mad World." The theme for the drive has been tagged "The Mad, Mad, Mad, Mad Plan." The program, in keeping with the industry-wide trend toward price stabilization, offers a 10% discount which represents a reduction from prior plans in which discounts of 15% and better have existed.

Park Ave., Garex, the Arthur Godfrey Contempo Records line, Ascot Records the new Peter Penguin line of kidisks, and Musicor Records were among the subsid labels represented at the Las Vegas conclave. Andy Miele, UA's general manager for subsidiary labels, spotlighted 17 new albums in his presentation.

Ted Collins, Miss Smith's manager for more than 30 years, is currently negotiating for an orch and choral group to work with her in the Carnegie Hall show.

Minneapolis, Oct. 8.

Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra racked up $518,596, a record high in earnings, during the 1962-63 season. Advance sale for the impending 1963-64 Sunday pop series has also hit an all-time high.

Announcement was made, too, that the orchestra's 1962-63 season budget, $936,259, and guaranty fund donations, $411,504, also set records for the Minneapolis Symph.

Prior to the current season's start this month, the symph's Orchestra Assn. elected four business leaders for three-year terms and one to its executive committee.

Frisco Local 6 Votes 10-20% Pay Increase; Batoners In Protest

San Francisco, Oct. 8.

Musician's Local 6 has voted itself a 10-20% pay raise starting Jan. 1. In a meeting last week the local voted to raise casual weeknight dates from $20 to $22 for two hours, from $22.50 to $27 for three hours, and from $30 to $32 for four hours.

Saturday night scale will go up from $24.50 to $27.50 for three hours and from $32 to $35 for four hours. (There are no two-hour Saturday night gigs). Bandleaders get an extra 25%.

Two-year contracts running to 1965 are not affected, according to Charles H. (Pop) Kennedy, Local 6 prexy.

Meanwhile, it's reported top dance bandleaders have formed an association to fight the union, and this new item may top their agenda. Major names in the area are Ray Hackett, Ernie Heckscher, Anson Weeks and Del Courtney.

RCA Italiana Stages 4-Day Sicilian Meet to Tap Italo Mkt.'s Vast Potential

By ROBERT F. HAWKINS

Taormina, Sicily, Oct. 8.

The Italian disk market, which has made enormous strides in recent years, still has a vast, largely untapped potential. And at least one company—RCA Italiana—has pre-planned a campaign in depth to exploit this potential in the next few years.

That is the gist, but only the gist, of an exhaustive four-day conclave held in this Sicilian town on occasion of RCA Italiana's 10th anniversary in the Italo music business. Attending the meet were company officials, salesmen, reps of Italy's major disk outlets and the trade press.

Dario Soria, v.p. of RCA International, skied in from New York as did RCA Int'l veep Peter Baumberger from his Geneva base to name only a few of the RCA delegates. It was an amazingly multi-faceted meet. One which not only provided a comprehensive look at the RCA operation in this country—and its links with its European opposites and U.S. mother company—but also helped those present get a fair appraisal of the Italo market for records today.

Much of the savvy organizational work which has provocatively helped place RCA Italiana in its current dominant position on the Italo mart—some 50-60% of which reportedly holds—was on display at the Taormina meeting. It was attended by about 350 people (35 of them Italo and foreign press). Sources outside the organization estimate the affair must have cost in the neighborhood of $12,000.

Conclave's Solid Impact

The impact has been such that it will probably be repeated as well as imitated by other outfits in the field. It was an unusual lesson—in this country at least—in adroit U.S.-styled showmanship and salesmanship.

As noted, the local meet had many facets. For the trade guests, there were daily lectures on various aspects of the RCA operation, past, present, and future, technical and artistic, from Dynagroove (presented here for the first time in Italy) to publicity, from sales campaigns to market futures, etc.

For the press (and later, in taped or recorded form for the Italo public as well) there was a review of the company's summer hits and a preview of its winter roster, assembled in form of a gala tv special and presented by 17 singers from the company stable, currently one of the most impressive in Italy.

In another novel venture, gold plaques were awarded winners of an intramural contest designed to choose the most popular company platter of the year. Based on 1,000,000 votes sent in by fans throughout the country, it was won handily by Rita Pavone, with Neil Sedaka in the runnerup spot.

Slate Lotsa Tie-ins

Similar, but more elaborate tieln contests, will be held in coming months, it was announced here, to determine the winter click—always remaining in the RCA orbit. Company also plans a sales-spurring "gold platter" contest for store salesmanship. Both winners will be revealed at the next company conclave tentatively slated to be held at Rome's Cavalieri Hilton Hotel in April, '64.

Meanwhile, material preemed at local show—14 new songs performed by 15 different artists (and a functional staging in Taormina's ancient Greek Theatre by Alessandro Fersen, who framed show in a circus-like setting)—indicates that the race for winter honors should be a hot one.

RCA's number one sales girl, Rita Pavone (whose Italo version of "Hearts"—"Cuore"—has already sold over 600,000 45s in a few months) has two similar irons in the fire: "Son Finite le Vacanze" (Vacations are Over) and "Non e' Facile Avere 18 Anni" (It's Not Easy to Be 18), both of which she belts across in inimitable fashion.

Neil Sedaka has another saleable winner in his Italo "Adesso No" (Not Now). Eduardo Vianello has a rousing surefire click in "O Mio Signore," while Michele, the latest addition to the company roster and surprise summer winner with "Se Mi Vuoi Lasciare" registers again with "Ridi," local version of a Yank original, "Free Me."

Other Likely Clicks

Gianni Meccia, who also penned several other songs, comes through with an effective "Il Pupazzo" (The Puppet), while Nico Fidenco comes up with "Cio che Rimane alla Fine di un Amore" (That Which Remains at Love's End), which should please his fans. Jimmy Fontana, who's needed a click for some time, should find it in "Non te ne Andare, (Don't Go Away), written by Meccia and Fontana. (There are in fact remarkably few weak spots in the entire roster).

But perhaps the best songs, though slower, steadier sellers, should prove to be Sergio Endrigo's moving "Era D'Estate" (It was Summer), Donatella Moretti's delicate "Quando Vedrete il mio caro amore" (When You See My Dear Love), and Gino Paoli's romantic ballad, "Che Cosa C'e" (What Is There .). These and others heard here should be around for a while, as should a new item in the surefire category: "Perche te ne vai" (Why Are You Going Away?) with which RCA will intro "Little" Peggy March on the local market.

She does it in Italian, per the recently-experimented successful formula which has now become a must for foreign guestints, and leaves little doubt as to its (and her) immediate impact.

years from date of execution, notwithstanding any agreement to the contrary; the only exception being that a derivate work prepared under the authority of a terminated transfer may continue to be utilized under the terms of said transfer, provided this privilege shall not extend to the making of any other derivative works employing the original work.

Eyed Compromise Proposal

At a prior meeting, a compromise proposal had been discussed, whereby the transfer of an exclusive right under a copyright, should not be effective for more than 42 years, provided, that before disposing of his rights for the period in excess thereof, the author should give the original licensee or assignee the right of first refusal, and further provided that any derivative work prepared under the authority of the original grant could continue to be distributed and utilized on a non-exclusive basis for the balance of the term of copyright protection. A suggestion had been made by the book publishers' council that the time limitation of the grant was not applicable if the original grant provided for a continuing payment of royalties.

Abeles advanced the argument, on behalf of the music publishers, that a musical publication would not come under the category of derivative work, as would the rights exercised by all others in interest under a copyright, with the possible exception of the book publishers.

Accordingly, Abeles took the position that the only amendment which could be sanctioned by the music publishers would be for the 42 year term, in addition to the suggestion of the book publishers' council that the grant could be effective for the entire copyright term subject to continuing payment of royalties, or other participation by the author in the revenue. Legalites for the pic biz conceded that there was merit in this argument, as they had not taken into consideration the inapplicability of the derivative provisions to rights of the music publishers.

Abeles advanced the further argument that such a proposal, together with the proposed amendments which radically curtailed the existing remedies of the music publishers against record "pirates" under the compulsory license provisions of the Copyright Act, placed the music publishers in the position whereby the present Act would be decidedly more advantageous to them than the proposed amendments, and that, accordingly, they would have to resort to every available method and means to prevent its enactment.

John Schulman, as chairman, tried to effect a compromise which would be acceptable to the respective industries as well as the authors. However, Irwin Karp, on behalf of the Authors' League, took the position that the only compromise he could submit to his client would be for a term of 30 years, with a first right of refusal for the additional period of copyright.

The attorneys for all industries represented at the meeting agreed that, unless the term of grant was for the minimum period of 42 years, with the right to the full copyright term in the event of a financial benefit to the authors for the additional period thereof, the present Act was far more advantageous to the interests of their clients and, accordingly, they as a group would have to oppose the proposed amendments.

In the original report of the Register of Copyrights of July, 1961, the Register recommended extending the renewal term of copyright from 28 to 48 years and to provide that an assignment of renewal rights, executed before the effective date of the Act, should expire at the end of the 28th year of the renewal term, except where the assignee is obligated to continue paying royalties or a part of his revenue to the author or his heirs during the entire life of the copyright.

2 Sinatra-Horne Carnegie Hall Benefits Garner 100G for Civil Rights & Kids

The only way to get two of the top nightclub attractions into New York, seemingly, is via benefits It's been many years since Frank Sinatra played his accustomed haunt at the Copabacana, and it's been some time since Lena Horne jampacked the Empire Room of the Waldorf-Astoria. The duo gave two nights of concerts in tandem at Carnegie Hall, N.Y., in a pair of benefits.

The first on Saturday night (5) was for the Gandhi Society for Human Rights, and the second, the following night, for the Foundation for International Child Health. The top single ticket went for $100, and prices for boxes were $250 and $500. Result was a gross of upwards $100,000 for both evenings.

Both Sinatra and Miss Horne appear interested in causes and not in mere loot. But it does limit their in-person work, and it's a pity. If more singers of this stripe were seen more frequently on the circuits, it's conceivable that the nitery industries of New York and other major cities would be in more solid shape—perhaps nearly as affluent as Las Vegas, the only town in the U.S. where they make regular appearances. Maybe they could be induced to come into the Copa as a benefit for the Society for the Preservation of Jules Podell.

It was a memorable event. Imagine a gig where Lena Horne opens the show. One of the most polished vocal technicians around, she's a designing female in this respect. Every gesture and vocal inflection are so well organized and capably executed, that the results are inevitable.

Miss Horne, allotted the entire opening half, cut a wide swath in her repertory. She trimmed her normal output of sex and sin. She sang of new worlds to come, roamed the heady regions of Harold Arlen songs with the composer accompanying her at the piano and endowed pops and standards with lively interpretation.

Her accompaniment was under the direction of husband Lennie

TOURISM TOO COM'L? W. SAMOA MULLS IT

Honolulu, Oct. 8.

Western Samoa is taking a close look at its Pacific isle neighbors before making up its mind whether it really wants to woo tourists. T. L. Amoa, speaker of that country's legislative assembly, says Western Samoa is "trying to think things out to protect our own race from gradually being absorbed.

"Tourism might commercialize everything. We still believe that money isn't everything," he explained. The country has a population of 120,000 and very high birthrate.

Additionally, suit charges the defendants likewise had agreed to pay the additional $5,000 from their next engagement arranged through Joe Glaser of ABC.

The preem of Don Snyder's Hootenanny Club in the Last Frontier, skedded for Friday (4) was cancelled by County Commissioners because of lack of proper license.

Commissioners and juvenile authorities met yesterday (Mon.) to determine if the club, designed for teenagers, can open—the County Dads say a special license will be required, as the minors will be entertained in a building adjacent to the New Frontier casino.

Although persons over 21 are welcome to the club, according to Snyder, there will be no liquor, no dancing, and no gambling. Snyder will be emcee-singer for four nightly shows.

Memphis' $180,000 Sets Alltime High

Memphis, Oct. 8.

Memphis' Mid-South Fair racked up an all-time record in its 107-year hishory with a whopping $180,000 in gate admissions during the recent nine-day run here at the Fairgrounds. This toppled the b.o. mark of $169,000 set in 1959.

The attendance of 470,125 was below the record 515,875 registered also in '59. "But drew more money at the gate all around," Beamed Bill Wynne, Fair manager, "and that's what counts."

Wynne, who has skippered the Fair for the past 11 years, told VARIETY that the Rodeo show also shattered all previous records with a boff $102,000 for 18 performances with over 50,000 paid customers in the 6,800 seat Arena.

This was a big year for records for the Mid-South Fair with the Beverly Hillbillies also getting in the act by pulling some 31,303 admissions for $57,651 in six shows. The Three Stooges set a one-day record by grossing $7,457.

All Mid-Way shows and rides also set records, Wynne and. This was the second consecutive year that everything at the Fair was fully integrated, and without any demonstrations or mishap.

Honolulu New Aud-Arena Eyes Ice Shows & Ballet

Honolulu, Oct. 8.

An ice show—either "Ice Capades" or "Holiday on Ice"— is expected to be one of the major attractions booked into the city's new 10,000-seat municipal arena next summer, according to Byron Trimble, auditorium manager.

The auditorium-arena and a nearby concert theatre, being built at a cost of about $9,000,000, are 70% complete. Furnishings, including a 2,600-sq. ft. portable stage and a $30,000 electronic scoreboard, are costing about $500,000.

Trimble says the Bolshoi Ballet may be the opening bill in the theatre, which will have a hydraulic orchestra pit.

Complex, across from Trader Vic's nitery, also includes an exposition and exhibition area. It's anticipated many key touring shows that have been playing Waikiki Shell may switch to either of the new midtown hardtop facilities.

Moscow Circus' 600G Take at Garden, N.Y.

The Moscow Circus wound up its 12-day stand at Madison Square Garden, N.Y., last night (Tues.) with a gross hovering around $600,000 for 22 performances. The take exceeded anticipations by nearly $100,000. Surge of business toward the end of the run accounted for the upper gross.

The Circus had its biggest day on Saturday (5) with $106,000 for three shows. Last weekend with five shows, it took in $140,000. Tour continues with dates in Boston, Pittsburgh, Chicago, Milwaukee and Minneapolis.

Sahara Inn Blast Won't Make Autry Ride Out of Chi

Chicago, Oct. 8.

Cowboy star-entrepreneur Gene Autry rode into Chi via a jet plane last week to announce that he would not be frightened off his claim stake at his newly-purchased Sahara Inn motel by the Sept. 16 bombing of the hostelry. Autry said that he would exercise the purchase option in a $7,000,000 mortgage negotiated with Marshall Savings & Loan Aug. 1.

After the brief statement that he intends to stick with the motel, the press conference turned into a banter session. Asked if he was worried about the bombing, Autry said: "My Los Angeles Angels were bombed from third to ninth place in the American League, so I've been bombed before." (He is a major stockholder in the club).

Another reporter suggested that perhaps the bombers didn't like Autry's old films on tv, to which he cracked: "If that's true the place will be bombarded all the time."

As the session broke up a reporter quipped: "Give my regards to your dear wife, Dale Evans." Autry riposted with: "Right wife—wrong comboy."

Davis Jr., Streisand, Brubeck Nab Capacity $72,550 At H'wood Bowl

Hollywood, Oct. 8.

Biggest boxoffice of Hollywood Bowl season was racked up Saturday (5) by Sammy Davis Jr., Barbra Streisand and the Dave Brubeck combo. They drew 17,450 payees (200 more than Bowl seats) at $6.50 top for a $72,550 gross according to Lou Robin, who promoted the event for National General Corp.

Take was the tallest since Judy Garland SRO'd the Bowl in 1961 for a gross in excess of $75,000. Some of the seats for Miss Garland's performance were priced at $10.

Talent on Saturday's bill cost, in toto, around $45,000. All topliners were booked separately. Thirty musicians were used plus Brubeck's group. Davis, who closed the show, was on for 105 minutes. Profit was large for Robin and the Bowl, which this season has been getting 15% of one-nighter grosses as rent, compared to 10% in years past.

Promoters File $380,000 'No-Show' Suit Vs. Skelton

Los Angeles, Oct. 8.

Red Skelton and Jack Entratter are being sued for $380,000 in Superior Court by Coy Poe and Roger Ward. They claim the comedian breached a contract to appear last Aug. 24 at Minnesota State Fair by failing to show up. He was to receive $15,000 for one show, according to complaint.

Poe and Ward produced show for fair.

Victorious AGVA Dissidents May Flex Muscles at Upcoming Board Meet

The American Guild of Variety Artists board meeting starting Monday (21) at the Americana Hotel, N.Y., is anticipated to provide the first test of strength of the dissident faction which virtually swept the recent AGVA elections. Although the administration is not expected to put forward any radical or far reaching proposals, the dissidents are likely to show their muscle on several major issues.

One of the top proposals to be made by the newcomers to the AGVA ruling set will be the return of former prexy Penny Singleton to the good graces of the union. She was suspended for 10 years by the AGVA convention which met in June. The ruling barred her from running for the presidency which she has been doing for the past few years.

There will be an attempt not only to lift Miss Singleton's suspension, but the possibility exists that she could be restored to the national board. Just how this will be done is not apparent since all board posts are filled. However, any resignation could create a vacancy.

There is also conjecture whether certain employees will be permitted to continue should the dissidents have a majority at the board. It's believed that national administrative secretary Bobby Faye is not one of those whose ouster will be sought at this time. However, others in executive spots may be asked to resign.

The administration forces still have president Joey Adams who is expected to preside. But they look forward to a cautious running of the meeting without any precipitous rulings as there were in the past when Adams could count on an overwhelming majority to back him up.

No formal agenda for the meeting has been set as yet.

Albuquerque's 1st 'Hoot' Pulls 6G at New Mex U.

Albuquerque, Oct. 8.

Albuquerque's first commercially-promoted "Hootenanny," staged at the U. of New Mexico and booked by a group of students, pulled a crowd of about 3,000 persons and grossed an estimated $6,000.

Show, held in UNM student union building on Sept. 25, featured Josh White Jr., the Wayfarers, Bob Gibson and Raun MacKinnon.

Greensboro Aud Sets New Record

Greensboro, N.C., Oct. 8.

The 1962-63 season produced record attendance for Greensboro's War Memorial Auditorium-Coliseum-Town Hall, and early indications are that the showplace will tally its 2,000,000th patron this fall. Total attendance for the Coliseum's fourth season—it opened October, 1959—was 486,381, an increase of almost 40,000 over the previous year.

Coliseum manager Bob Kent, who revealed the statistics, called the year just completed a "significant milestone in our operation." The Coliseum, he noted, showed a substantial gain in usage following the critical third season, which, in the national picture for such arenas, normally produces a sharp drop. "Not only did we hold up well during the third year," Kent added, "we then showed a marked increase in the fourth season."

The 1962-63 season's attendance total ran the four-year figure to 1,859,094, Kent said, adding: "I feel certain we will hit the 2,000,000 mark some where just before the first of the year."

Again, the Coliseum unit of the War Memorial attracted an overwhelming majority of the patrons during the 1962-63 season. The Coliseum figure alone almost hit 400,000, with 397,909 attending events in the 9,047-seat arena. More than one-third of these attended ice hockey games The Auditorium drew 61,668, up better than 10,000 over the previous year, while the Town Hall unit held its own at 26,804.

Abe Burrows-Morris Agcy. In Mutual Admiration

Despite the World Series opposition last Thursday (3), there was a strong turnout at Dinty Moore's upstairs restaurant in Manhattan for the William Morris agency's luncheon salute to author-comedian Abe Burrows marking his 25th anniversary with the booking outfit. Top percentery brass and the g. of h. were in mutual admiration.

It was an unbilled doubleheader in that agency prexy Abe Lastfogel, who toastmastered, revealed that this day also marked his 51st anni with the William Morris agency. He had joined WM as an officeboy for the late founder.

Burrows humorously accented the family relationship with the Morris office "in which case," he added, "this would make Frances (Lastofogel) my mother."

Only once in his career did Burrows think of leaving the Morris office. He recalled that this was one period when the agency didn't automatically renew his option. "What a wonderful time I had being wooed and feted by the rival agents," he said, "but it all ended when Eleanor (Flaherty) (Lastfogel's longtime secretary) phoned and said, 'Mr. Lastfogel is getting very upset'. I signed pronto."

The affection that Burrows has for the Morris office was evident—and vice versa.

Liberace's Knoxville Date

Knoxville, Oct. 8.

Liberace again has been backed for Knoxville Civic Auditorium. He'll appear there Nov. 2. His concert last year set a new attendance record at the aud.

The performance will be a one-night stand scaled from $2 to $5.

LUCIENNE BOYER'S OK COMEBACK IN PARIS

Paris, Oct. 8.

Lucienne Boyer, noted pre-war popular singer, who parlayed "Parlez-Moi D'Amour" into an international career, made her first public appearance in several years at the weekend vaudeer, the Concert Pacra, last week for four days. Nabe vet hall did sock biz.

While mainly oldsters came to see her, there were plenty of curious youngsters too, and they too asked for her standards but waxed impatient through her new and even twist attempts.

Pacra, run by Pierre Guerin, who now also runs another house, the Bobino, is the oldest vaudeer in existence. It's located near the Bastille. It has a 75c top and a loyal clientel swelled when a draw like Miss Boyer is booked. House is sometimes used by big names to break in an act and also by beginners with well selected programs.

After Miss Boyer's sock appearance, Guerin is trying to dig up other yesteryear singing favorites, such as Jean Lumiere, Rina Ketty and Pasdoc.

Maurice Chevalier doing solid biz in his one-man show to mark his 75th birthday, and the saccharine singing Tino Rossi, in a new operatta, is also okay b.o.

Name Policy to Prevail At Sheraton Hotel, San Juan

The Sheraton Hotel, San Juan, will go on a name and production policy. Spot will open Oct. 28 with Katyna Ranieri in the headline spot and surrounding production to be plotted by Milton Lehr. Also booked for the hotel is Bobby Rydell who bows Feb. 6 for two weeks.

As it now shapes up, the Sheratin's newest link will offer names and production during season and will alternate with shows toplined by natives in the off-season months or when the run of name availabilities is limited. Booking supervisor will be Al Banks, who operates out of the Sheraton's headoffice in Boston.

One Man Show

Maurice Chevalier
(THEATRE DES CHAMPS-ELYSEES)
Paris, Sept. 30.

It has been no secret that since the last war Maurice Chevalier was more an international figure than a local one. But his present one-man singing stint, the first in sev-years here, has awakened everybody to the fact that they have too long slighted one of the world's greatest showmen right on their own doorstep. Smash is the word for his opening night.

Chevalier, a star for almost 50 years, in show biz for 63, and celebrating his 75th birthday, came on easy in his opening songs of love. These only underlined the by now familiar figure of an almost staple image of the Frenchman who accepts love in a gurgling, self-satisfied manner; a sort of quaint, happy-go-lucky stereotype.

Things have changed much in France since the recent war. A new type of youth has emerged with more immediate interest in material things; love can be a harsh as well as a shoulder shrugging, eye-popping oo-lala thing, and jazz and American influences, plus the growth of their own variations on rock etc., have made for new tastes and outlooks.

That is why Chevalier appealed mainly to oldsters and to the foreign element with a still nostalgic outlook about a literary, anachronistic Paris. Youngsters considered him a bit oldfashioned. But now everybody has been made aware of the solid, evergreen showmanship emanating from this show veteran.

It began to happen after he went through a rather overlong takeoff of various type audineces; a goodnatured twitting of the twist, with a mean attempt of his own; and a gentle ribbing of the quavering, lightly-lyricked songs of today. Then a ditty about a man feeling at ease after a good dinner unleashed all his solid know-how and showmanly aplomb.

This was no longer a stereotype of a kind of Frenchman that may never have existed but a canny, robust display of contentment that can come from having gone through a lot and emerged with an optimistic but not self-deluding, saccharine, self-indulgence. And, segueing into well done French-Yank medleys, his old songs, good new ones with both poignance, bonhommie or gentle satire and telling talk, he had them and was in and built to a sock finale.

The oldstrawhat over the eyes, the tough guy, haunchy street walk of yore, the portruded lip, the twinkling eyes were all there, but added was a consummate ability to project, entice and give a personalized outlook that is the mark of a star.

If spanning many decades of changing mores and outlooks Chevalier displayed he had grown with them and he was not an anachronism but a timeless performer. In some talke he pointed out that in his time there was no phonograph yet, or radio or tv, to turn someone into a star overnight. It took years of work and getting to build up an audience. This showed in his work, a really knowing affair.

The old strawhat over the eyes, namism and a growing youthful glow that wiped out the earlier seemingly oldtime songs, he went into a witty look at man facing various ages and their reactions to it. No begging for condolence, pity or loyalty here, but a moving acceptance of the inevitable with a doughty human resiliency.

Chevalier can take a Yank standard and give it a bouncy glow or give out his "Gigi" song, "Thank Heaven for Little Girls," that has zest without being leering. In short, charm bubbled and fairly burst through this one-man show that was a summing-up of a true veteran talent that has now reached a peak due to maturity and good old hard work.

Age has enchanced Chevalier and his triumvirate plan of doing the leading three world show biz capitals for his 75th anni is a success. He scored in Gotham and London and made for a varitable triumph on his home grounds. It is a fact that many came out of loyalty while some wondered why he did not retire, but practically all had to cheer and toast a true talent that was ageless and unbounded.

As he put it, "Why retire if one still likes to sing and it's good and healthful exercise? Why? indeed! Chevalier showed he could go on indefinitely. It would not be surprising if his month's stay was prolonged although he has Yank pic and tv commitments and singing turns to fulfill.

Everything was right after he got to the audience. Each quip, each song, each physical fillip, all the old attributes rolled up were given a general overall sheen. Everything played just right. Chevalier has reached that rare thing, he has show biz grace.

A nod is due to the solid piano accompanying of Fred Stamer. Chevalier used no curtain and ended with a rousing ovation and a shower of flowers pelting the stage. He made sure he bent, his knees, to retrieve all as a true gentleman and not hurt any ladies' feelings who them. It was a stellar night and one of those that mark a real talent with his just deserts. He is now a prophet in his own country.

Show in at a $5 top and was presented by Messers Jacques Canetti, Jean Robin and Felix Valoussiere of the Theatre Des Champs-Elysees. Mosk.

Beatles Flunk in Scot Head Mistress' Book But Students Give 'Em 100%

Glasgow, Oct. 8.

Girls at an exclusive high school here were told by their headmistress not to see The Beatles, Britain's current top pop act. The group played a one-night date in the city's Concert Hall Saturday (5).

The school principal, Sister Anne Consuelo, told the girls that The Beatles' music (which represents the Liverpool sound, latest trend in the U.K.) was in very bad taste, and not of the type that the pupils should be listening to.

The school in question is the Roman Catholic Notre Dame Girls' High. According to some of the girls, Sister Anne was shocked when she learned that they had paid as much as $2.50 for a ticket. She described it as a waste of money.

Despite the suggestion that they shun the performance, many of the girls, backed by their parents, attended the show. Concert was a sellout. Hundreds of teenagers queued all night for tickets.

Sinatra-Horne

Hayton. He left nothing to chance. Aside from his understanding use of the baton, Hayton replaced pianist Gene Di Nova occasionally, and seemed ubiquitous in his quest for careful attention to detail.

Sinatra, according to the reception of this audience, has no peer in the vocal field. At one point in his recital, the aud was almost applauding sections of his tunes. A study in roistering jazziness, Sinatra takes the measure of the crowd with ease.

It was a crowd that paid a lot of money to be taken in this manner, and they too were a study of audience enjoyment. There was a rare rapport between both of these elements.

For added measure, Sinatra rested his pipes with a few sides of monolog, like telling of his joy in being a saloon singer and his experiences in the ownership of the Cal Neva Lodge, Lake Tahoe, casino end of which is in Nevada and the living quarters in California. "It's the only place in the world where you can be arrested under the Mann Act for walking across the lobby."

Yet Sinatra also has his serious side. He takes on airs of Arlen and Kern with feeling and even a sense of grandeur. He's a performer of all-around excellence, and should give the local folks a chance to see him at pop prices.

Of course, he sent Frank Sinatra Jr. around to remind locals of the Sinatra voice and manner, but Junior's stand at the Americana was only a tralier for the genuine. Nelson Riddle, per usual, conducted for the Leader and Bill Miller ivoried.

Venture was produced by Harry Belafonte Enterprises with Phil Stein, Belafonte's manager, supervising. Jose.

Caplin Defends Fairness Of IRS Expense Rules At Agents' Deduction Course

Washington, Oct. 8.

A training course on the nuances of expense accounting was initiated last week for Internal Revenue Service agents. Addressing a leadoff seminar for the course, IRS director Mortimer Caplin defended the fairness of the new expense account deduction rules.

Caplin said the course for the 14,000 IRS agents and examining officers is aimed at assuring "fair, responsible and commonsense administration" of the deduction regulations.

At the seminar for training instructors, Caplin said IRS will stress the importance of "a high level of national uniformity" in applying and interpreting the regulations.

He added that the rules were aimed at curtailing abuses while permitting "appropriate amounts" of business entertainment. He noted many businessmen and trade publications have commented that the regulations are reasonable.

"The pendulum has swung very far indeed," Caplin continued. "The regulations have been endorsed by large segments of the American business community, because they are workable. We will make them work fairly and reasonably."

World Vaudeville Corp. Wins Writ Vs. Weiser

Los Angeles, Oct. 8.

World Vaudeville Corp. has been awarded a preliminary injunction by Superior Judge Kenneth Chantry against Allen Weiser Enterprises. WVC, in an action filed Sept. 16, alleged Weiser had threatened litigation against customers and potential customers of its 90-minute teleseries, "This is Vaudeville." Weiser, according to WVC's suit, claimed prior rights to idea.

Under terms of Judge Chantry's ruling, Weiser Enterprises must cease and desist in its efforts threatening legal action to hamper future sales of WVC's series.

out that the issue of whether to get a liquor license for a Village spot is one of the more crucial decisions to be made.

He points out that as a straight java joynt, he can admit for the usual admission price, kids under 18; he doesn't have to maintain an expensive kitchen as is presently required under the State Liquor Authority regulations, and there are less employees.

Besides, Jacoby adds, some Village spots are getting as much as $1.50 for a single order of Caffe Capuccino. So the profit level is maintained even without serving schnapps.

Jacoby also stresses the advantage of a liquor license inasmuch as serving hard beverages could bring in a more diversified clientele. With extreme care, one could refrain from serving minors, and therefore the scope of the spot could be enlarged. Jacoby indicated he's thinking of opening up number two with a liquor permit, but isn't quite certain.

Auto Thrill Show Taps Big Biz In Tokyo; Promoter Only Casualty

Tokyo, Oct. 8.

Although bringing a stunt car show to this city strikes many as "coals to Newcastle," president John R. Beck of the "Tournament of Thrills" claims his current presentation of scheduled auto mishaps at Toshimaen Amusement Park is more exciting than riding in Tokyo traffic.

To support his claim, Beck cited the solid attendance being counted at the 12,000-seat stadium. The show is drawing full houses on weekends and 60% capacity during the week.

"When we crash automobiles, it's fantastic," Beck said. "We have a T-bone crash where one car flies through the air and crashes into two others while rolling over. You have got to think the guy is dead."

Further discrediting the thrills of riding in Tokyo traffic, hitherto the most popular local sport for those seeking skipped heartbeats, Beck said, "There's no comparison. I think the apprehension here by Americans is from the driving on the opposite side of the street and the narrowness of the roads. But I don't feel Tokyo drivers are reckless at all," he added. "As far as I can see, they are very skilled, considering the traffic and road conditions. Some of them could qualify as stunt drivers."

The "Tournament of Thrills" brought 12 drivers, including two clowns, for the engagement skedded to run through Oct. 16 at Toshimaen. The only Japanese "performer" is a headstrong young man with the unenviable assignment of being strapped to the hood of a car which crashes through a burning wall.

To lend a circus touch, the show added Bettina, a girl who does a sway-pole act. The show is using Ford Falcons, in accordance with its longterm tieup with that manufacturer, plus Toyopets.

While the Philly-based "Tournament of Thrills" has played South America and Europe, this is its first time in the Far East. Negotiations are in progress for three days in Osaka and a week on Okinawa following its Tokyo dates.

There are also prospects for further penetration of the Pacific area. Veep Henry Miller of GAC, who booked this engagement, is in Tokyo on the start of a swing that will take him through Southeast Asia and Australia. He is carrying film on the auto stunters to screen for promoters in those territories. If the response is sufficiently strong, Beck said he would form an additional unit (he has four touring the U. S.) from his pool of drivers, adding some Asian steerers to be trained in America.

Beck, a onetime reporter for the old Philadelphia Record, says his involvement with stunt cars is an accident. He backed into the field when, during a five-month strike at the paper, columnist Bill McGaw (now publisher of the Columbus, N.M., Southwesterner) asked Beck to join him as a fellow pressagent for an auto daredeveil show. "When we found out everything they were doing wrong, we decided to put a show together and do it our way," he reflected. "It turned out to be a career."

In Tokyo the only "Tournament of Thrills" casualty has been Hisando Higuchi, president of the Wide World Auto Racing Assn., which is promoting the stunt show here. (Higuchi is also prez of Swan Promotions, which presents more conventional entertainment fare.) At a rehearsal, Higuchi, 31, tried a motorcycle and lost control on a curve. He smashed into a guard rail and climbed a fence, breaking a leg in three places and fracturing an arm. He'll be hospitalized for almost four months.

"We've lost a lot of stunt men, but this is the first time we've ever lost a promoter," Beck observed.

Aussie Promoter Would Encore Tokyo Troupe

Tokyo, Oct. 8.

Aussie promoter Harry Wren, who recently scored a smash with 119 performances of a unit from this city's Nichigeki Theatre in a tour of 19 New Zealand cities, is expected to present the same show on a swing through Australia next year.

The head of the Celebrity Circuit is seeking to reacquire the 45-member Toho troupe to open a three-and-a-half month Down Under trek May 4. Wren titled his repackaged presentation, "The Cherry Blossom Revue."

K.C.'s American Royal Coronation Ball Draws 8,000 Patrons at $6 Top

Kansas City, Oct. 8.

Town extended one of its better fronts Saturday night (5) at the annual coronation ball of the American Royal (Live Stock and Horse Show), with an entertainment lineup including Guy Lombardo Orch, Jack Teagarden Sextet and the Countrymen (4).

Around 8,000 of the citizenry turned out, at a $6 top in the Municipal Arena, to see Kay Hunter, Missouri U. coed, a leanish brunet, crowned 1963 queen. John Anderson of Kansas did the honors. Miss Hunter was chosen from among 16 beauties representing land grant colleges of the midwest, reflecting the newer public relations minded Royal policy.

Show business, strongly represented by the broadcasting arm, was en masse behind the event with E. K. Hartenbower, general manager of KCMO, as general chairman, and most of the stations and many media contributing talent to the staging and/or presentation. Ken Heady, KCMO-TV program director, repeated his annual performance as emcee, with script by Mori Greiner, program director of KMBC-TV; staging by Bob Wormington of WDAF-TV.

Elmer Rhoden, former prexy of National Theatres who now heads Commonwealth Circuit here, was chairman of the queen judging committee. He drafted Randolph Scott, who was billed as representing Hollywood but whom the press billed as chief executive of an oil company. After 30 years in pictures, Scott said he no longer was making features, but was devoting himself to the oil company which has been losing money but is losing less and less each year.

Two Gaslight Club Stockholders Seek Prexy Browne's Ouster, Receivership

Chicago, Oct. 8.

Two stockholders in the Gaslight Clubs last week filed suit here against adman Burton Browne prexy of the key club chain, asking that he be removed from office and replaced by a Federal receiver.

Reached by VARIETY, Browne categorically denied a long list of allegations by stockholders Edward J. Damer and Miss Laurie Brady including misuse of corporate funds stock manipulation, illegal election of officers and directors and "large - scale mismanagement." Browne said it was a harassment suit designed to block public sale of stock in the privately-owned corporation.

In addition to Browne, the complaint also lists as defendants 15 other individual officers, directors and employees and 11 affiliated corporations. Among charges in the 28-page complaint is a claim that Browne gained control of the corporation by acquiring stock at either no cost or at a cost of $1 when the price to other stockholders was $33.33 a share.

Browne said that stock was available to everybody for $1, but that after it was issued it could be traded at any price that a buyer was willing to pay.

Each of the two complainants filed similar suits against Browne 18 months ago, at which time he had announced a possible public stock sale. The current action consolidates the previous complaints.

Other allegations include charges that the Gaslight Clubs maintained a yacht and luxury apartment in New York City for Browne's personal use, and that funds have been misused by Browne through excessive expense accounts.

Browne charged that the suit was an attempt to intimidate him and the board of directors from carrying out further expansion plans. He said that he wanted to plow profits back into the business and the complainants want profits distributed among the-share holders.

Kingston Trio, Natives Of Frisco, Raise 70G in Gig For Dem in Mayor Race

San Francisco, Oct. 8.

Kingston Trio, native to the Frisco area, raised nearly $70,000 for campaign of U.S. Rep. John F. Shelley (D.), running against City Supervisor Harold Dobbs (R.) for Bay City mayor. The Trio rolled up the coin via a gig at Masonic Temple here.

Frank Werber, combo's manager, rented the hall for flat $600, staffed it, bought newspaper ads. Of the aud's 3,187 seats, 1,700 were scaled at $3; thereafter they escalatored to $50. An ad-stuffed program also helped swell gross to $75,000. Costs were small, because Trio worked for AFM scale. Barbra Streisand was paid $3,700 to work show with them.

Hawaii Convention Biz Booms But Not Cafes; Japah's Expense Blues

Honolulu, Oct. 8.

Convention biz is booming but hotel operators complain that delegates traveling on expense accounts are spending less on entertainment and refreshment than they did before the Internal Revenue Service lowered the boom.

A major luxury resort figures its entertainment and liquor receipts are down 10%. And even if they're occupying plush suites, many tourists are buying their own liquor in bottles to drink in their rooms.

Nipponese Niteries Worry

Tokyo, Oct. 8.

Operators of Japan's myriad niteries, bars and restaurants breathed heavily as Finance Minister Kakuei Tanaka indicated that company expense allowances for entertainment would be trimmed next year, which fiscally begins April 1.

The signed check for monthly company payment is the backbone of Nippon's night life. The move by the finance minister would be one of the steps taken in an effort to lower corporation taxes here by 3% from the current 38%.

'Magician With the Million Dollar Hands'

GEORGE VAL GEORGE
Illusions
20 Mins.
Desert Inn, Las Vegas

"Although magician George Val George's splendid act is currently integrated into the Ted Lewis revue in the Desert Inn Lounge, it has not officially been recorded under New Acts.

"The illusionist is big physically, but graceful as he breezes through his well-polished turn. He uses at least a dozen white doves in his eye-deceiving trickery, plucking them from the air and making them disappear. One of his most astonishing feats is when he blows up a toy balloon, puts it on a tray, bursts the balloon, which —witnesses will swear—has a dove inside. At one point he "hypnotises" a dove, making it sleep on its back; he puts his doves in a paperbox which is torn apart showing clearly that they have disappeared. George calls the feathered part of his act "A Dovetail Rhapsody."

"Using many other props such as cards, canes, and handkerchiefs, George could make his act much longer. He does just enough in Lewis' revue to whet the appetite for such glamorous illusion. Lewis has rated him at the top of the crop of working magicians, and George as a single would be a strong attraction for any showroom." Duke.

Shoreham, D. C.

Washington, Oct. 1.

Van Johnson, Bob Cross Orch (14), Steve Kisley Orch (7); $3.50 cover.

The Van Johnson nitery act, which has a lot of style and class in it, is pegged on a running confession that old film actors don't die, they just fade into the big room. But it was evident that Johnson was protesting too much about his age and his new show biz career, because he had the audience with him all the way.

Johnson started in D.C. in his youthful years, as a hoofer and a member of vocal groups in five-a-day stands at the now vanished Capitol and Earle Theatres.

He returned to the posh Blue Room of the Shoreham Hotel as a polished performer with an act that is expertly written, staged, produced and performed. He may not be a great vocalist, but as the old line goes, he ain't bad.

Johnson also dances well. He takes on a spirited bossa nova to the rhythm of nothing save a bongo drum, and there is a rousing conga added to it. In another instance, he stops singing to execute a soft shoe bit to wow the crowd.

Lyn Duddy and Jerry Bresler are responsible for several specially written numbers, as well as putting the whole act together. Johnson made the unusual gesture of introducing Duddy to the first night audience. He had earned the bow, for the headliner had a highly glazed show, refined to the last detail.

He still looks young, the calendar and his humorous reference to his days with Helen Twelvetrees, notwithstanding. The mass of blond hair still stands high, his or Louis Feder's, and it is obvious that greasy kid's stuff would wipe him out as the boy next door.

"I'm a Ham," a Duddy-Bresler original is the opener, and a good one. The duo also composed a very amusing bit, "You've Always Been My Fav'rite Movie Actor" which deals with a long list of guys named Van, or whose names sound like Van. Another clever original is "You Don't Have to Ask Me More Than Once."

His fine drummer, Jack Del Rio, has a solo, and Johnson does a duet bit of pounding with him.

Otherwise, Johnson sings, "I Want to Be Happy," "Got a Lot of Living to Do," "Lollipops and Roses" in a soft light and 'Day In, Day Out" as a rouser. He blends "Don't Worry 'Bout Me" and "By Myself," and recalls the turkey he played in which "Lamplight" survived.

Attired in drum major's coat, he leads the band, each grabbing a horn, through the whole room in a "76 Trombones" finale. It's an exciting climax, except Celeste Holm did the same thing in the same hotel two years ago in white tights.

The coincidence was claimed in all quarters as an accident. It should not diminish a class performance which played to a sell-out opening night and loud cheers.

The Bob Cross Orch does its usual expert job of show backing, under the baton of Gil Stevens while Johnson is on. The group is fine with dancing tunes in other hours. Alternating, the Steve Kisley Orch keeps the dancers happy. Carp.

Savarin, Toronto

Toronto, Oct. 5.

Jack Carter, Ruth Walker, Don Gordon, Paul Grosney Orch (9); $1.50 cover.

At a reputed cost of some $300,000, Eddy and Sam Assaf have renovated the Savarin and introduced a new entertainment policy, along with a cover charge of $1.50—and the customers are expected to dine and drink.

Scotch and rye are a buck a shot, domestic ale 65c a pint, wines run $14 a bottle, and a meal is commensurate. The room which seats 400, is very posh in decor. Acts make two appearances nightly at 9:00 p.m. and midnight.

Sam Assaf, who supervises the entertainment, booked Jack Carter and Ruth Walker for the opening with a 12-day contract. Don Gordon plays pops at the grand; Paul Grosney's Orch (9) is in for two months.

Meantime Sam Assaf has booked —for two-week engagements— Della Reese, Johnny Pulio and Harmonica Gang, Gene Krupa with Charlie Ventura, and The Four Saints as future bills in that order.

Carter, on for 75-minutes on opening show, scored with his ribibng of the new setup, topical geographical gags, a slam at American-Negro bigotry that he thought was "shameful," worked in a take-off of Paul Grosney's orch and wound up with impressions of singing stars.

The ebullient Carter, despite his lengthy stint, satisfied the customers and held a lineup into the street for his second show.

Ruth Walker, last seen in Toronto as a singing headliner at the Canadian National Exhibition evening grandstand show, kicked off the bill with a 15-minute pop tune routine including her opening "Hey Look Me Over" and an equally bouncy "I Love to Love."

The trumpeting Paul Grosney leads his eight sideman in strong support of Miss Walker and plays the dance seshes, with Don Gordon filling with his pleasant pianistics at the grand. McStay.

Edgewater Beach, Chi

Chicago, Sept. 30.

Mary Kaye Trio, Edgewater Beach Guys (5) & Dolls (5), Don Davis Orch; $2-$2.50 cover.

Edgewater Beach g.m. Gene Barrett was eminently successful in his decision to integrate the last two headliners in the Polynesian Village with the resident Guys & Dolls troupe. However, they were singles (Monique Van Vooren and Johnny Desmond), and no doubt coordinating a unit such as the Mary Kaye Trio with the chorus would be more difficult.

But the fact that the topliner-cum-revue format provided two of the more exciting shows to play the room in many months should give Barrett pause to make this a standard practice.

This is not to say that the Mary Kaye Trio is not more than able to carry a show in this room by themselves. Mary and Norman Kaye are topnotch musically, Frank Ross provides a substantial assist and his muggery is of the first order of buffoonery.

The groups arrangements are some of the classiest charts to be heard for some time. Miss Kaye worked the opening night show despite an attack of flu, but carried off her chores with zest.

Although all their tunes are skillfully rendered, two of their comedy numbers stand out. Norman Kaye's zany arrangement of "Bill Bailey" into what they describe as a "contrapuntal oratoria fugue" is not only comic but is also noteworthy for its musical subtlety.

A centrepiece number, "Be A Performer," gives each of the group's members a chance to show their musical facility. It also affords Ross an opportunity to pull all the clowning stops out as he does quick sketches of a performing seal, a nutty swami, and a wild stripteaser. Mor.

Ash Grove, L. A.

Los Angeles, Oct. 2.

Barbara Dane, Stu Jamison, Tom Luke, Bill Cunningham; $2 admission.

Barbara Dane apparently remains one of the most popular folk singers to play locally, drawing the biggest opening night crowd seen in several months. The Capitol recording orbit easily lives up to her nickname as "The Great Dane."

Singer makes her first appearance here in more than a year, delivering a lengthy set combining many of her old favorites—"Jelly Roll," "C.C. Rider"—and adding some new material. New is "Ticki Tacki," catchy and communicative tune that can be changed to discuss any social situation.

Miss Dane was slightly troubled by laryngitic problems in her Tuesday (1) opening, but rallied sufficiently to go through a rousing "How Long?" her throaty, husky, smoky voice particularly suitable for such earthy entries.

Backing by Kenny "Good News" Whitson and Wellman Braud is musicianly and striking in itself.

On earlier are Stu Jamison, Tom Luke and Bill Cunningham, strictly country trio who deliver solid instrumentals in ethnic style. Ragtime "Dill Pickles" particularly sparked, along with quiet "Old Shep and a rousing "Roll & Go." Trio sings lightly, is more intent on the instrumental deliveries.

Show is in three weeks. Dale.

Contact DAVID B. WHALEN, Beverly Wilshire Hotel, Beverly Hills, California.

Sheraton-East, N. Y.

Bobby Short Trio, Coby Lou Cooley; no cover, no minimum.

The Sheraton-East Hotel (ne Ambassador) has long been one of the class Park Ave. haunts. Until an oversight was corrected the inn was without any visible means of entertainment although there were times when a band played on. This oversight has now been corrected, and it looks like the Cafe Ambassador will be one of the bright spots on staid Park Ave.

Bobby Short, in and out of the eastsideries for years, has developed a huge set of camp followers. The Negro singer-pianist has taken over the lounge with an authoritative air. It now appears like this ground floor hotel emporium will be a swinging spot.

There is little new that can be said for Short's work. He has been one of the foremost purveyors of musicomedy tunes, accompanying himself at the piano, with bass and drum assists to give him additional beat and drive. It's the same crew that he carried with him during his long run at the Blue Angel last season.

Through his eastside cafe forays and his demand for uppercrust party work, Short brings in an audience ideal for this class inn. He should create a lot of commerce here.

His entertainment colleague is Coby Lou Cooley, an intermission pianist. Short leaves the room in a hyped-up mood and it's difficult for anyone but an extremely forceful keyboardist to get patrons back on that plane. Miss Cooley wisely plays soft and familiar tunes in a sort of let-'em-relax attitude.

The room has a formal tone, and the location where Short works is less than ideal. But once he gets started, he seems to remove the shortcomings of the situation and pounds home a lot of entertainment. Jose.

Sparks Nugget, Nev.

Sparks, Nev. Oct. 1.

Milton Berle, Amin Brothers (2), LaScala Quartet, Leonard Sues, George Arnold Singers and Dancers (16), Foster Edwards Orch (13).

Current stint marks a debut for Milton Berle at John Ascuaga's Sparks Nugget—and he plays the Circus Room like it was designed for him alone. After a local hiatus of about five years, the Berle addicts welcomed him with a sustained palm-to-palm reception. He rated it all; gave the SRO audience all they could ask for—and then more. It was a memorable first night.

Berle makes his intro from among tablers (calling for approval of the George Arnold production) then hits the stage with more than an hour of entertainment. And it's pure show biz all the way, with the headliner handling the emcee duties, carrying the bulk of the show, working in with the other acts, setting (and holding) the jet pace, and at times making with general mayhem. A lot of it is burlesque, slapstick; but Berle proves he can reach the serious side, via a nostalgic bit re his pro career, done while he removes makeup at small table center stage.

Comic makes with many topical lines, is aware of local stuff, shows good attention to stage-siders, aims his lines at both genders and with such potency he reaches with ease the far corners of this 650-seater. There's no let-up, with pauses only to allow the laughs to subside.

Some of the lines are vintage but with the Berle delivery, the result is socko, albeit with many the punch is anticipated. As noted, he works into all the acts, but has his participation to perfection. And he bows out at exactly the rights spot to allow members of the supporting cast to show their talents alone.

Leonard Sues, ably conducting the Foster Edwards Orch for the Berle capers, is a natural foil for some of Berle's antics. But he shows his big talent on the trumpet, as evidenced on "Blue Skies," "Birth of the Blues" and Busse ("Hot Lips"), McCoy ("Sugar Blues"), and Armstrong ("Mack the Knife") carbons. On "Hold That Tiger" he's Sues, himself, showing he has a style his own.

The Amin Bros., exacting in precision and timing, win full attention with risley act that rates tops in all respects. Capper is a head to one foot flip, done from a foot to foot position. They again prove full control when Berle gets in act and manages to complete a foot to foot stand with an assist from the Amin brother whose place he takes.

The LaScala Quartet (mixed two and two) score on the operatic bits, with each of the four given chance to showcase individual vocal talent. With this foursome, Berle reaps the laughs with his attention to decolletage displayed (in abundance) by one of the femmes. And his role as the made-clown accents the risibility of the endeavor. Long.

Rat Fink Room, N. Y.

Jackie Kannon, Annette Sanders, Earther Doss Jr., Norm Geller Trio; $2 weekend cover.

The Roundtable presents an unusual entertainment situation. A customer can go from bellydancers to bellylaughs with only one flight of stairs. The Morris Levy spot has leased its little, used upstairs room to comedian-publisher Jackie Kannon who has converted the comparatively small space into a comedy room, he being its major headliner.

The plan seems laudable. Tagged the Rat Fink Room, it opened with a crowd taxing its capacity. Some of the smartest promotion ever poured into a cafe marked the preem. It's tag line was "A New Experience in Social Decadence." Its menu emphasizes "continuous entertainment, muggings, mercy killings, mental breakdowns by unpaid professionals."

In short, the audience was led to expect the informality of the old Club 18 with a new and bright format. Even Kannon purred that at last he has a room of his own, "A room I can go broke in."

The elements for a fun room are there, and with Kannon as the major item in the show it can happen. He has an immense sense of humor, some of it in the genre of his "Poems for the John," a highly successful book of verse to be read during periods of laxation and relaxation.

Kannon virtually started the coloring book vogue. Of course, he has been a successful nitery comic for years. With this background, a different format was anticipated, probably one which would involve the audience as participants and provide a type of entertainment somewhat different than found in normal niteries.

It still could turn into a room of that genre, but the opening layout indicates something more orthodox. Kannon brought in two acts, which seemed to discourage audience shenanigans. It thus went in under normal nitery lines probably because of its L-shape.

Kannon has a lengthy turn in which he distinguishes himself with a lot of offbeat gimmicks. His impression of Copacabana boniface Jules Podell is quite funny. He has copious special material and lotsa unusual interpretations of offbeat items; all of it rates attention and yocks.

He introduces singer Earther Doss Jr., a goodlooking Negro lad who has Johnny Mathis characteristics. Doss seems so intent on style that he somehow misses out in his singing. It's unfortunate, since there are some exciting elements in his voice.

Annette Sanders is reviewed under New Acts. A capable batch of musical accompaniment is dished out by the Norm Geller Trio. Jose.

Cocoanut Grove, L. A.

Los Angeles, Oct. 3.

James Darren, Gary Morton, Pierson Thal Orch (19), Rhythmic Strings of Allyn Ferguson (12); $3-$3.50 cover, $3 minimum.

Singer James Darren and comic Gary Morton comprise the dual attraction here through Oct. 16. It's a lacklustre show. Neither of the two has the nitery name stature nor the performing finesse to rate a co-starring niche in L. A.'s traditionally most illustrious active club. And the whole, alas, is only as compelling as its parts. Business figures to be relatively light.

Darren lacks the savvy, vocal refinements or showmanship instincts to make a successful transition at the present time from films, where he is a capable actor, to the nitery sphere. That should come as good news to "Gidget" fans.

Although he does have certain vocal attributes such as clarity of lyric delivery and occasional hot melodic flashes on the more frenetic jump tunes, Darren is a mechanical singer. Rarely does he bring dramatic feeling to his song stories—particularly on the romantic ballads which need it most. And this shortcoming prevents him from achieving a warm relationship with his audience. The performing chemistry just isn't there.

Morton gets off some scattered good gags and is an ingratiating, though conventional comic. But too much of his material is creaky, and his mannerisms and style of delivery bring other comedians to mind. Most of the topics he kids are overly familiar as comic territory—among them tv doctor shows, tv commercial and golf gags. He also tends to overdo the campy pose — especially when there's a lull in the laughter.

A full 20-minutes of celebrity intros followed the show proper opening night. Even Ed Sullivan could never top this stream of name-dropping. Pierson Thal Orchestra (19) supplies show backing and dance tempos. On opening night these musicians were astonishingly lethargic. Dick Stabile handled the baton for the Darren portion. Rhythmic Strings (12) of Allyn Ferguson shared the dance music chore. Tube.

Sahara Inn, Chi

Chicago, Sept. 30.

Hildegarde, Ollie Raymond Orch; $2-$2.50 cover.

In the two months since Gene Autry purchased the Sahara Inn his managerial staff has been plugging away at upgrading the plush motel's reputation, and the effort is beginning to pay off. Most of the flamboyance that attended the previous ownership has been muted, and Autry appears to be settling down for the long pull in developing the fancy layout as a convention centre and to attract the nearby airport trade.

Autry's managerial crew has the operation running smoothly with the sort of invisible efficiency that makes for a successful hostelry. General manager Erwin Schlicht has done a firstrate pob in staffing the motel, and it is now in a competitive position with the other deluxe motor hotels near the O'Hare Airport. Schlicht has retained two top staffers from the old regime to captain the two entertainment rooms—Bob Lowry is at the rope in the Sultan's Table and Nick Chiboucas in charge of the Celebrity Lounge.

Schlicht has been inching toward a name policy in the elegant Sultan's Table dining room, and the policy has come to fruition with Hildegarde. She's most appropriate in the fancy diggings, and her ability to project her tunes and personality is particularly important in this spacious supper club.

Hildegarde has been rejoined by George Landers, her accompanist-musical director of a few years ago. He not only backs her with the intuition born of experience in working with her, but also shows off nifty jazz technique in a piana solo on "Lady Be Good."

Songstress astutely mixes pop tunes, standards and her trademark Continental numbers in her catalog. She is especially effective in a wistful rendering of "My Coloring Book," a pungent handling of "Don't Blame Me," and in an artfully arranged version of "Rigalons." She also displays powerful and thoughtful finger work in her piano solo in a concerto for piano and orchestra written for her by Isidor Achron. Mor.

Latin Casino, N. J.

Cherry Hill, N.J., Oct. 8.

Tony Martin, Phil Foster, Moro-Landis Dancers (8), Joe Fraseto's Orch (16); $3-$6 minimum.

Hitherto seen only in solo appearances, Tony Martin has dressed up his act with foursome (two girls and two boys) who weave vocally in and out of various lilts to make each tune a production number. A veteran floor troubador, whose style and showmanship seem ageless, Martin is making his best presentation here in years.

He is at his best on songs of Neapolitan vintage like the trademarked "There's No Tomorrow" and rhythmic "More" from "Mondo Cane." The chorus rates bows and a reprise for their work with "In Other Words," and Martin bows out to let three of supporting quartet take solo flights at the mike.

Sally Gray's "As Long as He Needs Me," Carol Turnbow's "As Time Goes By" and Tom Allison's "Till There Was You" provide effective vocal breaks and audience is rooting for them. Martin ranges from his impeccable soft tones to solid fortes with virtually every number.

Selection of lilts is directed to the tables with the wine—"Breezing Along With the Breeze," "Dancing Cheek to Cheek," "Days of Wine & Roses," etc. The star relapses into the mannerisms of the '30s with straw hat and cane, kidding and yet not travestying style.

His spiel is polished and primarily concerned with booze and upcoming film story of his life. "They were thinking of getting Joe Valachi to play the role, but we sing in a different key."

In contrast with Martin's polish is Phil Foster's abrasive Flatbush stories. Both performers had comment on World Series, and Foster purported bitterness about the Dodgers. "They left me, not me them."

Despite inelegancies of diction, comedian gets in some pertinent comment about leading political figures. He views "West Side Story" through reactions of a Brooklyn tough: "They carry switchblades and tire irons, line up to fight and then one gang pirouettes while the other does arabesques."

Foster leaves them roaring with a long, expertly delivered, uproariously funny but questionable joke — questionable, at least, for the family dinner trade. Gagh.

Crystal Palace, St. L.

St. Louis, Sept. 30.

Judy Henske, Dick Glass, Grecco & Willard; $2.50 admission.

The Crystal Palace, cabaret-theatre in Gaslight Square, which was shuttered for a while because of boxoffice blues, is back again with a new variety-type entertainment policy. Launching the season are Judy Henske, folk singer-comedienne; Dick "Round Richard" Glass, balladeer, and the comedy team of Vic Grecco & Fred Willard.

Miss Henske, a stauesque brunet, is equally at home with a folk or blues or a real belter, and she salts the sings with some suave comedy patter. Poised and personable, she had first-nighters with her all the way.

Grecco & Willard do fine take-offs on contemporary frills and fooibles, including a skit on a near-sighted baseball player, a comic who doesn't want to be funny, tv commercials and Academy Awards. They play it low-keyed, and the deadpan approach heightens the comedy.

Glass, although primarily a folk singer, runs the gamut from rock 'n' roll to blues to ballads to satire and clicks in sing-alongs. He strums a guitar while he's chanting and turn the out-fronters into one big big happy family in no time.

Show is in for a minimum of two weeks. Bob.

Hawaiian Room, N. Y.

Keola Beamer, Leimoni, Dee Marquez, Mapela, Tempana, Kawehi, Torea, Ted Auletta Orch, Sam Makia Islanders, $2 cover.

The Hawaiian Room format seems a model of matching the food and entertainment policies perfectly so that one complements the other. The Polynesian menu, devised by Restaurant Associates which runs the operation in the Hotel Lexington, and the shows designed for the room by Tony Cabot have made this layout one of the more renowned tourist havens. It's also heavily patronized by knowing natives.

The new show is shaped along entertaining lines and with a format that bespeaks economy of budget and movement. It combines Polynesian with made-in-the-Mainland ideas.

Cabot has concocted a Hawaiian Hootenanny number wherein customers are lured on the floor for a go at square dancing (Polynesian style). There's also a production number, "Tamure," based on the Twist and with a dash of hula.

The principals are teed off with Keola Beamer, a cheerful looking lad who sings both Island and mainland melodies nicely, emcees the show and who further shows his versatility with his choreography of the show. He's assisted in the dance chores by Leimoni, a pleasant terper.

The major solo spot is given to Dee Marquez who essays songs in English and Tagalog. This Filipino miss, acomping herself on the guitar, has selected a set of highly melodic tunes that hit audience acceptance easily. The quartet of hip-weavers comprise Mapela, Tempana, Kawehi and Torea. They perform picturesque numbers.

The layout is backed by Sam Auletta, who also plays for the dancing, and the Hawaiian music by Sam Makia. Jose.

Sahara, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, Oct. 1.

Bob Newhart, Sergio Franchi, Moro-Landis Dancers (17), Louis Basil Orch (13); produced by Stan Irwin; presented by Milton Prell; $5 minimum.

Making their Las Vegas debuts in the Congo Room are Bob Newhart and Sergio Franchi, a strong double bill which should do good biz once the word gets around about its merit.

Newhart is in a tough spot, as he follows Franchi, one of the best musical attractions to hit the Strip in years. Of the two stars, nitery bookers would obviously give singer Franchi the nod, as his appeal is universal. Comedian Newhart is refreshing in that his material is original and far removed from the average standup performer.

However, Newhart's specialization, as funny as it is to most nitery patrons, possibly will zoom over the heads of the non-hip. Firstnighters gave maximum yocks to his situation stories of the submarine captain, the unexploded shell on the beach being examined by apprehensive policemen, the retiring employee's goodbye dinner, and the Sir Walter Raleigh telephone bit.

Franchi is a handsome vocalist with a warm personality. With an amazing range and perfect control he offers such numbers as "Funiculi," "Just Say I Love Her," "Nom Dimenticar," the Italian "Maria," "Caramba" (a delightful piece of mayhem in song), "I Wish You Love," and aria from "Tosca," "Arriverderchi Roma," "Chicago" (in Italian), and a superb "Granada." Neil Warner conducts the Louis Basil orch (13) for Franchi.

Holdover Moro-Landis production number featuring the 17 "Most American Girls In The World" is the curtain-raiser for the Stan Irwin production, in until Oct. 15 when Victor Borge returns. Duke.

Sky Room, Tucson

Tucson, Sept. 26.

Cab Calloway, Lou Garno Quartet; $1.50 cover.

Cab Calloway shows no signs of letting up after more than three decades as an entertainer. The former bandleader, now doing a single club act, sashays, strolls, struts and scats his familiar numbers, like "Minnie the Moocher," "St. James Infirmary Blues" and "It Ain't Necessarily So."

He begged off after two encores, after scoring with opening night auditors. Calloway opens on a bossa nova kick and goes into an up-rhythm "I've Got You Under My Skin."

His "St. Louis Blues" and other numbers are given a unique interpretation in delivery and tempo. He still retains the stylized vocal gymnastics and his voice seems to have deepened over the years. The audience, as usual, joins in the "Hi De Ho's" on "Minnie." Alex.

HIM-FELLA and LUBRA

NELSON EDDY and GALE SHERWOOD again are happy to be singing and clowning for enthusiastic Australian crowds. Cutting back a couple of months—the Kansas City Star said: "We can't figure anyone who wouldn't like Eddy's and Miss Sherwood's act. They are professional in every sense of the word."

A. P. A., Inc., Handles

Latin Quarter, N. Y.

Donn Arden's production of "The Touch of Venus," with Bert Wheeler & Tom Dillon, The Charlivels (3), Les 5 Brutos, Szony & Claire, "Touch of Venus" Line (20); Showgirls (9), Four T. of V. Boys, Art Johnson, Barbara Lange, Glenda Leigh, Tim Harum; Jo Lombardi Orch; $7.50 cover.

This Latin Quarter show which E. M. Loew and Ed Risman have whipped up for the early fall season is virtually a new one aside from the three lavish holdover production numbers. Topped by veteran funster Bert Wheeler, new layout is paced so smoothly that it easily measures up to the usual standard maintained at the L. Q. A virtual "must" for out-of-towners seeking nocturnal entertainment, this large nitery has been jammed since this show opened, helped by World Series fans, of course.

Spot again has come up with a topflight opening act, The Charlivels. These three talented musicians and acrobats have long been faves in niteries and other media. Three combine skill on various musical instruments with superb tumbling and acro feats.

Les 5 Brutos (New Acts), billed as comedy song stylists from Italy, keep the production rolling. Quintet scored here and come close to halting the show's schedule before getting off.

Francois Szony & Nancy Claire, with their Pas De Deux Classique, again go over big. This is the start of their eighth month albeit not consecutive. Their terping by now is familiar to N.Y. audiences and always expertly executed.

Bert Wheeler is assisted by Tom Dillon, a singer and straight, in an act dubbed "Wheeler & Son." It's explained by the fact that Wheeler comes on from the aud as Dillon's mother, wearing a bedraggled wig and matching garb. This offers an opportunity for numerous abused mother and son gags.

Dillon warbles "Hello Young Lovers" and other tunes with nicety. Wheeler returns sans his femme garb to go into his "old routine." This builds into a typical tap dance with top hat and tails. Wheeler's act clicks nicely here. He had much the same turn about two years ago in such western spots as Reno.

Production numbers continue to make this a top musical comedy offering, a bargain per se considering the groceries. Jo Lombardi cuts a sharp show, per usual, and plays for patron dancing. Wear.

Palmer House, Chi

Chicago, Oct. 1.

Jan Murray (with Micki Marlo), Wayne Newton & the Newton Bros., Ben Arden Orch; $2.50-$3 cover.

Jan Murray and Wayne Newton started their Empire Room gig off with an erratic show, but the sizeable opening night crowd didn't seem to mind and called them back for more, For seemingly different reasons the two ends of the bill came up with loosely coordinated turns that allowed for considerable lapses in the pace of their respective acts.

Murray is a redoubtable, quick-witted and ingratiating comic and managed to win over the ringsiders despite an array of gags and anecdotes many of which have bounced off cafe walls for many moons. He's been off the cafe circuit for more than three months doing summer stock, and this no doubt accounted for his unsteadiness on opening night. He's ably aided by his tv sidekick Micki Marlo, a charming and curvaceous thrush who joins him in several tunes including "Loads of Lovely Love" and "Everybody Loves a Lover."

Newton is a dynamic Top Ten tenor who has come into the disk bigtime with his click "Danke Schoen." It is to the songster's credit that his solos commanded rapt attention and solid palm praise in a room not particularly noted for showing young pop performers.

However, the apparent potential of his group is not fully realized because of the lack of interplay between Newton and his instrumental unit composed of his brother Jerry, Tommy Amato and Johnny MacLean, Newton scored with his high register rendering of "Toot Toot Tootsie" and "Rock a Bye."

Ben Arden's classy house orch supports the show with aplomb and serves up some of the finest terp music in the city. Mor.

Queen Elizabeth, Mont'l

Montreal, Oct. 4.

Patachou, Nick Martin Orch (8); $2.50 cover, $3 Sat.; no Sunday show.

What's new to say about Patachou except that she's boffo? Just how socko is perhaps best measured in the plush Salle Bonaventure which attracts the uppercrust of the French-Canadian carriage trade who, if anybody, knows the score with the French chantoosey.

This is Patachou's second time around in a few months, and she registers as big as ever with an act which is almost a carbon of the one she did fairly recently; in fact, now that she's a proven top headliner locally, she may well give some thought about adding a new touch to her routines. But she shouldn't switch the basic format, which is smash.

Patachou sings quite a lot of English numbers, particularly ballads. But her big ones are still the French, with her use of fingers, head, eyes, torso for maximum effect. Her Francais version of "My Fair Lady" is still the gem it was originally, with the insouciant delivery, eye-rolling and head shaking. Laza.

Village Gate, N. Y.

Dakota Staton, Brock Peters, Mongo Santamaria Band (7); $3 admission.

Current show at this spacious Greenwich Village cellar features a kind of something for everybody collection. For the hipper pop fans there's Dakota Staton and her jazz-flavored pop chirping; for the folk set there's Brock Peters and his polished commercial vocal stylings (see New Acts); and for the Afro-Latin music buffs there's the wailing of conga-bongo drummer Mongo Santamaria and his unit.

Miss Staton has a distinctive vocal style which captures an audience and holds it well via clever phrasing and driving presentation. Her patter is a little too pat, sounding like she's said her lines too often to have any personal connection with the audience. Dressed in full gown, the singer offers a hefty set of tunes in her set, mixing the ballads with the uptempo stuff in equal measure, backed by a solid instrumental unit.

Her "Cherokee" is a big opener and she warbles a nice ballad in "I Got My Porgy." An uptempo "Foggy Day" and "Summertime" swing well for her. "What Do You See In Her" and "Trust In Me" are nice additions to her ballad bag. These and other tunes make up her repertoire. She presents it in a slick manner which gets good response from the audience. Her "Misty" finale sends her off in a big way.

Mongo Santamaria & Co. present a driving set of Afro-Latin sounds, punctuated by thundering drums and propelled by groovy sax-flute-trumpet-piano work by his unit. Santamaria himself is a knowing stylist on bongos and conga, his playing geared for top audience appeal via some gimmicky presentation. The result is a loud and sometimes exciting set which keeps the crowd enthralled and tapping in time. Kali.

Hotel St. Regis, N.Y.

Peter Duchin Orch (11) with Nancy Manning; Quintero Orch (6); $3 and $4 cover.

This is Peter Duchin's second semester in the St. Regis' posh Maisonette and he's again fooling the hotel trade by doing socko b.o. The best barometer on any joint, class or mass, are the waiters; their pourboire is commensurate with the customer traffic. Last season they were frankly worried when the Balsa chain decided to emulate the discotheque vogue (but with live music), and came up with the personable Peter Duchin's combo, which insured a built-in class following. The mass thus becomes automatic. Le Club, membership diskery-dancery, set the pattern and the Balsa ch n (prominent in Mexico hotel industry; the St. Regis is their first Yank acquisition) shrewdly decided to get away from the name or quasi-name policy and try straight dansapation. It clicked from the start.

On Duchin's second season, the St. Regis' veteran staff has been frank to confide that business couldn't be much better, with or without the glossy "Continental" or American musicomedy chicks that formerly dominated the policy.

On his holdover semester, Duchin manifests that, despite the obvious application to his home work with practice, there's no thing like working experience to achieve the best results. There is evidence, to the above-"39" clientele, that the personable son of the yesteryear popular society dansapation fave, Eddy Duchin, has been wisely tutored. In this, Otto Schmidt, long with the late Ted Straeter, probably had a more than casual hand. The old Eddy Duchin arrangements occasionally come to the fore; young Peter also tickles that Steinway in a manner reminiscent of his pop. He sways with the same "feeling" for his lyrics and, perhaps, in time the customers will see him mouthing the wordage as Eddy used to do. This gave the latter an "extra" value in his meaningful, betimes soulful interpretation of the galaxy of dansapation greats by Rodgers & Hart, Porter, Loesser, Mercer, Berlin, Dietz & Schwartz et al.

Some of the top contemporary composers of musicomedy would be somewhat unnerved if a young maestro like Duchin, purveying dansapation for the younger (and older) set, spoke as forthrightly on what constitutes compelling terp music. He has his concepts, and the band's medleys prove attest to his partisanship for this or that brand of dance music.

Duchin's brass, woodwind and rhythm section evidences careful application to rehearsal. Besides his own pianistic prowess, there's a second 88er to backstop since the maestro does, on occasion, albeit briefly, desert his piano bench to conduct. Incidentally, Duchin is virtually giving a dry run of the role he'll due in Peter Sellers' film, "The World of Henry Orient," marking the maestro's celluloid debut. He plays the piano, natch! Pic is being produced on Long Island.

Duchin is decidedly building a following. What looked like a decidedly "international" (presumably UN personnel) clientele, on the Friday night caught, not only went for him but ditto for the white-haired Quintero and his Continental band. Latter's been around, notably last at the Sheraton-East (nee Ambassador Hotel) on Park Ave., and his style of bossa nova and kindred Latin-tinged tunes are easy on the ear and the hoof.

Duchin has the lissome Nancy Manning back for a second semester with the current pop vocals. She's both a decorative and authoritative thrush. But the Maisonette is now almost synonymous with Duchin. Incidentally, a li'l trademarked fol-de-rol has been developed between maestro and the room's suave maitre d'hotel Rudy (Meltzer) who nightly gives the "downbeat" for the No. 1 orchestra's teeoff. The Maisonette looks in for another strong semester and is probably helpful also to the across-the-hall La Boite. This class intimate room is presided over by another good host, Pierre, with Walter Kay (piano) and Jani Sarkozi (violin) for the musical interludes. Abel.

New Short Story 'Intl.'

Short Story International, a new 50c monthly which will reprint selected short fiction from all over the world, will have an initial run for the first issue of 250,000. Contributors to the first issue include Graham Greene, Oliver La Farge and the imprisoned Milovan Djilas, held in a Czech jail for his anti-Communist writings. His story, smuggled out to Italy, where it came to the attention of the new magazine's editors, caused him to be punished by the loss of all visiting privileges.

Short Story International is a two-family venture. The publishers are Samuel Tankel, head of Collier Photo Engraving Co., and his son, Zane, and the editors are J. Malcolm Morris and his wife, professionally Francesca van der Ling.

Morris wrote a bestseller for Lippincott several years ago called "The Wise Bamboo," and his wife has been a frequent magazine contributor and writer for tv and radio. After World War II, Morris, then an Army captain, managed Tokyo's Imperial Hotel during the occupation years, and his book was an amusing account of his experiences while running the hostelry for the Big Brass.

Tankel is a veteran in publishing, having owned the successful Graphic Book line for many years. He gave it up to concentrate on his big engraving business, but by an odd quirk, he still puts out the world's most expensive periodical, "Four Color Process Guide," an annual review of color uses in advertising, which sells for $110 a copy.

Donald Friede Joins P-H

Vet editor and publisher Donald Friede has joined Prentice-Hall as senior editor of the trade book division and, instead of working at the main Englewood Cliffs, N. J., headquarters, he'll make his office on lower 5th Ave. This is where Hawthorn Books, a P-H subsid, is also situated. Stuart L. Daniels, editor-in-chief of the trade book division, makes his hq in Jersey.

Friede's association with books and authors dates back to 1924 when he joined Alfred A. Knopf, thence to Boni & Liveright, and in 1928 his own Covici-Friede Co. where, with Pascal Covici, he published Hecht & MacArthur's "The Front Page," John Steinbeck's "Tortilla Flat," Gene Fowler's "Great Mouthpiece' and others.

After 13 years as story editor with such Hollywood agencies as Myron Selznick and Lyons & Lyons, he joined World Pub. Co. in 1953 and remained there for 10 years.

Herb Haas' Post

Herbert P. Haas, who started his 41-year career with the Hearst organization, on the N.Y. Journal in 1922, and who for a quarter of a century served as business manager of the Albany Times-Union, has been named assistant to Gene Robb, publisher of that paper and of the Albany Knickerbocker News. Roy W. Anderson, assistant business manager of both dailies for two years, has been promoted to business manager.

Haas will continue as labor relations consultant and in other executive capacities, on the newly created job. Transferred to the comptroller's office in 1928, he assisted in the purchase of Omaha Bee-News. Later that year, Haas moved to the Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph, where he became chief accountant in 1931.

Satevepost's Refinancing

Curtis Publishing Co. will call a special meeting of stockholders Dec. 10 to consider a refinancing plan for the company, chairman-president Matthew J. Culligan announced at the two-hour regular monthly meeting of the board of directors.

A brief statement announcing the stockholders meeting was issued after the directors conference. No details of the financing plan were given; but it was reported the directors discussed a plan developed by a group of banks headed by First National of Boston.

This would provide some $35,000,000 for the conversion of Curtis' short-term debts into long-term obligations. Curtis is believed to have $18,000,000 outstanding in unsecured short-term debt; but further disclosures of refinancing project must await Securities & Exchange Commission clearance.

Frazier's Boston Herald Exit

Association of controversial columnist George Frazier, who had needled everything from show biz to politicos in a daily column for nearly two years here, with the Boston Herald has evidently come to an end.

Frazier's column has not appeared for a week, ending Sunday (8), and not a word of explanation has been printed as yet by the Herald, which had advertised and given Frazier top billing.

Paul Benzaquin, WEEI news broadcaster, announced "George Frazier has resigned from the Boston Herald" but did not elaborate except to state that it was "a crying shame that George Frazier will write no more in Boston."

Informed circles said that Frazier had resigned by wire from Ft. Wayne, Indiana, and that the newspaper had refused to publish one of his columns. It was also reported that there are three libel suits pending, and that beefs from advertisers also figured in the hassle.

Frazier's column, which had been running daily and Sunday, after its start as daily only, had attacked sacred cows, personalities and ranged far afield from sports to reviewing the food in beaneries.

'Catcher' Back In Philly

Philadelphia's top seat of teen learning, Central High School tossed out "Catcher in the Rye" in February, but picked up options on the J. D. Salinger juve classic on a fall rebound.

In announcing "Catcher's" return to the library lineup, school president William H. Gregory said any English teacher may order his pupils to read it and report on it. He may also order the bookstore to stock it. So far this term, no teacher has done either.

"Catcher" was called off base in February when a history teacher, since retired, balked at its contents. The English department rushed out of the dugout en masse to protest the decision, with noisy backing from alumni. At a faculty spring meeting "Catcher" was reinstated by a score of 17 to 1.

While there have been no faculty requests for a student boxscore on "Catcher," the three copies of the work in Central's library were said to be "nearly always in circulation."

Hedda's Double-Fete

Score of celebrities will attend Golden Flame Award dinner honoring Hedda Hopper Oct. 12 at Beverly Hilton Hotel. Pat Buttram will emcee, Frankie Laine heads list of entertainers. Clifton Webb, Gladys Cooper, Lucille Ball, Rosalind Russell, Shirley Booth, Raymond Massey and Ronald Reagan will be among those at speakers' table. Award, signifying outstanding newspaper achievement, will be presented by Agness Underwood, city editor of the LA Herald-Examiner, on behalf of National Federation of Press Women. Latter won the award last year. Alden Waite, v.p. Copley Press, hosts the cocktail party.

Following Monday (14) the columnist will receive a citation as "Beverly Hills Woman of the Year" from United Way of Bev-Hills at a luncheon honoring the "woman who has done the most to help others during the year."

Harry Leon Wilson Biog

One of the old Broadway characters of Richard Harding Davis days will be recalled by publication in late October of "Harry Leon Wilson" by the Press of Western Reserve University.

Wilson, author of "Merton of the Movies," "Ruggles of Red Gap," "Bunker Bean" and scores of stories and plays, is the subject of George Kummers study of the triumphs and tribulations of a popular writer.

Ed Bernays' Memoirs

Pioneer p.r. expert Edward L. Bernays will have his memoirs published by Simon & Schuster.

Bernays who, with his wife, Doris Fleischmann, long operated an international p.r. organization, has been residing in Cambridge, Mass., since giving up-to-day activity, where he is working on his autobiography. He wrote one of the first books on public relations, "Crystallizing Public Opinion," in 1923. He has been a Professor of Public Relations at NYU.

A nephew of Sigmund Freud, the book will contain many unpublished letters of his famed uncle.

CHATTER

Popular Library did what it claims to be a speed-record publication job even for a paperback, with its 75c. reprint of "The Profumo-Christine Keeler Affair," Lord Denning's report to Prime Minister Macmillan on the sensational case which he presented to Parliament.

James LeBaron Stinnett, son of Satevepost exec editor, writer and humorist, and of Mrs. Joe Gardner, engaged to Bryn Mawr alumna Deborah Ruth Goldberg. Young Stinnett is at U of Penn Medical School. A Dec. 22 wedding planned.

The Northern Whig, a leading Northern Ireland morning newspaper, published at Belfast, has folded, following a dispute between the management and part of the editorial staff. Strike action by the latter was authorized by the National Union of Journalists. Sheet, a Unionist Party newspaper, was first published in 1824. It circulated in the whole of Northern Ireland and in parts of Eire.

The Shetland News, one of two weekly sheets published in the Shetland Islands, off northern Scotland, folded after 76 years' existence.

Michael Uris, motion picture consultant for Pocket Books, and former studio story editor, has organized Film Story Consultants, an independent service for filmmakers and publishers.

Singer Connie Haines is subject of show biz tome, "The Magic and the Spell," written by novelist Philip Louis Gabriel, who previously authored "The Executive."

By one of those gremlins, two recent stories on John Denson assuming the post of executive editor of the N. Y. Journal-American both times came out Denton.

Mrs. Mary Lea Page named a roving editor by Wade H. Nichols, editor of Good Housekeeping.

BROCK PETERS
Songs
30 Mins.
Village Gate, N.Y.

Brock Peters is a versatile performer who jumps from the legit stage, to the screen, to the nitery stage with facility. He's currently in New York making a film and, while he's at it, is also playing a singing engagement at Art D'Lugoff's Greenwich Village cellar, the Village Gate.

A dramatic song stylist who draws his material from the folk repertoire, Peters delivers in slick and pro style. A big, strapping Negro who's film roles have included the part of Crown in "Porgy and Bess" and, more recently, an appearance in "To Kill a Mockingbird," he presents his material in strong, virile style. His big physical size is matched with a big voice and the combination leads to particularly effective renderings of "Take This Hammer" and "St. James Infirmary."

He also works in a ballad groove with songs like "Lady Love" and swings into a calypso beat for a stylish number done in island dialect. Peters' acting background often finds its way into his performance which occasionally leads to overplaying of the material, his performance sometimes overpowering the song itself. With some modulation in this area, he could have a fine turn, it already being an entertaining display.

Although billed as a folk singer, Peters is really more than that because he takes his tunes and projects 'em in a manner which is too dramatic for their simple ethnic backgrounds. But this does not detract from the potential effectiveness of the material, a potential he often realizes during his turn. Kali.

PATRICIA CARLI
Songs
15 Mins.
Olympia, Paris

Patricia Carli is a small, intense new belter who also writes her own songs. Ditties are mainly torchy and plaintive. She does have a good husky voice that hit depths of want, hurt or unrequited desire without being quaint, self-indulgent or precious. But she needs a widening out of her onenote habits and a more subtle shading in her use of arms and body. Better songs would also help.

There is some reminiscence of Edith Piaf if Miss Carli's problems come from worldly rather than the lowlife and street depths of Miss Piaf's world. She can develop into a promising specialized belter with more roadwork, deeper and more diffuse material, and simpler underlining of her dramatic forte.

If the quivering, personal intensity seems some way off, there is adequate intimation that she could emerge a promising dramatic belter when she develops more poise and depth. She is on Bel Air records here. Mosk.

NANCY HOLLOWAY
Songs
25 Mins.
Olympia, Paris

Nancy Holloway has been a longtime Paris resident and played U. S.-type and local boites. She has been cataloged under New Acts some years ago. But now she has blended her Yank drive, wit, candor and poise to the local rock outlook, belting dramatic ballads and torchy items. Mixture is taking instead of hybrid.

Miss Holloway is also well groomed and has a dusky good nature and drive that lend her a disarming ease with the audience. She can also go into wild twist gyrations or use her neatly honed chassis to underline a goodnatured look at a girl in the throes.

If most of the songs still have a more direct boite quality, where nearby patrons can be directly approached, she has widened her repertoire to include numbers that have a more general bounce and appeal for house needs. More of this should make her a solid staple in all forms of song in-person show facets here. There is not the personalized, building interior projection dynamism as yet to insure star status.

But judging from her continuing and maturing growth as a performer this could possibly be in the offing. But, as is, Miss Holloway has found the right rep to underline her Yank aspects and yet fit with local song concepts. She appears more a European commodity on her metamorphosis than for her home markets. She is on the Decca disk label.

What Miss Holloway deftly proves is that she has the aplomb for audience interest, the necessary inventive spontaneous wit, and enough singing and terp abilities to shape a natural for heading the bigscale French revues, like say the Folies-Bergere or the Casino de Paris. In short, though different in aspect and appeal, due to changing times and tastes, she could emerge a latterday Josephine Baker if savvily handled and placed. Mosk.

HOWARD HARTMAN
Songs
30 Mins.
Gaylife Club, Dallas

Howard Hartman is a big, handsome Houstonian with a baritone to match. He's had nitery experience, but never tagged under New Acts, and a string of summer stock musicals' leads to his credit. The legit dates show to fine advantage as he clicks neatly with "Sound of Music," "If Ever I Would Leave You," "Wish You Love," "Make Believe" and a medley from "The Desert Song."

Hartman has stage savvy, moves about and mixes light comedy patter between tunes' getting rapt attention from his auditors, who respond with lusty palming. An amazing Ezio Pinza lookalike, songster smartly retains vocal shading in his powerful tones as he belts "Maria" and "Enchanted Evening." Songalog includes a lilting "Street Where You Live" and a sock version of "Nearly Was Mine" to a begoff.

Abetted by the necessary assets, Hartman is ready for the bigger rooms and a good bet for Broadway musicomedy. Bark.

JANICE BAKER
Songs
45 Mins.
Ye Little Club, L. A.

Shirley Ward, who changed her name to Janice Baker, has come up with an excellent Roland Dupre-staged act and looks very much like she may turn into the next singing discovery to emanate from Marshall Edson's diminutive BevHills bistro.

The new Miss Baker bowed with a lengthy set of songs particularly designed to stress the s.a. she so easily can convey. Chicly gowned and ablebodied, singer undulates with well timed and carefully planned movement through solid jazz arrangements that completely captivate the audience. She also sings well, has a small but well trained voice and apparent musical knowledge. Chirp delivers with fast, sometimes clipped speech on such as paired "End of a Love Affair" and "By Myself," a purely sensual "Ballin' the Jack" and undersung "Come on Strong." Arrangements are excellent and her phrasing superb. Her greatest asset is in knowing how to sell. Dale.

THE VIOLINAIRES (4)
Instrumental, Songs
Ramonde's, N. Y.

The Violinaires are being revived in a new form under the tutelage of Sidney Kassimir. Latter, who paces the troupe with an electric guitar, formerly headed a group comprising four femme fiddlers which had a vogue in many hotel rooms throughout the east. The current quartet surprises two violinistes plus a boy singer.

The new setup makes for an enlarged versatility. The two girls have enriched their sound, with the use of amplified violins. The electrification system achieves a richness, albeit an artificial one, but it creates volume that can be heard in larger rooms and it provides an opportunity for the girls to display virtuosity that they might not otherwise possess. The catalog is light, popular and generally gay, and takes in a wide category of composition.

The vocalist, Vince Donato, has a pleasant voice. He tends to get too dramatic at times, but then how else could he compete with the lush fiddle backgrounds. The blend of voice and strings is rich, romantic and robust. They're fine for spots for both the dinner and late trade. Jose.

ANNETTE SANDERS
Songs
12 Mins.
Rat Fink Room, N.Y.

Annette Sanders, a newcomer locally, has been on view in the Catskill country where she has developed into a personable singer. At this point, she shows an artistic resemblance to Barbra Streisand, but there are moments in which Miss Sanders comes through for some good all-around results.

Miss Sanders has a fresh personality and her tunes are sometimes angled pixieishly. She doesn't go too far off the beaten track for her numbers, but they are given individual treatment. Ultimately, Miss Sanders will assert herself more strongly, and she'll find acceptance on her own terms. Jose.

LYNN SHRINER
Songs
20 Mins.
Rendezvous Room, L. A.

Lynn Shriner is an attractive blonde who gowns well and looks good on stage. Initially a Joe Pasternak discovery as an actress, Miss Shriner makes her bow as a singer with an easy, pleasant act sufficient for a small room. She needs plenty of grooming before she will be able to expand her appeal.

Singer has an average voice, delivers lightly with an occasional sharp belt. There are areas in which she needs to tone her speech, develop rounder vowels and eliminate the hard, sometimes shrill sound in big sell areas. "After You've Gone" was nice in set caught, along with balladed "Fool to Want You."

At this point, Miss Shriner has cut-and-dried, straight arrangements, needs individuality and specialize delivery. Dale.

LOS FLAMENCOS AMERICANOS
Spanish Song & Dance
Drake Hotel, Chicago

The three performers who comprise Los Flamencos Americanos are all U.S.-born but were trained in Spain. Their schooling must have been of the first order because they have effectively captured that peculiar Iberian mixture of passion, melancholy and gaiety with unerring authenticity and winning flair. This is their first engagement as a trio as all three had previously worked as singles or in larger revues.

Lusita Sevilla, 18, was born in Denver, is one-quarter American Indian and is darkly cute. In addition to being extraordinarily pretty, she carries herself with an assurance and showmanly charm that belie her youth, and her Spanish footwork is extremely sophisticated for a performer of her age.

Her dancing partner, Roberto Lorca, is tall, muscular and 24. He's of Irish-Mexican ancestry, has been a flamenco dancer since he was 10, and has the sort of dark good looks surefire for the femmes. Guitarist-singer Elario Lozano studied at the Madrid Conservatory and at La Scala in Milan, and has solid European cafe experience behind him, particularly in Italy.

Miss Sevilla and Lorca are first-rate in their dance work, particularly in their lively Mexican and Spanish folk dances, which they execute with charm and vivacity. Miss Sevilla also does a superb table-top flamenco in which she articulates the rhythm in a wide array of tempi, using her heels with the speed and subtlety of a bongo player's fingers. Lozano has a fine, rich voice that excels in a sentimental mariachi number like "Cu-Ru-Cu Cu Paloma." He's also good with his ballads, but his choice of numbers tends to lean heavily on such Spanish chestnuts as "Granada," "Guadalajara" and "Valencia." He would be wise to use some fresher or lesser-known selections. Mor.

LES 5 BRUTOS
Comedy Song Stylists
17 Mins.
Latin Quarter, N.Y.

These five Italian lads, only one playing straight appearance-wise and with his singing, come close to being the Ritz Bros., Italian style. This is with no deference to the zany American brothers or that this combo tries to ape them. But the four boys have the musical madness that is sure to prove eye-catching and aud-holding. The five are introed here on a suddenly illuminated stage, the four going into crosseyed routine, leers, mugging, mussed hair, etc. The impact is terrific. Group is different and their comedy comes through.

The four comedians sport red dinner-jackets to set them off from the fair-haired lad who leads all song numbers and plays straight, no matter how wacky quartet's antics. He has a tough task because he must continue the main thread of a tune straightfaced despite the clowning on both sides.

Their choice of tunes is excellent, one of the early songs being a prizewinner in a San Remo Song Fest. Then there's "Granada" and a couple of others. The five boys have real voices and know how to make the best use of them. The Italian group apparently does not know too much English but they do know all of the motifs whether it's an Italian or Spanish number as with the farcical treatment of Spanish terping to background "Granada." Perhaps they overplay the mugging, excellent as it is, but that can be toned down once they add a few spoken words. The foursome never lets up with its panto clowning or vocal gymnastics.

The Brutos had the audiences here in an uproar most of the time because the aud wondered what wild stunt they would do next. Tipoff on their popularity is that they received what amounted to an ovation from the LQ crowd. This is a solid act that should get places, either in spots like this or theatres. Wear.

DANNY MEEHAN
Songs
30 Mins.
Blue Angel, N.Y.

Although never recorded in VARIETY's New Acts files, Danny Meehan is no newcomer to the Gotham scene. He's been in the casts of revues and otherwise been active around town. Particularly for this reason it's surprising that he hasn't been able to mount a more successful nitery act than the one he is currently displaying at the Blue Angel.

His legit background is very much in evidence in the singer's act both from the standpoint of material chosen and presentation. Meehan has a good voice which he uses effectively but his physical actions on stage come across as forced and unnatural. He sells his material with lotsa personality and when this personal approach takes on a false appearance, as it often does, then it just doesn't work.

A better belter than ballad singer, Meehan mixes his repertoire with speciality material. One of his better numbers is an item called "Boom" which, oddly enough, is mostly in French. In this tune he gets the casual personality mood going nicely and does not oversell as he does, for example, with an uneven rendition of "What Kind of Fool Am I?" His interpretation of "She Loves Me" works sometimes but is generally oversold, which rather sums up the impression of Meehan's turn.

All the ingredients of a successful act are there but they must now be shaped into a smooth and credible form if the audience is to develop much consistent interest and empathy for the performer and his work. Kali.

THE WOMENFOLK (5)
Folksongs, guitars
23 Mins.
The Garret, Los Angeles

Five young femmes in checkered bell-bottom dresses, each trumming adequate guitars (with no one faking it) and each taking turns at singing solo (better than adequately) came on with a collective vocal and instrumental sound reminiscent of no other femme group going. Their professionalism of presence and blend belies the act's teaming up just two months ago, and they floored the SRO coffeeshop crowd on night caught.

Joyce James, the only "old pro" in group (not in age but in time spent in folk circuit) delivers most of the lines, written by the men who welded the fivesome—Gil Garfield and Harry Bodkin. Quintet, already grabbed up by RCA Victor, is due out with first single in two weeks and album Nov. 5.

Packed with tunes aimed at full-gamut folk appeal, act has excellent balance. Lead song, "Womenfolk," an original written for them by Stanley Stein, makes for okay theme. Rest of repertoire ranges from socially critical "20 Boxes," which hits at age of conformity, to "Silver Dagger," pure slapstick, to "La Bamba" pure Spanish, to wrapup number, "It's a Hard Time," pure cornball.

It's all there—power and light-touch, humor and seriousness, the real folk stuff and the updated—so there's only one way for Miss James, Barbara Cooper, Leni Ashmore, Elaine Gealer and Judy Fine to go—up. It's a fresh and exciting act. Price.

DANIELLE DARVOUR
Songs
25 Mins.
Frontier Room, Vancouver, Wash.

Danielle Darvour is a tall, good looking, well shaped singer who knows how to belt or caress a tune. She took the big leap as a solo act three months ago, after five years exposure — three in France and two in the States — as a production chirper. French lass proves a real pro with class, talent and salesmanship. Her English, flavored with French accent, make the lyrics vivid and audible the usual French nasal gargle sound. Songalog is interesting and well paced. Miss Darvour should make even stronger showing in larger room.

With a couple of special material tunes added to stint and a few more playing dates, Miss Darvour appears suitable for any situation. Price.

House Review

Olympia, Paris

Paris, Oct. 5.

Gilbert Becaud, Nancy Holloway, Patricia Carli, Avron & Evrard, Franck & Johnny, Arthur Plasschaert Ballet (12), Gil Dova, King's Toys (3), Daniel Janin Orch (21); $3.50 top.

Gilbert Becaud bounced into this big vauder to show that established singer-cleffers with a personal draw could raise as much applause as the new crop of rock and rollers. In good voice and form, he scored big and should make this four-week stay a solid grosser.

Becaud has poise and projection, plus diversity and drive. Whether twitting a German wedding, a melancholy wait for a loved one at an airport, a lament for life's bad times or joyous refrains, he is in control of his element. An agitated but not overdone stance and bubbling mike presence, along with his piano diversions, all add up to excellent showmanship.

Coming into her own, after a long break-in at sundry jazz and regular boites around town, is longtime U. S. resident Nancy Holloway. In the second slot, she shows a gusty exuberance and a knowing mixture of French and Yank songs to win solid returns.

Another promising singer, a local one, Patricia Carli, is reviewed under New Acts. Franck & Johnny duo rock songs but should stay with little combos on their okay rhythms. They are not of the stature to stand up alone in house shows.

Avron & Evrard are a far-out comic team with amusing takeoffs on a scared bullfighter and overzealous bicycle racers. But the involved turn needs the more informal offbeat boite attentiveness than is possible in a big house. More direct patter and delivery could make them a standup tandem for vaude needs.

Gil Dova is that rare juggling phenomenon who has the perfection and dexterity to be able to play the clown. He is a timeless two-a-dayer that gets to the more jaded and youthfully innocent alike.

King's Toys have a contorting jack-in-the-box personage being twisted and tossed about by two partners. It is a staple that gets a plus in colorful costuming. This type act is still a good filler.

Arthur Plasschaert Ballet does some fancy, little ballets to buck up the production aspect of the show. Choreography is simple and derivative as befitting dance for this type show. Group also introes numbers. Daniel Janin Orch could use some more inventive arrangements. Mosk.

You can't knock Christmas. And since "Here's Love" is based on the 20th-Fox picture click of 1947, "Miracle on 34th Street," you've got to hand it to this new Merewith Willson musical.

The show is as cheerful and sweet and clean and sentimental as an Elsie Dinsmore New Year's resolution. It's enough to make cynics gnash their teeth right down to the jawbone, and it should have average audiences drooling with pleasure for months and months, including matinees—especially matinees. In short, it's a family show, though not all the family may relish it.

"Here's Love" remains quite faithful to the plot outline of the Valentine Davies story and the George Seaton screenplay that were the basis for "Miracle on 34th Street." That's effective enough in the early scenes, such as the Macy parade and the shopping season pandemonium in the department store, especially as choreographed by Michael Kidd. The second portion, covering the sanity charge against Kris Kringle, gets out of hand and wanders, but ends on a properly festive schmaltzy note.

Willson isn't a master of dramatic structure and dialog, and "Here's Love" wobbles and staggers disconcertingly at times as promising situations are bungled and potential laughs are lost in the faulty writing and producer Stuart Ostrow's inept staging. Willson's songs are astonishingly so-whattish, without a real audience-stampeder in the lot. As usual with the composer, the lively tunes tend to be better than the slower ones. In the case of the lyrics, the straight numbers are better than the mediocre attempts at clever patter.

Kidd's choreography is a lifesaver. The imaginative dance patterns, including the parade and a host of animated episodes in the store, have infectious movement and style. The routines are skillfully conceived in terms of story and situation, and generally not excessively long. Alvin Colt's inventive, colorful costumes are a notable asset.

"Here's Love" comes down to a case of Santa Claus magic. As played with expert simplicity by Laurence Naismith, the jolly old elf has a contagious twinkle in the eye and a vibrance and bounce that lift interest whenever he's onstage. Janis Paige is excellent in the sketchy role of the heroine, a Macy career woman trying to hide her susceptibility to such eternal illusions as the Santa Claus legend and masculine appeal. She has two standout scenes, one a hostility-romantic bit with the hero and the other a difficult, largely tuneless love song on the theme of incompatibility. She looks great.

Craig Stevens is attractive and, at least by musical comedy standards, plausible as the young lawyer-male lead, but he's no great shakes as a singer. Among the featured supporting players, there are varying effective performances by Cliff Hall as the judge who finally realizes the political risk of taking a public stand against Kris Kringle and Paul Reed as an agreeable Mr. Macy.

David Doyle is amusing in the outsize part of a psychopathic personnel man and Larry Douglas as the District Attorney who has the misfortune to run up against St. Nick as a defendant. Valerie Lee tends to be a bit self-consciously cute as the moppet who learns to believe in Santa, and Fred Gwynne mugs a bit as the lady executive's ghoulish assistant.

For the record, the "Miracle on 34th Street" picture was directed as well as scripted by Seaton, and it costarred Maureen O'Hara and John Payne as the romantic leads, and featured Edmund Gwenn as Kris Kringle, Gene Lockhart as the judge, Natalie Wood as the moppet girl, Porter Hall as the fiendish personnel man, William Frawley as a sort of political bodyguard for the judge, Jerome Cowan as the D.A., Philip Tonge as the Macy lady's aide and Thelma Ritter as a whimsical old pixie.

As for "Here's Love," although it's a spotty show and up to here in syrupy sentimentality, it should appeal to average audiences and be a boxoffice hit, besides being a prospect for films and a possible vehicle for stock. Hobe.

Chips With Everything

Morton Gottlieb & Helen Bonfils presentation of Royal Court Theatre (London) and Bob Swash production of comedy-drama in two acts, by Arnold Wesker. Although it isn't a very good play, "Chips with Everything" is a stunning show. The Arnold Wesker comedy-drama, which opened Oct. 1 at the Plymouth Theatre, is a prospect to repeat its London success. It had first-nighters enthralled and cheering at the final curtain.

There probably hasn't been such unabashed flag-waving on a Broadway stage since the heyday of George M. Cohan. It's British flag-waving, of course, with men of the Royal Air Force marching smartly and a band playing "God Save the Queen" over the sound system. As one amused-but-stirred observer commented, "Imagine the ribbing there'd be if an American show offered such a finale in London."

Although "Chips with Everything" is apparently supposed to be an expose of the caste system in the RAF and an attack on the brutality and degrading effect of military training, it could easily be taken for just the reverse. Maybe only a Britisher could appreciate the play as anti-Establishment. At any rate, an American who hasn't lived with a strict caste system may miss significant nuances of the piece.

It's interesting, for instance, that while one of the officers in the play is a fatuous snob and another is a sinisterly class-conscious homosexual, the lower-class conscriptees are, in their own way, just as snobbish and class-conscious. They do not understand and are suspicious and resentful of their upper-class fellow-trainee's democratic attitude.

Moreover, it's significant that the author, while presumably trying to condemn the injustice of the caste system, actually shows that it is the upper-class inductee who alone demonstrates qualities of leadership and ability to plan and supervise an operation. It's puzzling that the same man, after rebelling against becoming an officer candidate, should suddenly give in so whole-heartedly to seemingly transparent argument. On top of that, it seems downright silly when he turns out to have had an officer's jacket and cap hidden under his pillow all the time.

As for the idea that "Chips" is an attack on military regimentation, that rousing finale seems surprisingly like a jusification, if not glorification, of Her Majesty's armed services and, indeed, for the whole institution of martial pageantry. The play unquestionably shows the brutality and dehumanizing effect of military training and the stupidity of the military mind.

But at the end it is obvious that the system has worked and that the squad of trainees has been turned into a cohesive, efficient fighting unit. If the flag-waving of the final moment is ironically intended, the desired effect is likely to be lost on most audiences, who will probably react with traditional fervor.

If "Chips" is questionable as a protest drama, however, it is potently theatrical, primarily because of the appeal of the very things Wesker is purportedly condemning. The bellowed orders, the heel-stamping, the marching, the manual of arms, the bayonet practice and the whole rigmarole of the drill, climaxed by the raising of the colors, the playing of the anthem and the ceremonial parade, are all superbly done and should prove dramatically stirring.

John Dexter's staging is expertly vigorous and precise, and there are a number of striking performances, notably Alan Dobie as the terrifying drill corporal, Ronald Lacey as a sadsack trainee, and Corin Redgrave as the subtle, perceptive officer who sees through and thereby wins over the rebellious upper-class inductee.

There are also credible portrayals by Derek Fowlds and Frank Wylie as individual conscripts, Gary Bond as the young hero who's shown to be a natural leader by reason of birth, and Dallas Cavell and Robert Hewitt as pompous incompetents despite it. Jocelyn Herbert has designed a flexible arrangement of settings to represent various locales at an RAF base in England.

But it's good old martial pageantry that's the real star of "Chips with Everything." Hobe.

Let's not make an international incident of "Semi-Detached." Although it doesn't exactly enhance the glory of the English stage, it's not of earth-shaking importance—merely a poor play poorly done, and patently ill-chosen as an item for Anglo-American exchange.

The David Turner comedy, opening last Monday night (7) at the Music Box Theatre, is not to be confused with a similarly titled play by Patricia Joudry, done on Broadway in March, 1960. This new piece was originally produced by the Belgrade Theatre Co. of Coventry, England, and subsequently presented briefly in London with a different cast, including Laurence Olivier as star.

For the present engagement, David Black and Nicholas A. Strater and an eyebrow-raising array of managerial associates involving six lines of program billing, have imported the original Coventry cast to do "Semi-Detached" on Broadway. They ob-

A Funny Thing Happened On the Way to the Forum

London, Oct. 4.

Stars Frankie Howerd, Kenneth Connor, Jon Pertwee, Robertson Hare, Monsewer Eddie Gray; features Isla Blair, Linda Gray, John Rye, Leon Greene. Musical numbers: "Comedy Tonight," "Love, I Hear," "Free," "The House of Marcus Lycus," "Lovely," "Pretty Little Picture," "Everybody Ought to Have a Maid," "I'm Calm," "Impossible," "Bring Me My Bride," "That Dirty Old Man," "That'll Show Him," "Funeral Sequence and Dance."

Coming into town with the advantage of a built-in reputation on the strength of its Broadway success, and coupled with the offbeat casting of Frankie Howerd in the role originated in New York by Zero Mostell, gives "A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum" a runaway lead in the boxoffice stakes. It doesn't need a soothsayer to predict that this musical will be a smash.

This farcical musical romp is an uninhibited production, given pace, zest and vitality by George Abbott's slick and crafty direction. It's go-go-go all the time, with hardly a second's let up, as one outrageous situation chases another.

Under Abbott's guidance, it is played as broad farce, and Howerd (an inspired choice) is given his head and the opportunity to exploit all his best-known mannerisms and business. As the cunning slave who plots to win a virgin for his master and thus secure his own freedom, he uses every trick in the gag-book to extract the last ounce of comedy within the farcical framework.

Unusually for a musical of this calibre, the entire cast is of local origin, with other examples of unlikely casting paying off handsomely. Kenneth Connor's hysterium is a witty and even subtle interpretation, and he collects his full share of laughs when he masquerades as the young virgin.

Jon Pertwee is standout as Lycus, the flesh peddler, and Monsewer Eddie Gray, a one-time member of the Crazy Gang, is hilariously involved in the shenanigans as Senex, the respected citizen of Rome who casts a covetous eye on the young girl. Robertson Hare, a "refugee" from the famous Aldwych farces, is in his element as the father searching for his long-lost children, and the word "calamity," a stock comment from his Aldwych shows, is cunningly added to the text.

The romantic leads are played all too conventionally, with John Rye a colorless hero and Isla Blair an insipid heroine. Pulchritude, however, is handsomely looked after by the six courtesans from Pertwee's "house of shame"—Norma Dunbar, Christine Child, Marion Horton and Vyvyan Dunbar (as twins) Faye Craig and Sula Freeman. Miss Craig, incidentally, is a highly attractive colored lass who moves with exceptional grace.

Leon Greene is an impressive figure as the warrior who has the virgin signed up in a marriage contract, Linda Gray sustains the spirit of the show as Eddie Gray's domineering wife, and the cast is completed by Ben Aris, George Giles and Malcolm Macdonald as the Proteans.

The Burt Shevelove-Larry Gelbart book, derived from Plautus, succeeds admirably, and Stephen Sondheim contributes many offbeat comedy songs which dovetail neatly into the general pattern. From the opening number, "Comedy Tonight," to such others as "Everybody Ought To Have A Maid," "Pretty Little Picture," "Lovely" and the "Funereal Sequence and Dance" the tunes and lyrics are an integral part of the farcical nonsense being enacted onstage. There is not much in the way of production numbers, but the dance arrangements are adequately taken care of by Hal Schaefer, and George Martin has smoothly restaged the musical numbers. Tony Walton has designed a striking elegant set and nifty costumes. Myro.

Teenager Love

Stockholm, Sept. 22.

Oscars-Teatern presentation of a musical in two acts by Ernst Bruun Olsen, with music by Finn Savery. Staged by Ernst Bruun Olsen; sets and costumes, Helge Refn. Stars Jarl Kulle, Gertrud Fridh, Lars Ekborg, Margit Carlqvist. Opened Sept. 21, '63, at the Oscars Theatre, Stockholm; $16.00 top.

Danish musical "Teenager Love" opened last fall at the Royal Theare in Copenhagen. It broke boxoffice records there and was hailed as the most important work by a Scandinavian to appear in many years.

Several theatres in Scandinavia and Germany are planning productions, but this Stockholm edition is the first outside Copenhagen and the first at a commercial house.

"Teenager Love" is an attack on the entertainment industry on the ground that it feeds the masses opium and takes no interest in quality or honesty. It tends to be an anti-musical, with a literary emphasis. It combines seriousness with music and social protest, exposing the alleged phoniness, cruelty, crudeness and exaggerated sexuality which author Ernst Bruun Olsen sees as a symbol of modern society.

The story involves a 35-year-old pop-singer and teenage idol whose popularity is waning, and shows the ruthless plotting and treachery of the villainous hero and his associates, including a venal business tycoon. The tuner thus reflects the influence of such international musical drama hits as "Threepenny Opera" and "West Side Story."

"Teenager Love" lacks the movement, dancing, color and excitement that musical audiences usually demand. Moreover, Finn Savery's songs are not catchy, but fluctuate between sugary sentimentality and harsh dissonance. The show seems ill-suited to the commercial theatres of Broadway or the West End, but might do for off-Broadway or non-commercial situations. Its bluntness and bitterness have tended to shock Stockholm audiences. Fred.

Associated - Rediffusion Theatrical Productions is an offshoot of the London commercial television outfit which first entered the world of legit with the takeover of of the St. Martin's Theatre. "Power of Persuation" is its first outside presentation, and it seems a dubious starter, notwithstanding the names on the marquee.

The author, a young German now lecturing at Edinburgh Univ., treads familiar ground with this parable, and though he has written a number of radio plays, he appears to lack the knowhow to sustain his ideas into a full-length production. As a result, there is a flow of repetitive situations and an unreasonable amount of padding.

The three characters in the piece are a meek little town hall clerk who has held the same job for years, treated with contempt by his superiors and constantly passed over for promotion, his dull little frau and a burglar who makes his entrance via a drain-

Funny Thing Happened to 'Forum' In London: Near Unanimous Raves

London, Oct. 8.

Most of the London critics went all out in their reviews of "Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum," after its launching at the Strand Theatre last Thursday (3). There were only a few lukewarm reactions.

Bernard Levin, in the Daily Mail, came out categorically with the comment that it is the best musical since "Guys and Dolls."

He said the show is witty for most of the time, funny the rest of the time; speedy, vigorous and bursting with professionalism and panache all the time.

Herbert Kretzmer, the Daily Express reviewer, also had no doubts. "It's a big, booming hit," he opined. He called it a cheerfully chaotic musical, which appears to be a hit from its first number, when the show is no more than five minutes old. He rated the show "relentlessly inventive, lyrically literate."

David Nathan, in the Daily Herald, described it, "As bawdy as it is broad and as crude as it is coarse. But, for the most part, is great fun." He thought the worst lines are unspeakable and the best unprintable.

The two London tabloids, the Daily Mirror and the Daily Sketch were, however, lukewarm. Headlines to the two notices cashed in on the inevitable play on words. Arthur Thirkell's review in the Mirror was headlined "A Very Unfunny Thing Happened," while Fergus Cashin's Sketch comment carried the heading "A Very Funny Thing Didn't Happen." Latter rated the show as amusing, but not funny.

T. C. Worsley, in the Financial Times, prophesied that London will be laughing at Plautus for many months to come and he particularly kudosed Frankie Howerd's "masterly display of clowning." W. A. Darlington in the Telegraph described it as "a lively confection in which the poorest joke is the newest—the long and clumsy title."

Philip Hope-Wallace's review in The Guardian suggested that the show rested very happily on the

Yiddish Theatre Opens New Season This Week With Musical 'Brother'

Yiddish theatre activity in New York for the 1963-64 season gets rolling this month with three successive Saturday night openings. Next Saturday (12) will see the unveiling at the Roosevelt Yiddish Theatre of "Don't Worry Brother," a new Yiddish musical with book by Harry Kalmanowich, music by Meyer Ben Yehuda and lyrics by Gita Galina. Max Perlman doubles as star and director of the Hebrew Actors Union presentation in which Max and Rose Bozyk are featured. There'll be a preview Friday (11).

"My Wife with Conditions," a Yiddish-American musical with Leo Fuchs starred, is scheduled to open Oct. 19 at the Anderson Yiddish Theatre. Jacob Jacobs is producer of the tuner which has lyrics by him, book by William Siegel and music by Sholom Secunda. Fuchs is also stager of the offering in which featured assignments will be handled by Miriam Kressyn, Rebecca Richman, Seymour Rexscite, Thelma Mintz, Jacob Susanoff and the show's producer-lyricist. Previews are scheduled to begin next Monday (14).

Slated to bow Oct. 26 at the Educational Alliance Playhouse is a modern adaptation by Jack Rechtzeit of Leon Korbin's classic, "The Country Boy" ("Yankele Boyle"). The New Repertory Theatre group is producing the play under the sponsorship of the Hebrew Actors Union. Rechtzeit is also directing the production, which begins previews Oct. 19.

Another Yiddish drama is earmarked for a Nov. 19 debut by the Folksbiene stage group at its namesake theatre in Manhattan. The play, "The Sage of Rothenberg," by H. Leivick, will be directed by David Licht. Previews are to begin Nov. 10. The production will mark the start of the Folksbiene's 49th year of operation.

Enlist Bill Naughton To Redo 'Blitz' Book for U.S.

London, Oct. 8.

Bill Naughton has been signed by Arthur Lewis, head of Dorchester Productions, to do a rework on the book of Lionel Bart's musical "Blitz," which is aimed for Broadway presentation in the 1964-65 season. The author's recent credits include "All In Good Time" and "Alfie," both originally staged at the Mermaid and transferred to the West End, where the latter is still running.

Any revision of lyrics or music would be undertaken personally by Bart.

Roger L. Stevens Still Up To Here With B'way Plans

Roger L. Stevens hasn't left himself much time thus far this season for a between-production breather. The producer, whose seasonal output is normally heavy, appears to be outdoing himself. He has two plays opening on Broadway this week, one breaking in out-of-town and another in rehearsal. This is in addition to having already opened and closed two shows on Broadway since late August.

Debuting at the Morosco Theatre, N. Y., tonight (Wed.) is the double-bill of a "The Private Ear" and "The Public Eye," which he's presenting, by arrangement with H. M. Tennent Ltd. That'll be followed by the opening tomorrow night (Thurs.) at the Morosco Theatre, N. Y., of "A Case of Libel," coproduced by him and Joel Schenker.

"A Rainy Day in Newark," now trying out in Philadelphia under the Stevens banner, is slated to bow Oct. 22 at the Biltmore Theatre, N. Y. The preceding evening, Oct. 21, will mark the debut in San Francisco of "The Time of the Barracudas," which Stevens is coproducing with Frederick Brisson. A Dec. 2 opening at the ANTA Theatre, N. Y., is planned for that entry, now in rehearsal.

The producer is also represented on Broadway by the longrunning "Mary, Mary" and on the road by a bus-and-truck facsimile of the comedy, now in Los Angeles. Stevens is also coproducer of the major city touring production of "A Man for All Seasons," currently in Chicago and he shares in the presentation credits on the bus-and-truck edition of that play which began touring last week.

The two shows which already opened and closed on Broadway this season were "Bicycle Ride to Nevada" and "Oh Dad, Poor Dad, Mama's Hung You in the Closet and I'm Feelin' So Sad." The latter play, coproduced by Stevens, ended a six-week Main Stem engagement last Saturday (5) and is being presented this week at the Westport (Conn.) Country Playhouse. It was an off-Broadway click last season. "Bicycle,' produced by Stevens with Herman Shumlin, folded the week before last after only one performance.

Future Stevens projects include Enid Bangnold's "The Chinese Prime Minister,' in which Margaret Leighton is to star; Jean Kerr's "Poor Richard," Eleanor Harris and Helen McAvity's "The Mating Dance" and Saul Bellow's "Upper Depths."

Tennent Will Produce New Robert Bolt Play

London, Oct. 8.

Tennent Productions Ltd., is presenting Robert Bolt's new play, "Gentle Jack." Noel Willman, who staged the same author's "Man For All Seasons," will direct the new work.

"Gentle Jack" opens Nov. 27 at the Queen's Theatre, London, after a short tryout at Brighton. Edith Evans, Kenneth Williams and Michael Bryant head the cast.

'Cuckoo's Nest' Staff

The staff for "One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest" includes Harold Kussell, company manager; Walter Alford, pressagent; Del Hughes, production stage manager and Clifford Cothren and Peter Gumney, assistant stage manager.

Recent cast additions to the Kirk Douglas-starrer include Malcolm Atterbury, William Daniels, Gerlad S. O'Loughlin, Ed Ames, Gene Wilder, Rex Rubbins, Al Nesor and, in the lead femme assignment, Joan Tetzel.

See an Accord On ATPAM-Off-B'way

The Assn. of Theatrical Pressagents & Managers has stopped picketing off-Broadway productions. The union has also lifted the ban against its pressagent members accepting assignments with new off-Broadway presentations. These steps were taken by ATPAM when the League of off-Broadway Theatres and Producers agreed late last week to discuss a modified proposal for the employment off-Broadway of ATPAM company managers, in addition to pressagents.

The union had originally demanded that company managers be employed by off-Broadway productions at theatres with a potential gross of at least $2,500 weekly, with salaries graduating from $100 to $166, depending on a show's take. It's understood, members qualified individuals now performing off-Broadway company ATPAM is now willing to accept as union manager duties. They are to have apprentice-manager status on a salary of $75 a week.

Representatives of ATPAM and the league met last Monday (7) and the preceding Friday (4). A date for another meeting hadn't been set as of VARIETY's deadline yesterday (Tues.).

ANITA GILLETTE SHOW OPENING IN GLASGOW

London, Oct. 8.

"The Princess Pocahontas," a new musical by Kermit Goell, opens tonight (Tues.) at the Alhambra, Glasgow. It is expected to move into the West End in a couple of weeks, but the theatre cannot be specified since its current production is proving an obstinate runner.

The title role in the new show is played by Anita Gillette, making her debut in Britain, with Terence Cooper and Franklin Fox featured. The show is being presented by Stephen Mitchell and Michael Manuel, with the latter staging it and U.S.'s Nelle Fisher supervising the terping.

The show concerns the landing of English settlers in Jamestown and the problems they face.

Canada's Council Cuts Symbol, Legit Grants

Winnipeg, Oct. 8.

Although the Canada Council has made cuts totalling $40,000 in grants to orchestras and theatre groups across the country, local cultural outfits will not be affected. Both the Winnipeg Symphony and the Manitoba Theatre Centre confirmed that their grants for the 1963-64 season are to be the same as last year. The former received $30,000 and MTC $32,500 towards operating expenses.

The recent Council meeting in London, Ont., revealed that applications from five community orchestras and several theatre groups had to be turned down because of lack of further funds. The total Council budget for theatre and orchestras has been reduced to $233,000. It was suggested that to help the situation, people in local communities should assume the responsibility of executing pressure on local bodies to match the grants made by the Council.

Grants to theatres and orchestras in western Canada included the following: Vancouver Symphony Society, $30,000 for touring; Victoria Symphony Society, $7,000 toward operation: Calgary Philharmonic and Edmonton Symphony Societies, joint grant of $20,000; Regina Orchestral Society, $3,000; Saskatoon Symphony Orchestra, $3,000 for scholarship purposes, and Vancouver Theatre Centre, $8,000 for directors.

Wagner Calls 802-Managers Meeting In Move to Avoid B'way Legit Strike

Representatives of the League of N. Y. Theatres and Local 802, the American Federation of Musicians, have agreed, in response to telegrams from Mayor Robert F. Wagner, to meet in his office at 10 a.m. tomorrow (Thurs.).

Negotiations between Local 802 of the American Federation of Musicians and the League of N.Y. Theatres broke down last Monday (7). The confab was the fourth in a series of mediation sessions at the league's headquarters, and it failed to produce a settlement in the dispute between the musicians' Broadway producers and theatre owners. At the conclusion of the Monday meeting, which ran three hours, Alfred J. Manuti, president of the local, declared that the union would strike Broadway productions and tryouts in which its members are employed beginning next Monday (14) unless a better contract offer was forthcoming from the league.

Martin Tarshis, chief mediator for N.Y. City, declared, "We certainly are not going to let it drift into a strike if we can help it." It was also his intention, he said, to meet with Vincent D. McDonnell, executive secretary of the N.Y. State Board of Mediation, and Jules J. Manson, N.Y. district supervisor. Tarshis and the other two comprise the city-state mediating team in the dispute.

Gerald Schoenfeld, lawyer for the Shubert theatre organization, stated, as spokesman for the league, that the managerial body can not improve on its offer because of the rising cost of production, the real estate tax and the city's new occupancy tax (2% annual rentals under $2,500 and 5% on annual rentals which exceed $2,500). He said that in some instances the league has offered a three-year contract wage increase of more than $10 a week, as originally announced.

In the area of salary boosts offered, Schoenfeld referred to a hike in the road scale from the $213.20 now paid to $245 the first year of the contract and then $250 for the second and third years. Also proffered by the league, he said, was a salary increase for musicians in "contract houses" from $119.20 to $135. This applies to the four musicians employed by a contract house when a straight play is booked. The weekly minimum for tooters working in musicials on Broadway is $170 at a contract

Art Linkletter Enters Legit Project on Coast

Hollywood, Oct. 8.

Art Linkletter is expanding his activities to include legit. The television master of ceremonies and producer is investing in a $1,200,000 theatre in the rapidly developing San Fernando Valley area. He's partnering with Nick Mayo and Randolph Hale to the extent of five figures, he says.

The move is Linkletter's first and managerial venture in legit, although last season he appeared in eastern stock in "Father of the Bride." He reveals that his participation in the Valley project will essentially be in the area of securing stars and properties for presentation, but will also be on look-out for vehicles in which he might also star.

Linkletter also says that he figures the new theatre as an all-purpose structure which he could use for an audience-participation television show. Presumably on a financial basis the star's entry into the setup means that it's now assured of opening next summer as planned.

Alex Cohen Aims New Ticket Club For Next Season

London, Oct. 8.

Eight Broadway producers have already enlisted in Alexander H. Cohen's Producers League, Inc., and expects that when the club starts operating in 1964 every management will praticipate.

In London for the opening of the new Flanders and Swann show, "At the Drop of Another Hat," which he has already acquired for Broadway, Cohen explained to VARIETY the objectives of the new organization, first revealed in an advertisement in last week's issue. He sees his new organization as a successor to the existing theatre clubs, which he regards as primarily commercial rather than dedicated to the theatre.

He bases his attitude on 10 years' experience in packaging entertainment. Since then, he has been taking stock of the situation, particularly in relation to his own forthcoming presentations in New York which include Charles Boyer in a new Terence Rattigan play, "Man and Boy," Joshua Logan's staging of "Baker Street," and Richard Burton starring as "Hamlet" under John Gielgud's direction.

Cohen figures that the merchandising advantages could come from a combine of producers, cooperating in providing a service for ticket buyers. His new venture which will be on club lines, will follow the book-of-the-month pattern, offering such things as pretheatre dinners and after-theatre suppers. It could involve tieups with the N.Y. Restaurant Assn.

For the time being, the League will confine its activities to the Broadway territory, and will open its membership to the public next February, with the scheme getting into full swing by the time the fall season starts next year.

Cohen sums up the project, "We aim to do something more for the theatregoer than just intercept mail orders and collect a commission from the theatre and a fee from the customer.

Rockefeller Fund Gives $1,000,000 to D. C. Center

The Rockefeller Foundation has made a $1,000,000 grant to the National Cultural Center for the Performing Arts, which is to be established in Washington. In acknowledging the unconditional grant, Roger L. Stevens, chairman of the center's board of trustees, commented that more than 40% of the $30,000,000 needed for the project has been raised thus far.

The center will have a concert hall, an opera house and a theatre for legit.

Comedie-Francaise Has Eye on Small Theatre For Experimental Use

Paris, Oct. 8.

Maurice Escande, head of the state subsidized Comedie-Francaise, figures the group needs another smaller house to mount more contemporary works or more intimate ones that would be lost in the present site, the Salle Richilieu.

He explains that this desire has nothing to do with recent revelations that the other national theatres, the Odeon-Theatre De France and the Theatre National Populaire, will have smaller houses for more offbeat or specialized fare.

He thinks that, besides being the home of the classics, the C-F also has to do modern plays that may fit its scope and outlook. The nearby Palais Royal theatre would be just the thing for this, he says. It would also enable him to enlarge the size of his troupe which he regards as too small these days.

Meanwhile, escande has set the season for this house. It begins with a French version of Schiller's "Marie Stuart," which was already tried out on the road this summer. Then a new version of Corneille's "El Cid," followed by De Vigny's "Ready for Fear," a contemporary piece by Roger-Ferdinand "The Sentimental Fair" is next with another "Cyrano De Bergerac," of Edmond Rostand, also envisaged.

The season will end with Jean Cocteau's "Impromptu of Palais Royal" and a reprise of Jules Romain's "Donogoo."

Paris Has Slow-Starting Season, But Assorted Varieties and Hits

Paris, Oct. 8.

The 1963-64 legit season was a late starter in Paris. Instead of early September it did not go into full gear till the end of the month. Then it gave the public a mixture of items. None appear true hits, but low overheads and in some cases specialized appeal indicate fair runs for all.

Legit, like films, is faced with falling attendance, a dearth of true new talents and with too many theatres for an unpredictable audience. This may be why seasons fold earlier and start later the last few years. Also, it gives a bit more time for rehearsal, since there is no road, and breaks the majority of the newcomers during the Auto Salon, when hoards of visitors want to drive by night, for distraction, as well as by day.

Another of the season newcomers is a reprise of August Strindberg's "La Danse De Mort" ("The Dance of Death"), at the Theatre Lutece. Some of it is melodramatic but the bite and depth are still vivid and the play gets solid support from the playing of Michel Vitold and Jany Holt as the damned couple.

Another item is Marcel Cuvilier's adaptation of Goncharov's Russo novel, "Oblamov" at the Studio Des Champs-Elysees. Cuvilier also plays the title role of a man who is just too lazy to live. It manages to make this sated Slavic hero amusing in his attempts to avoid life.

Another entry is the perennial mounting of Alexandre Dumas' "The Lady of Camellias." The Sarah Bernhardt Theatre has a more realistic actress in the person of Loleh Bellon, but it is still mainly a weepie. It has its audiences and should have an okay specialized run.

Old pro playwright, Jacques Deval, adds the new element with his "Et L'Enfer, Isabelle?" (And Hell, Isabelle?") at the Comedie Des Champs-Elysees. It's about a woman accused of murder, and mixes too many elements and lags after a brisk beginning.

A flock of last year's entries have been brought back till new shows are ready, or to continue their successful showings of last season. At the Theatre Des Arts is a brash situation comedy about adultery, "Sur La Point Des Pieds" ("On Tip-toe"), did fairly well through the summer and then invited the critics to get clobbered for its lack of tone, invention and flair. But it may go on via word-of-mouth for out-of-towners and locals wanting oo-la-la comedy.

A reprise of Jean Genet's "Les Bonnes" ("The Maids") with an all-Negro cast is in for a limited run at the Oeuvre and a series of one-acters by the Community Theatre at the Montparnasse is also in for a few weeks. Both got okay reviews and should do adequately.

But in spite of the season's lateness there are big plans for a varied group of entries that range from more foreign plays than usual to works by oldtime regulars. Not many newcomers are slated so far. Besides the French rendition of the Yank hit tuner "How to Succeed in Business Without Really Trying," there will be a local tuner "Un Metier En Or" ("A Golden Profession"). Regulars are watching to see if these more modern musicals can break the jinx here where most are still in the operetta vein.

Britain, as it is on Broadway, will be well repped on the boards here this year. Coming up are "Rattle of a Simple Man," "Sergeant Musgrave's Dance," "The Potting Shed," Shakespeare's "The Tempest," "The Lady's Not for Burning" and Shaw's "You Never Can Tell."

The Yanks have, besides "Business," Arthur Kopit's "Oh Dad, Poor Dad, Mama's Hung You in the Closet and I'm Feelin' So Sad," Jean Kerr's "Mary, Mary" and Edward Albee's "The Zoo Story." Yves Montand returns in Herb Gardner's "A Thousand Clowns."

Andre Roussin, Francois Billetdoux and Francoise Sagen will be repped by new works, with Marcell Achard sticking to an operetta from the old turn-of-the-century melodrama by Eugene Sue, "The Mysteries of Paris." Oldtimer Tino Rossi makes a singing comeback in another academic-type musical "In the Time of Guitars."

Schildkraut to Direct, Lecture at Univ. of Cal.

Joseph Schildkraut, a Regents' lecturer and guest director this semester on the Davis campus of the Univ. of California, is staging "Peer Gynt" for an Oct. 24 opening, to run nine performances. The actor, who played the title role in the Ibsen play on Broadway in 1923, will deliver a lecture at the school tomorrow (Thurs.) on "My 50 Years in the Theatre."

Schildkraut's activities on the Davis campus are in line with the university's increased emphasis on dramatic art, which recently saw the establishment of a master's degree program in that field. Theodore J. Shank, chairman of the university's department of dramatic art and speech, has announced that one of the original buildings on the campus is being converted into an Elizabethan theatre for a Dec. opening of Shakespeare's "Richard II."

A humanities complex, also to be constructed on the campus, is to include facilities for the dramatic and speech department, as well as music and art. There's to be a 500-seat theatre, an arena theatre and two laboratory theatres.

'Tender' Folds In S. F. at 125G Loss

San Francisco, Oct. 8.

"The Tender Heel," which opened Sept. 30 at the Curran Theatre for a two-week pre-Broadway tryout, closed last Saturday (5) after only one week. Plans for Broadway have been dropped. The loss on the project is figured to be over $125,000.

The play, produced and directed by Miranda d'Ancona from a script by Joel Hammil, featured Chester Morris, Signe Hasso and Kay Medford, in a story of Greek fishermen on the Florida Gulf Coast. Critics on all four major Bay Area dailies roasted it as an unfortunate blend of farce, comedy, fantasy and tragedy that failed to achieve a dramatic unity — although most were complimentary about most of the performances.

"Tender Heel" had been scheduled to open Oct. 21 at the Lyceum, N.Y.

Shed Production Lineup For New Orleans Opera

New Orleans, Oct. 8.

The talent roster and repertory for the 1963-64 season of the New Orleans Opera House Assn., opening Thursday (10) has been schedule by Renato Cellini, general director and conductor.

The season launcher will be "Romeo and Juliet," with Gianna D'Angelo, Chester Ludgin, Nicola Moscona, Raymond Michalski, Harry Theard and Richard Verreau, Thursday and Saturday (12). Thereafter, the list offers "La Boheme," with Audrey Schuh, Mary Jennings, Herbert Beattie, Giuseppe Campora, Richard Torigi and Richard Wentworth, Oct. 24 and 26.

Dale Wasserman Meets Himself Comin' 'n' Goin' In Legit, Films and TV

By JESSE GROSS

Dale Wasserman, whose dramatization of "One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest" went into rehearsal last week for a Nov. 14 opening at the Cort Theatre, N. Y., doesn't care which entertainment medium he writes for as long as he's interested in what he's doing. This is evident in the multiplicity of his activities which involve another legit venture, as well as scripts for film and television.

Besides the "Nest" adaptation, Wasserman is also the author of the book for "Man of LaMancha," a musical for which Michael Redgrave is being sought as star. Present plans call for the tuner to be produced next summer in London, prior to Broadway. Any arrangements, though, will depend on whether or not Redgrave agrees to headline. The tuner derives from Wasserman's 1959 television script, "I, Don Quixote."

Around the middle of this month, Wasserman is to be represented on NBC-TV's "The Richard Boone Show" as author of a play titled, "Stranger." His "The Man in the Wood" is another entry earmarked for a Boone outing later this season. In the area of films, he wrote the scenario for "The Sea and the Shadow," an art picture slated for release during the next few months by Charles Guggenheim Associates.

His involvement in pictures has expanded with his recent formation in partnership with director Delbert Mann and producer Douglas Lawrence, of a Metro unit called New Dimension Inc. The firm, which independently selects its own projects for production with Metro backing, plans as its first venture a filmization of Philip Benjamin's book, "Quick Before It Melts," to be published next February by Random House. Benjamin is a reporter for the N. Y. Times.

Wasserman is doing the "Melts" screenplay, which is due by the end of this year. The film, he says, is budgeted at $3,000,000. Another New Dimensions project is Leslie Waller's "The Banker." Metro, according to Wasserman, has first option on any New Dimensions project with the deal running to six pictures.

Wasserman is immediately involved with "Nest," which is based on a novel written by Ken Kesey. Kirk Douglas has the starring assignment in the presentation, which David Merrick and Edward Lewis are producing in association with Seven Arts. A film version of the play, capitalized at $175,000, is made by Seven Arts in conjection with Douglas' own producing company. The legit presentation, in which Joan Tetzel has the lead femme role, is scheduled to begin a pre-Broadway tryout Oct. 24 at the Shubert Theatre, New Haven.

"La Manche," to be produced as a legittuner by Music Makers, a firm which provides background music for commercials, has lyrics by W. H. Auden and Chester Kallman and music by Mitchell Leigh. Wasserman originally rewrote his "Don Quixote" tv script as a straight drama for Broadway presentation by Philip Rose, but the latter dropped his option last season.

The vehicle was then optioned by Music Makers and worked over as a tuner. At Music Makers, financial matters are supervised by the firm's president, Milton Herson, and creative policies are handled by legit stager Albert Marre.

Stratford (Ont.) Shakespeare Fest Had Best Season, $1,000,000 Gross

The Stratford (Ont.) Shakespearean Festival grossed an estimated $1,000,000 on its recently-concluded legit and music seasons. Legit accounted for approximately $817,000, while the tally on ticket sales for the musical offerings was around $183,000. The figures are subject to change, depending on the results of an audit due this month.

The legit income includes revenue for 123 performances over a 15-week period, June 17-Sept. 28, of four plays—"Troilus and Cressida," "The Comedy of Errors," "Cyrano de Bergerac" and "Timon of Athens." The six-week music season July 7-Aug. 17, included 45 performance of "The Mikado" in the Avon Theatre, as well as nine afternoon concerts and five Saturday morning Chamber music concerts in the Festival Theatre where the legit entries were also presented.

The season, the 11th for the festival, was termed by Stratford administrative director Victor C. Polley as the most successful in terms of attendance and gross revenue. Of the four plays, "Errors" was the most popular, playing to 92% capacity. "Cyrano," presented for the second consecutive year, registered 89% capacity, "Timon" 84% and "Troilus" 72%. The total attendance for the four was 236,000.

"The Mikado" ran for 45 performances and played to 87% capacity with 45,000 admission. The turnout for nine afternoon concerts was 15,650, equal to 74% capacity. Attendance for the five Saturday morning Chamber music concerts was 25% capacity.

Next season's festival schedule will be split between Shakespeare's "Richard II" and "King Lear," Moliere's "Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme" and William Wycherley's "The Country Wife." The Shakespeare and Moliere play will be performed June 15, 16 and 17 and the Wycherley comedy will join the repertory July 27. Michael Langham, the festival's artistic director, will direct "Country Wife." Jean Gascon, who staged this year's production of "Errors," will direct "Gentilhomme." Stagers haven't been set yet for the two Shakespearean plays.

Gascon, co-founder and artistic director of Montreal's Le Theatre du Nouveau Monde and executive director of Canada's National Theatre School, has been appointed associate director of the festival, with a voice in policy matters. The Moliere play, under his direction, will be presented first by the festival next April at Chichester, Eng., along with "Timon of Athens" and "Love's Labour's Lost." The three plays, representing the festival's participation in Britain in the 400th anniversary celebration of Shakespeare's birth, will be presented in Chichester, April 6-25.

Shakespeare's birthday, April 23, will be celebrated in Chichester with a performance of "Labour's," wich Langham will direct. He'll also stage "Timon." Anent, the program to be presented by the festival next summer in Ontario, the presentation of "Richard II" will mark the beginning of a five-year plan to present the full cycle of Shakespeare's histories in chronological order through the two parts of "Henry IV," "Henry V," the three parts of "Henry VI" and "Richard III."

The festival season next year will be extended from 15 to 16 weeks with the extra stanza to be devoted to student matinees, making a total of three weeks for student performances instead of the usual two.

Cleve. Biz Firms Offer Concert-Insurance Tie

Cleveland, Oct. 8.

Cleveland has been tapped to open a unique concert-insurance package program called Arts-Cross Great Entertainment Series. For a series price of $4.65 each patron receives a year's life insurance through his company, valued at $1,000 in accidental death benefits, plus a ticket to Severance Hall to see such performances as the Koutev Bulgarian National Folk Ensemble; Whittemore and Lowe, duo-pianist; New York City Opera; Doris Yarick, soprano, and the Cleveland Orchestra.

The plan, intended to spread entertainment to a wide public and give tangible support to the Cleveland Orchestra, has already been subscribed to by Ohio Bell Telephone Co., May Co., White Motor Co., Thompson Ramo Wooldridge, etc. A similar effort is planned in Washington, D.C., where the National Symphony is considering a November opening date for the insurance-culture idea.

Hartford to Get New Stock Group

Hartford, Oct. 8.

Practically dry of legit since 1954, this city is soon to get its own producing firm. Hartford Stage Co., has been organized to run a 26-week season, starting in October and ending in early May.

The company is to comprise eight Equity members, plus local non-Equity actors and about 10 in various technical fields as direction, technicians, production assistant and managerial.

HSC will operate as a stock group, with a schedule of 13 plays, each running for two weeks. The plan is spark-plugged by Jacques Chartier, Yale Drama School alumnus and recently on drama faculty of Smith College. A vacant store in downtown Hartford has been rented for use as a theatre. It will seat 225.

Others affiliated with Chartier in the venture are Jack Dollard, local architect, who will design the theatre, Robert Basine, an attorney, and Joel Oliansky, playwright-in-residence at Yale.

The last permanent legit operation here was the New Parsons, which lasted three years, folding in 1964. It operated under the banner of Philip Langner, Charles Bowden and Naney Stern. The town has only one theatre for touring legit, the 3,000-seat accoustically faulty Bushnell Auditorium.

B'way Up; 'Here's Love' 48G, (6), 'Luther' $46,284, 'Student' $21,658, 'Chips' $21,375, 'Spoon River' $11,694

Broadway rebounded last week, with receipts climbing as much as $13,199 for "A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum." Increased business for "Never Too Late" pushed the comedy back into the capacity groove with "How to Succeed in Business Without Really Trying." Of last week's four newcomers, the only one to make a strong start was "Here's Love." Business for "Spoon River" was particularly dismal in view of the fine notices.

There was one closing last week, "Oh Dad, Poor Dad," and one layoff, "Tovarich," which resumed Monday night (7). This week's debut list includes "Semi-Detached," which opened Monday night, plus the double-bill of "The Private Ear" and "The Public Eye," bowing tonight (Wed.), and "A Case of Libel," due tomorrow night (Thurs.).

The announcement, detailed elsewhere in this issue, that the musicians' union intends striking Broadway productions starting next Monday (14) may hurt advance sales.

Semi-Detached

trained Actors Equity approval for admission of the alien troupe under a quid pro quo arrangement involving a promised English engagement for the Assn. of Producing Artists, an American touring repertory group.

"Semi-Detached" is an unfunny concoction about a wildly greedy, busily scheming, utterly amoral, aggressively respectable middle-class family in an English midlands industrial town. The principal character, the conniving, corrosively selfish father, is at least a distant relative of Aubrey Piper, the exuberantly extrovert hero of the old George Kelly comedy, "The Show Off."

The style of writing, including caricature characters, as well as the staging and acting, are approximately the same vintage—that is, 40-odd years old. Incidentally, the director, Anthony Richardson, is not to be confused with the better-known Britisher stager of "Luther" and other plays, Tony Richardson.

A number of first-nighters, presumably not having reviews to write, felt free to leave at the first or second intermissions. Hobe.

'Barracuda' Who's Who

Victor Samrock and Lyn Austin are associate producers, Peggy Phillips is presstagent, George Oshrin company manager, Fred Hebert production stage manager and Charles Forsythe stage manager for the Frederick Brisson-Roger L. Stevens production of "The Time for the Barracuda," opening a pre-Broadway tryout Oct. 21 at the Curran Theatre, San Francisco.

Laurence Harvey and Elaine Stritch head the cast, which is being directed by Anthony Page.

Puppet Review

Obratsov Puppets

Sol Hurok presentation of Sergei Obratsov company of puppeteers from Moscow. Settings, Valentin Andreivich & Vera Terekhova; text for emcee, Alexander Bondi; text for acts, Zinovy Gerdt; special music, Grigory Teplitsky; orchestra conducted by Arthur Lief. Opened Oct. 2, '63, at the Broadway Theatre, N. Y.; $7.95 top ($15 opening).

Confident comment respecting Russian puppet-master Sergei Obratsov: he is far out front in his field. The show he has brought to New York (only) for eight weeks is continuously delightful, seldom lagging, surprisingly witty, always technically astonishing and never, as with a recent company here, descending to sex-leer.

Obratsov uses a technique of his own, sans exterior wires. His figures are manipulated by a crew of 11 from below, using hands, sticks and interior mechanisms. To mask in simulated theatre, stands are relatviely high and upstage. Those in the rear of the Broadway can often use opera glasses for best appreciation of some of the subtle details and byplay.

The foregoing suggests (1) that on sheer entertainment merit the engagement should be successful, but (2) there are practical difficulties in handling the considerable intricacies of the operation. For example, the balcony cannot be sold at all, since seats there would command a view of the interior workings and destroy the illusion. And this is supremely a medium of simulated effect. The whole art lies in creating a sense of delightful caricature of actual theatrical performance.

The setting is an ornate concert hall with apron, proscenium, drapes, miniature lights. The acts are introduced by an emcee who makes many a droll remark in the apparently-memorized English of Obratsov himself. The emcee has various wry exchanges with two puppet stagehands whose task is to move the grand piano on and off as required. Once he quips, "Liquidate the piano."

The program notes, interestingly, credit the unseen puppeteers manipulating each turn. The satire is universal, easily comprehended, often very "knowing." There is a neck-stretching coloratura, a conductor whose mop of hair drowns his face when he takes a bow, a slinky tango dancer, an array of assorted eccentrics, including mad gypsies, a wild beast tamer, and so on.

A mere description of the components hardly suggests the marvelous coordination of puppets, costumes, sound, music and running patter. Obratsov is clearly a consummate showman with a highly "theatrical" brand of humor. There is no doubt that he established a rare rapport with the opening night audience partly by appearing, wiith a woman translator, before the show began and charming one and all.

Great and special preparation to play New York was seemingly made. How much help may have been provided by Hurok himself or the American conductor Arthur Lief (never seen) is unclear. The significant fact is that here is the first instance of a Soviet Russian entertainer personalizing himself in speech, and in quite intelligible English, directly to an audience.

Of course, he is behind scenes most of the time, speaking through the emcee puppet. But seen or unseen, Obstratsov is ingratiating indeed. He is also slyly disarming as when he makes reference deadpan to the next number celebrating better East-West relations. Whereupon the tune is our own Mamie O'Rourke's east side-west side—all around the town.

There is slapstock aplenty, but Obratsov is a million light-years beyond the sadism of Punch and Judy. He is always good-natured, however vivid his sense of the ridiculous in human nature.

The puppets are quite large, as puppets run. One scene has 60 figures singing a capella, and the illusion is created of all mouthing the words, a chant on the urgency of taking your vitamin pills regularly. Unexpected touches and tangents help vary the pace, as the dog forgetting the act and chasing a chicken, or the emcee coming back in nervous haste from the wings to investigate the sound of a magician pouring wine slowly into a pot. That was a delayed audience roar.

The opening night top of $15 and the regular top of $7.95 is a calculated decision of the Hurok management. With no balcony seats, the ground floor must pay the whole freight. And with New York the only date, the payoff may be in some doubt. But everybody is certain to feel justified pride that the booking was made and this master-showman has been made available to New Yorkers.

house and $213.20 in a non-contract house.

Schoenfeld, who asserted that the league would be available for further mediation sessions, summed up the managerial body's attitude, "Considered against the background of economic conditions during the period of the present contract, we feel that this new contract is an acceptable one. We have offered a fair contract and have taken into consideration the unique working times and conditions. We feel it is an acceptable contract, and we regret its non-acceptance."

According to Manuti, strike strategy is still to be decided by the union as to whether one show would be singled out at first or all musicals would be hit simultaneously. There have been indications that regardless of the number of shows struck, all presentations will close, as occurred in 1960 when action by Actors Equity against "The Tenth Man" led to Broadway blackout. However, some producers have expressed concern over the legal implications such a shutdown might involve.

Unresolved issues, Manuti says, include the basic wage increase, fringe benefits such as a major medical plan and sick leave, increased pay for rehearsal pianists and compensation for pit musicians in shows that are filmed, taped or televised.

A three-year contract between the league and the local expired last Labor Day, but was extended to Sept. 15. The league's offer at that time was presented to the membership at a meeting in New York and was rejected, with an accompanying strike recommendation, by a vote of 166-156. That 10-vote margin was subsequently raised to 20 when returns from musicians working out-of-town in Broadway-bound musicals brought the count to 184-164.

Symph Walkout in D.C.

Washington, Oct. 8.

The National Symphony Orchestra had to cancel the opening concert of its 34th season last night (Mon.) because of a musicians' strike. Members of the orchestra walked out Friday (4) for the first time, following a breakdown in negotiations for a new contract the preceding Wednesday (2).

Talks reached an impasse when the District of Columbia Federation of Musicians refused the management's offer of a $16.25 basic pay increase over the next three years. The 94 tooters failed to show up for the first rehearsal of the season Friday at Constitution Hall and the cancellation of last night's concert, which was to have been for the American Bankers Assn., necessitated the return of $5,000 to the organization.

broad back of Frankie Howerd "but the note struck loudly is not burlesque in the American sense, but rather of Christmas pantomime for the not-so-innocent." The Times review was less enthusiastic, and its critic (unnamed, as always) felt the show needs a good deal more bite than "this innocuous piece of expense-account commedia dell'arte."

The two London evenings joined in the overall chorus of praise. Milton Shulman, in the Evening Standard, called the show hilarious and described Frankie Howerd as deliciously funny while Felix Berker, in the Evening News, predicted that the musical will enjoy a Roman triumph in Londinium.

Inside Stuff—Legit

Although George Abbott is billed as director of the West End production of "Never Too Late," and was so-credited in the London reviews, he did not personally do the staging. His daughter, Judith Abbott, actually directed the British edition of the Sumner Arthur Long farce, repeating his staging of the original Broadway version. She also did the actual staging when the play was done last spring in Palm Beach, as a sort of tryout for London, with Joan Bennett and Fred Clark in the same leading roles they're doing in London, and which Maureen O'Sullivan and Paul Ford are playing on Broadway and Nancy Carroll and William Bendix are portraying on tour.

Abbott could hardly have done the actual staging of the London edition of "Never Too Late," as was occupied with the direction of the West End version of "A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum, which he also did in its original Broadway production. It was presumably advantageous for the management to bill Abbott as directing "Never Too Late" in London, since he has an international reputation as a stager, and perhaps also for contractual reasons. Moreover, Miss Abbott's direction was a copy of her father's and was subject to his supervision. But it was she who was in actual charge of rehearsals, not only in London but for the play's previous engagement in Palm Beach.

with her experiences as dramatist and theatre participant, but also with her work as fictioneer and war correspondent. As might be expected, her tome is packed with anecdotes concerning the great of stage and screen, and with memories of her celebrated dramatic collaborators, George S. Kaufman and Marc Connelly. Miss Ferber is in somewhat mellower mood than when she wrote her earlier autobiographical tome, "A Peculiar Treasure," which brought her to 1939. The sting of her pen is in evidence on occasion, however, usually directed against injustice, intolerance and sloth. She writes with deep love of the American scene and the people close to the land which has figured so tellingly in her novels, stories and plays. There is a delightful passage in which the writer confesses to her long, secret desire to be an actress. Given the chance, she found it a complete bore to have to speak the same lines over and over, and happily, for readers, returned to her typewriter.

Rose Franken's recollections of her drama, "Another Language," which was also done as a film, and her "Claudia" novels, which were melded into a play and then shown upon the screen, serve as principal theatrical touchstones of her book. Of her other plays, "Outrageous Fortune" and "Soldier's Wife," are best remembered. Her views of stage and films are slickly-written, but author seems mainly concerned with reporting her financial successes. Since her greatest rewards have come from fiction rather than from entertainment media, show biz readers may grow restive when Miss Franken forsakes their field to report high living, family life and sundry incidents.

Jean Dalrymple, indefatigable impresario of the N.Y. City Center (among myriad achievements), offers the story of a career built largely upon paying actors Equity minimum salaries to appear in major attractions. That she has personally made City Center something more than "the bargain basement of the arts" is to her credit. That anyone might have opposed her, should anyone have been foolish enough to try, is not to be believed after reading the vital outraight of her prose.

An adversary would stand a better chance in a nuclear explosion.

From her familiar haunts in the old Mecca Temple, Miss Dalrymple now moves into the scene of national and international cultural relations, and this may well provide another account of service to the arts from one who is anything but the "Child" her title implies.

for 18 years, creating a number of hits, including "Syracuse." Upon Hart's death, Rodgers teamed with Oscar Hammerstein 2d, turning out such smashes as "Oklahoma," "Carousel," "South Pacific," "The King and I," "Flower Drum Song" and "The Sound of Music." Since Hammerstein's death he has written only one show, doing the music and for the first time the lyrics of the click "No Strings."

Bart's outstanding hit is the current Broadway-from-London musical, "Oliver," for which he provided the book (based on the Charles Dickens classic, "Oliver Twist") and the music and lyrics. He also supplied all three elements in the recent West End success, "Blitz." It's assumed that Bart will do the book and possibly the lyrics and that Rodgers will provide the score for the new show they've contemplating together.

Alan Schneider will guest-direct "The Glass Menagerie" for presentation next year at the Tyrone Guthrie Theatre, Minneapolis.

pipe through the sitting room window. The couple, at first terrified, gradually react to the criminal's thesis that a new order can only be brought about by a reign of terror, and by the time he holds out the promise that the clerk will be the next burgomaster, the transformation is complete.

Stripped of its trimmings and its farcical treatment, this is little more than a contrived apologia for the Nazi techniques and triumphs, but brings nothing new to the subject and, in any event, has been more skillfully done by other

The most rewarding feature of the production is the fine acting by the three stars. John Mills, barely recognizable, strikingly conveys the transition from timid clerk to would-be fuhrer, and the closing scene in which he dons the criminal's uniform to underline the change in personality, is a memorable piece of acting.

Anthony Quayle, in the more colorful role, makes the thug a vivid character, and Joyce Redman plays the wife with consummate skill. None of the three is a real person, however, just pawns in the hands of the playwright.

In sharing the directorial credit, the two male stars have played fair with each other, fairly sharing the acting honors. Myro.

The Lover and The Dwarfs

London, Sept. 19.

Michael Codron presentation of two one-act dramas by Harold Pinter, staged by the author. Assistant director, Guy Vaesen; decor and lighting, Brian Currah. Stars Vivien Merchant, Scott Forbes, John Hurt, Michael Forrest, Philip Bond. Opened Sept. 18, '63, at the Arts Theatre Club, London; $2.50 top.

THE LOVER

Sarah ..... Vivien Merchant
Richard ..... Scott Forbes
John ..... Michael Forrest

THE DWARFS

Len ..... John Hurt
Mark ..... Michael Forrest
Pete ..... Philip Bond

Harold Pinter, widely regarded as one of the more literate, but irritatingly baffling of the new school of British playwrights, has come up with a double bill of bewildering contrast. One is a sick comedy, the other a weirdly enigmatic dramatic exercise. It is doubtful whether even the author's loyal and growing band of admirers will give sufficient encouragement for this program to transfer to a regular West End situation.

Of the two one-actors, "The Lover," by Pinteresque standards particularly, is comparatively easy to follow. It starts off with the husband, bidding his wife goodbye in the morning, and casually asking, "Is your lover coming this afternoon?" As the clock chimes three, there is a knock on the front door, and in walks the lover, who turns out to be the husband dressed in less formal clothes.

This charade, which illustrates the need of some married couples for sexual titillation, is developed with crafty skill by the author in simple, telling challenge, and with the long, deliberate and pregnant pauses which have become a trademark of his work. And it is given a dramatic lift by the telling performance of Vivien Merchant (Mrs. Pinter), whose transformation from restrained housewife to uninhibited mistress, is startling. Scott Forbes also does an excellent job as husband and lover, though the role does not offer the same flamboyant opportunities.

As for "The Dwarfs," that's anybody's guess. Its style is vastly different, and the author reverts to his old trick of repetitive dialog which, this time out, only proves to be irritating. There are also long monologs in which John Hurt describes the influence on his mode of life of a gang of dwarfs (dressed in raincoats) lurking at the bottom of his garden.

The dialog between Hurt and his two companions has something of a poetic quality, though it never appears to come to a point. The three stars, Hurt, Michael Forrest and Philip Bond deliver their lines with creditable conviction.

Both pieces are staged by the author, and apart from an apparent unnecessary red herring in the first (was it necessary for the milkman to call just as the lover was expected?), displays a sensitive touch in "The Lovers," and has succeeded in creating an atmosphere of dramatic intensity in "The Dwarfs." Myro.

Behan Bein' Behan

London, Sept. 24.

Bruce Dunnet, by arrangement with Harold Fielding, presentation of a revue in two parts (17 scenes) by Dominic Behan, James McLean, Vic Jones, Charles Marowitz, Sidney Carter. Staged by Charles Marowitz. Features Dominic Behan, Alex Campbell, Nadia Cattous, Nigel Denver, The Haverim, Ian McCann. Opened Sept. 23, '63, at the Prince Charles Theatre, London; $3 top.

What gets by as a fringe entertainment at the Edinburgh festival won't necessarily do for the West End. That particularly applies to this presentation, self-consciously described as a "concert of contemporary irreverence," but little more than a mild attempt to cash in on the current satirical wave. It will probably be tough going for the show to sustain its limited four weeks season at this small theatre.

The quality of the production may be gauged by the fact that the slickest thing is the title. Dominic Behan's conception of satire apparently is to take swipes at religion, the Establishment and royalty. They may all be fair game, but considerably more wit and perception is demanded if the satire is to make its point and hit its target. There are mainly misses in this one.

Behan, a brother of Brendan, does not have much of a voice, but that would not have mattered overly if his material had been better. His delivery is only fair, though he shows style as a raconteur. Two Glaswegian singers, Alex Campbell and Nigel Denver, show more promise, particularly the latter's "Ghost Tigers in the Sky," which takes a pot shot at Prince Philip's recent safari.

Two Jewish folk singers, billed as The Haverim, have a pleasant line in Yiddish and Cockney songs, but the most polished performer is Nadia Cattouse, who comes from British Honduras and makes quite an impression with a number at the expense of tv commercials. Myro.

'Max Gordon Presents' a Worthy Addition to Show Biz Archives

By ABEL GREEN

The showman-autobiographer of "Max Gordon Presents" (Bernard Geis Associates; $4.95) (written in collaboration with N.Y. Times drama editor Lewis Funke) concludes with a chapter titled "They Remember Me!" •••

He has also given show biz archives a good book. •••

His show biz credits in "Max Gordon Presents" reads like a who's who of Equity, ASCAP and the Dramatists Guild out of the Rockefellers, Bernard Baruch, General Sarnoff, Bill Paley, Frank Stanton et al. •••

Gordon and Funke have written one good manuscript in "Max Gordon Presents," a panorama of glamour and worthwhile theatre, generous friends and erratic talents (but talents they were and are) which takes its place with Moss Hart's "Act I" and kindred tiptop tales of the one Main Street that really counts in the passing show of a showman's life.

An International Institution

The New York Times, Monday, September 16, 1963.

Paul Anka Is Back in Paris Sans le Rock 'n' Roll

By PETER GROSE
Special to The New York Times

PARIS, Sept. 15 — The young man who brought American rock 'n'roll to France five years ago is back in Paris. It was a gentler and more mature Paul Anka who opened to a packed house at the Olympia Music Hall last week.

France's own new stars in the rock'n'roll firmament filled the front row as curious as the critics to see whether the Canadian singer could go from teen-age idol to enduring performer.

In 1958, his theme song was the wailful "Diana," which sold more than 5,000,000 records. Now he walks onstage to the march from the movie "The Longest Day." He composed both himself.

Some welcomed the change in Mr. Anka. The serious newspaper Le Monde called him the Mozart of rock'n'roll.

Claude Sarraute, its critic, spoke of "his composing talent, his polite sentimentality" and added: "He has settled in to tame respectability. His place now is in musical comedy and the films."

"His interest now is in singing well, far from the whimperings of his first successes," wrote Le Figaro.

Opening night Thursday was nevertheless accompanied by all the frenzy for a matinee idol. Six busloads of police were dispatched to the Olympia, on the Boulevard des Capucines, to turn away 3,000 fans without first-night invitations.

Six young people were caught on the roof of the music hall trying to sneak in. A rooftop chimney was knocked crashing into the adjoining street.

Mr. Anka was barely 16 years old when he first appeared here, bringing the singing vogue that had been known only from American records. Since then local idols have been raised, chief among them the rugged Johnny Halliday, who was mobbed by photographers and autograph seekers as he took his seat on opening night.

From the moment the short and stocky Mr. Anka strolled onto the stage it was clear that he was bringing a new singing style or reverting to a pre-Presley one.

"He demonstrated that one can sing rhythmically without having convulsions on the floor," wrote the critic for Agence France-Presse.

France-Soir commended Mr. Anka as "a good lesson for our own new stylists: ease charm, youthful friendliness, overflowing sympathy and, above all, a voice."

Anka Tops Olympia Bill

By THOMAS QUINN CURTISS

PARIS, Sept. 17—The Parisian theatrical season has rung up its curtain with the reopening of the Olympia Music-Hall.

The occasion was—as the coming theatrical session promises to be—an international one. The program's star and main attraction is the Canadian crooner-composer Paul Anka.

Paul Anka requires no introduction. His records and his personal appearances have made him world-famous. He has been a Parisian favorite since he first sang here five years ago. He was startlingly good then—at 17—and he is even better now.

There are few performers in active practice these days who have anything approaching his stage presence. He walks on and the audience is his at once. His brash assurance works as magic, for he never seems to doubt his ability to control.

In his exuberance to perform he has something of Al Jolson who, in self-confidence, used to send the rest of the company home and entertain alone. "Sit back and enjoy yourself," shouts Anka as a greeting, a daring order from anyone. But he makes good his boast. The command is obeyed. He shatters the house with his "rocking" and then draws the audience into a resounding sing-along.

He sings with hearty appreciation of his profession and of the girls of Paris and ends with the stirring march he wrote for the film "The Longest Day," delivering it with enough parade steps and salutes to honor all the Allied generals of the war. This Anka has the conquering power. He is a show in himself.

RE: RELUCTANT RACE REFORM

Verdi a la Katharine Dunham Offbeat Met Op Debut; $101,108 One-Nite Gross

By ROBERT J. LANDRY

Verdi's venerable "Aida" almost defies change but choreographer Katharine Dunham did what she could opening night (Mon.) at the Met. She introduced into Egypt a 'Cairo-bean' motif of fertility rite simply by turning the captured Ethiopians into Haitians. Otherwise, for the time being at least, this is still the one and only Met, dispensing grand opera at the old stand. Soon there will be a new home, a new (second) constantly touring company and, one may guess, $100 opening nights at Lincoln Center. Suffice that at the present $50 admission the Met gathered $101,108 on the 1963 premiere, again a new record one-night gross. Thus begins the 79th season. It was the 474th Met presentation of "Aida," the alltime fave work of the repertory.

Unchallenged as the dressiest of all Manhattan opening nights, the only place where critics may be viewed in tails, this was the earliest-ever (Oct. 14) Met premiere and it fell in Indian summer with Sherry's and the always-packed foyers rather warm. General manager Rudolf Bing, quick with the hot coffee on cold days, resisted

BBC Still Hopeful On '64 Tokyo Olympics Pickup Via Satellite

London, Oct. 15.

Simultaneous television reporting of the 1964 Olympic sports from Tokyo to Britain via satellites is still on the cards, according to Hugh Carleton Greene, director-general of the BBC.

If it could be accomplished it would have to be on a limited scale, say just a few minutes a day, Carleton Greene explained. And they would have to use at least two satellites, one on the West Coast of America taking the transmission from Japan, which, in turn, would bounce the picture to another which would then beam it to Europe.

It was just over two years ago that the BBC's d.g. indicated to VARIETY that such a project was being studied by technical experts. His statement, at the time, was made before the launching of Telstar, when simultaneous broadcasting across the Atlantic was still a tv scientist's dream. His suggestion in 1961 was pooh-poohed in many quarters, but now the breakthrough has been accomplished, it is being more seriously regarded.

It will be some months, however, before BBC technical experts will be able to say possitively whether the direct-from-Tokyo transmissions can be achieved in time for the Olympics.

Cinematic Pigmentation

Hollywood, Oct. 15.

Now it's not a matter of Negro actors trying to wangle a job on the screen, but how dark they are!

Actress Mittie Lawrence, appearing on Paul Coates' KTTV show last week, said with a smile: "As dark as I am, casting directors have said to me recently, 'We want someone a lot darker for the role'!"

All-Night Films At London Fest Sellout Pronto

London, Oct. 15.

Two all-night sessions during the London Film Festival were SRO just a few hours after the boxoffice opened last week. The first will be on Friday (18) and the second a week later.

The program for these all-night jamborees will include four features plus accompanying shorts. There will be a break half way through the program for refreshments, including hot soup, provided by the management for an all-inclusive admission charge.

Some of the tab buyers for the midnight-to-morning screenings have also bought tickets for the preceding afternoon and evening shows, thus facing a continuous diet of six pix in a row.

W. GERMANY'S NEWEST NOVELTY: ROBOT ORCH

Hannover, Oct. 15.

Latest musical gimmick to pop up in a night locale here is—a robot music orchestra.

Three life-sized mechanical monsters pour out every kind of music from the Twist to classics, with complete action to accompany the tune—the trumpeter or the saxophonist stand up to their solos, and the three figures have a "range" of seven instruments.

The robot orchestra, invention of a Dutch engineer, operates electrically and is entertaining the guests at the Maschsee Guesthouse here.

Cost of the musical novelty is around $20,000, with the accompanying stereo equipment to send out the sounds. Next robot orch is due to be installed shortly in a Hamburg night spot.

OZONERS, NABES STILL 'WHITE'

By ODIE ANDERSON

St. Petersburg, Fla., Oct. 15.

The six-week-old integration of film theatres along the Suncoast of Florida (Gulf of Mexico side) is continuing on a planned basis. Significantly few Negroes outside the organizations of the NAACP and CORE actually seek admission. Most theatre owners and managers involved express relief that the fledging civil rights extension program is off to a peaceful start. Even so, innovation is too new to justify statements as to its final success or failure.

As to effect on the boxoffice, opinions are sharply divided, with one standpat faction denouncing the new two-tone audiences as the straw which will break the back of theatre exhibition, already crimped by television; others notice no difference in boxoffice returns which cannot be attributed to other factors.

Whatever the eventual outcome, the racial situation as it now exists is better understood when it is recognized that the Suncoast does not constitute "deep south," despite geographical positioning. You are deeper in old Dixie in parts of Georgia, Alabama, Louisiana and the Carolinas. Often in such preserves the colored population far outnumbers the white and is denied equal education, hence tends

Says Egypt Not Anti-Semitic Now; Wanna Make Pix

Hollywood, Oct. 15.

Egypt, which once banned Jewish actors and refused to play certain American films, no longer is anti-Semitic, according to George Nader, just returned from Cairo, where, he reported, the Egyptian government is "eager to attract American coproduction."

"There is no objection with regard to race, creed, color or religion for filming by American companies in Egypt," he said.

Switch in attitude has come, actor asserted, because "they are vitally interested in furthering the industry there." To this degree, only requirements in coproduction deals are script approval, cast and crew to be mutually agreed upon and proceeds to be pro-rata.

Only restriction voiced to him by the government during his stay there was in cases of stories that are "anti-United Arab Republic," he noted.

Actor said he is securing deal with Egyptian General Co. for In-

Copyright's Costly, Crucial 'C' Could Mean Free-Riders Romp If Omitted

Washington, Oct. 15.

That little copyright symbol (a "c" in a circle) seen on the front flap of most books stirred up a hornet's nest of objections at the blue ribbon copyright revision panel meet here.

The symbol denotes notice of copyright but for a large group of publishers and authors it spelled trouble.

Under the U. S. Copyright Office proposal a deliberate omission of the notice would invalidate copyright protection of the work.

Franklin Waldheim of Walt Disney Productions led off the talk with a speech criticizing the proposal and before long a bandwagon was rolling.

Jumping on were Julian T. Abeles of the Music Publishers Protective Assn., Inc., Philip Wattenberg of the Music Publishers Assn., Leon Kelman of the American Guild of Authors and Composers, Irwin Karp of the Authors League of America, Horace Manges of the American Book Publishers Council and Alfred Wasserstrom of the Magazine Publishers Assn.

Defending mandatory notice were Robert Cahill of the National Assn. of Broadcasters, Ronald Kaiser of CBS and Harry Rosenfield of Public Affairs Press.

The anti-notice group considered it another stumbling block in gaining full copyright protection.

The authors and publishers argued that notice has been peculiar to American copyright law and suggested junking to provision to get in step with Europe.

The Copyright Office averred the opposite is true. Notice, a U. S. creation, is now slipping into the copyright law in Europe, La-

6 of 12 New Shows So Far From Brit.; Equity Alarmed

The British invasion of Broadway, a growing source of irritation among members of Actors Equity during the last few seasons, is reaching explosive proportions. Of the 12 new shows which have opened on Broadway thus far this season, six were imported from England and in most cases so were the casts. Consequently, it's not surprising that members of Actors Equity voted 267 to 3 at the union's quarterly meeting last Friday (11) to ask the U.S. Attorney General to "curtail indiscriminate issuance" of work permits to British actors.

The membership resolution directs the Equity council to appoint a delegation to meet with Washington officials in an effort to remedy what is regarded as "an alarming situation." Equity contends that the Immigration & Naturalization Service generally ignores its recommendations concerning the granting of work permits to foreign actors. On the other hand, the union states that the British government closely follows recommendations made by British Equity.

Dick Moore, editor of Equity, the union's publication, and press

Govt. Imposing Cultural Tastes on The People? NAB Lobbyist Says Yes

Washington, Oct. 15.

National Association of Broadcasters lobbyist Paul Comstock charged the Federal Communication Commission with imposing the Government's cultural tastes on citizens.

He told the Alabama Broadcasters Assn. in Tuscaloosa, "There is a definite distinction between the role of Government and of the individual conscience in our society."

"The issue has been raised," he said, "by the Government's efforts to define the fairness doctrine, its attempts to place artificial limits upon commercial time, and its desire to change 'the vast wasteland' of entertainment into 'a verdant vineyard of culture and education.'

"How many steps do we take along this road before we abdicate our integrity as citizens?" Comstock asked.

Foreman's Crusade: (1) Govt. Subsidies, (2) School for Talent, (3) U.S. Film Fete

A powerful voice in the field of American filmmakers this week was raised in behalf of—

1. United States Government subsidization of the picture business as a means to producer and exhibitor survival;

2. The creation of a Government-sponsored postgraduate school looking to the development of new talent in all key production areas for Hollywood;

3. American film industry support of homeland film festivals, such as in San Francisco.

These are the objectives of Carl Foreman, whose past productions include "Guns of Navaronne" and who was in New York this week with a print of "The Victors," which he scripted, produced and directed for Columbia release.

Foreman has been preaching for five years about the desirability of a subsidy for Yank picture makers. He disclosed he'll embark shortly on a tour of American universities to lecture the drama departments —Yale, Northwestern, Ohio State, etc.—to make the point and enlist his own "pressure group" in it behalf.

Foreman states that competitive industries on foreign terrain have subsidies from their respective governments and thinks it only natural that the Americans should be similarly reimbursed because of their contributions on the cultural level and to the economic community.

Must Be Worked Out

The filmmaker has no specific program in mind, instead believes it ought to be worked out by American film industry leaders in consultation with the Government. Perhaps, he opines, it might be wise to consider the values of all subsidy programs around the world for possible adaptation.

Foreman, who is London-based, said British production has doubled over the past 10 years and a key factor has been the Eady Fund form of subsidization. In this instance

JFK AS TITLE SOURCE FOR MOON BIT MUSICAL

Boston, Oct. 15.

Michael R. Santangelo, co-producer and creator of "Black Nativity," currently playing a two-week engagement at the Shubert Theatre here, says he has set his next production, a musical comedy, "Let's Go to the Moon Together," going into rehearsal, in July.

He will co-produce the musical with Ralph Fields. It will be based on characters created by Nat Hiken, with a book by Fields and score by Milton DeLugg. "Moon" is set with an Army background and concerns principal character Conrad Kriby. Title of the musical, he said, derives from a JFK quote in a speech on moonshots. Santangelo said he's casting the show now.

Out of 1,955,000 overseas visitors more than 455,000 came from America. Total tourist earnings for the year yielded $896,000,000.

Vegas' $12,000,000 Tallyho No Dice With No Casino

By FORREST DUKE

Las Vegas, Oct. 15.

The Tallyho Hotel & Country Club, a $12,000,000 bet on the proposition that gambling is not essential to the Las Vegas resort trade, shut down Thursday (10) without warning—a total loser. Only 26 of its 450 rooms, and none of its French villas, were occupied when employees and tenants got the word to pull out.

Millionaire New York toymaker Edwin S. Lowe, prexy and sole listed owner of the big Tudor-style Strip spread, announced through his Las Vegas attorney that the Tallyho will reopen next May 1, with a casino and theatre-restaurant among its attractions.

Thus ended Lowe's bold experiment. The owner once said he "hopes to shake Las Vegas loose from its traditional moorings" with in a grudging, negative sort of way. Most of the Negroes, aware that they are now free to attend

N.Y. Mirror Suspends; News Buys Assets, To Get Some of the Features

The N.Y. Daily Mirror, Hearst-owned morning daily, is suspending publication today (16) after almost 40 years of continuous operation. Some of the Mirror features will appear in Thursday's (17) N.Y. Journal - American, Hearst's afternoon daily, and others will be in the N.Y. Daily News which is buying the tangible and intangible assets of the now defunct Mirror. An employment office for the 1,500 to 1,600 Mirror employees is being set up in the Mirror Building.

F. M. Flynn, president of the News, said it was most regrettable for the Mirror to suspend, but he went on to say that all New York dailies had suffered considerably from the printers strike of last December and that all had lost in the circulation and advertising departments. Reportedly, the Mirror was $3,500,000 in the red at the time of suspension.

The Mirror, in recent years, had run second to the News in circulation with the former having slightly more than 900,000 daily while the News averaged around 1,900,000 and almost 3,000,000 on Sundays. This still made the Mirror one of the largest selling daily papers in the country, but evidently the huge circulation was not enough to hold off the tide of ever-increasing costs.

New York is now left with six daily papers, three morning and three evening. The a.m. dailies are: the N.Y. Times, the N. Y. Herald Tribune, and the Daily News; the evening sheets include: the N.Y. Journal-American, the World-Telegram & Sun, and the N.Y. Post.

Texas Fair, Top Grid Games Score $5,000,000 Weekend for Dallas Show Biz

Dallas, Oct. 15.

A combination of the annual State Fair of Texas and the fact that this city was the football capitol of the nation last weekend brought an entertainment dollar windfall to local operators. The middle weekend of the annual expo is always a money-spending spree, but this year the Dallas Chamber of Commerce estimated more than 150,000 out-of-towners were in, spending about $5,000,000 for accommodations and entertainment.

More than 800,000 weekend visitors were expected at the fair; Friday (11), 339,914 attended, with the Southern Methodist U.-Navy game drawing 37,000 at the Cotton Bowl, and Saturday (12) the annual Texas U.-Oklahoma U. was the usual 75,504 sellout there, with the fair turnstiles clicking 324,443 visitors. The pro Dallas Cowboys and Detroit Lions invaded the Cotton Bowl Sunday (13). All hotel and motel rooms in Dallas, Fort Worth and nearby towns were jammed.

A VARIETY check found that the Adolphus Hotel's Century Room, normal 280 capacity, with the "Bottoms Up, '63" revue and Billy Williams' orch, had 315 patrons Friday (11) at $1.50 cover, and Saturday (12) jammed 400 customers into the room at $2 each.

The Statler-Hilton Hotel's Empire Room (350 capacity) opened the adjoining grill Saturday (12) to seat 500 clubgoers, at $3 per head, to see the "Danzos y Cantos" Mexican revue and dance to Don Ragon's orch. The Executive Inn's Mayfair Room (150 normal capacity), loaded the public nitery with 300 customers at a $3 cover for Clyde McCoy's orch and two floor shows by the band.

The Gaylife Club, plush privatery with 238 seats, added chairs to satisfy a Saturday turnover of 327 visitors for Henny Youngman's two shows and music by the Norman Grant Trio.

The Cabana Motel both Friday and Saturday nights opened its public Fleur de Lis Room and did hefty business by doubling its Bon Vivant Club act, Dagmar & Dick

Former Palladium Mgr. Gets 5-Year Sentence

London, Oct. 15.

Harry Claff, former joint general manager and boxoffice manager of the London Palladium, was sentenced to five years in prison at the Old Bailey last Friday (11). He had pleaded guilty to 18 charges of fraudulent conversion and falsification of accounts, but denied 11 charges of theft.

Prosecuting counsel said the prosecution were prepared to accept the pleas of not-guilty to larceny charges. Claff was sentenced to five years on the first count and five years, to run concurrently, on every other count to which he had pleaded guilty.

262G TAX RAP FOR SID CAESAR, SPOUSE

Sid Caesar has been tapped for a Federal tax deficiency bill of $262,694 for the years 1954-60. Caesar and his wife, both of whom are liable, have asked the U.S. Tax Court to set aside the Internal Revenue Service findings as erroneous.

IRS says that Caesar's taxable income in 1956 was $256,874 instead of the $182,211 his return showed. Undeclared dividend income and disallowed expenses accounted for much of the disparity between the Government's and Caesar's estimates of the latter's income. The Government over the years has disallowed over $64.000 in various expenses claimed Caesar.

West German Turncoat Turns Film Scripter

Wiesbaden, Oct. 15.

Latest offbeat entry to be filed with the German Film Registration Office here is a script by West German turncoat Otto John. The 54-year-old former president of the West German Federal Offise for Protection of the Constitution suddenly disappeared in East Berlin in 1954, later claiming that he had been drugged and dragged across the border.

He turned up again in 1956 and was sentenced by the Federal West German Court to four years in jail, but let off before the time expired for good conduct. He has prepared a script called "Criminal in Doctor's Apparel." Film does not deal directly with the doctor who, he claimed, drugged him and took him into the East against his will, but with the former assistant of the German surgeon, Dr. Sauerbruch, who turned Communist and then allegedly drugged a West German reporter and delivered him to the Soviet secret service.

DAM DISASTER DELAYS 'CLEO'S' ITALIAN PREEMS

Rome, Oct. 15.

Italo preem of "Cleopatra," which was due to be held Thursday (10) night at the Super Cinema here and Missori Theatre in Milan, was delayed because of the dam disaster in northeast Italy. Decision to cancel the openings followed the government's declaration of a state of national mourning after the dam break. Preems will be rescheduled later.

Film, meanwhile, had its Belgian premiere at the Ambassador Theatre in Brussels Wednesday (9) night.

DFZ'S SIX-LANE ROADSHOWS

Who Runs Up the Overhead?

Glen Oaks, N. Y.

Editor, VARIETY:

I've been reading with interest Ely Landau's thoughts about production in the East, particularly in reference to union cooperation. A healthy industry is beneficial to all concerned, from producer to prop man, and all concerned should—of course!—work for the benefit of the industry as a whole.

But!

It seems a little ironic to ask concessions of the grips, the prop men, the electricians and the camera crews while money flows unproductively down the drain through other, wider holes. During the shooting of Landau's production of "The Fool Killers" both cast and crew spent a lot of time doing absolutely nothing on location—while his director and cameraman wandered about the countryside in search of shooting sites.

Anybody in the business knows that some time must be lost here and there in the course of shooting. There is an element of creativity, and a crew sitting idle while a director makes a couple of dozen takes on one scene can be justified on the basis of getting a "good one". But certain aspects of production are simply a matter of following a pre-set formula. Location sites can be preselected, and intelligent use of assistant directors and other production assistants can easily avoid loss of time and money.

I don't think it is my business to tell Landau how to produce his pictures. If he feels he can afford to pay salaries in return for people sitting around and drinking coffee while a director "makes up his mind" that is his privilege. It's also possibly true that he uses a director who is weak on planning but sheer genius at turning out a quality film, and that he is willing to waste a chunk of money in order to attain that quality.

The only point I'd want to make is this: Don't then turn around and ask the "little guy" (who has been observing this waste of money with his own eyes) to make sacrifices for the "good of the industry". There is a basic injustice in throwing money away with one hand, and then counting pennies with the other—particularly when the tightened purse strings are aimed at the fellows who are still, despite a fairly high wage scale, the lowest paid members of the production team.

And if it isn't injustice . . . then it sure is bad psychology.

De Laurentiis on Own As to 'The Bible'

Columbia Previously Had Been Prospective Partner—Trade Thinks Huston Alone Cannot Complete Film

Columbia Pictures has withdrawn from "The Bible," upcoming production from Italian filmmaker Dino De Laurentiis. The American film company had been slated to participate both as partial financier and partial global distributor of the projected Biblical epic but is now out, at least as of now, at the apparent behest of De Laurentiis.

It's to be a big one, costing in the neighborhood of $15,000,000. According to disclosure from De Laurentiis, John Huston is to be sole director, in place of a company of four international directors, but this is taken lightly by American interpreters, who say that, for one, the Creation segment will require a special kind of cinematic treatment and must be placed in other hands.

Be that as it may, it's reported that De Laurentiis suggested that Col part from the scene and Col acquiesced. Latter may still move in, but only to the extent of taking on distribution rights for certain terriories.

De Laurentiis, who is highly regarded by Col officials, reportedly has the thought in mind to have many territorial distributors sharing in the production costs in turn for the releasing rights. This is the kind of modus operandi pursued by American producer Samuel Bronston, who mainly operates in Spain.

It's said, too, that De Laurentiis hopes to have the budget expenditures accounted for by the global distribs who would have all terrain except Italy, which would be retained by De Laurentiis.

Arvid Griffin's New MGM British Post

Arvid Griffin, who in past has held a number of exec production posts at Metro in Culver City, has been named managing director of the MGM British Studios. The post had been vacant since Matthew Raymond left the company in December, 1961.

Associated with MGM in the States since 1935, Griffin transferred to Britain last June. Lawrence P. Bachmann continues as exec producer of MGM's British productions.

CENSOR SHOUTS DOWN BID THAT HE EXPLAIN

Santiago, Oct. 15.

A censorship battle is on in Chile, due to the prohibition of "Alias Gardelito," an Argentine film directed by Chilean Lautaro Murina. It won the major award at the 1961 Santa Margarita de Ligure Festival and was chosen by Buenos Aires critics as the best Argentine film of that year.

It is artistically the most significant film axed by censors since Ingmar Bergman's "Smiles of a Summer Night," prohibited five years ago. The Critics' Circle for the first time took an official stand against the Censorship Board and there is a growing demand for reforming the legislation at present covering film censorship.

Censors, as usual, gave no reasons for their decision and when the press made enquiries as to same, the Board's president shouted insults at the top of his voice at the insolence of anybody questioning him.

TRADE WONDERS AT THIS FEAT

By VINCENT CANBY

How many roadshow releases can one company—and the nation's exhibitors—sustain at one time?

Question is raised by the statement from 20th-Fox last week that it is planning to put six hardticketers, repping a total negative investment of $42,000,000, into production during the six-month period starting in May, 1964.

The announcement stressed that the hardticketers, which will have an average budget of $7,000,000 each, will be in addition to 12 regular release films slated for 1964 production. It also dramatized 20th's upbeat thoughts re roadshows as a result of its experience with "The Longest Day" and "Cleopatra." At the same time, however, the announcement raised further questions which are as yet unanswered.

Because each of 20th's projected hardticketers should be completed within one six-month period, industryites, especially exhibs, are wondering how 20th will space out their release.

So far, no major company has had more than two roadshows in release simultaneously—and these have been the exceptions. United Artists, for example, had both "Exodus" and "Alamo" on hardticket in late 1960 and early 1961, and Metro had both the Cinerama "Brothers Grimm" and 70m "Mutiny on the Bounty" playing roadshow in late 1962 and early 1963.

It's now generally agreed among sales managers who've handled roadshows in the past that such specialized handling, with the aura of prestige which attaches to it, can add substantially to the overall gross of what might be a hit film in conventional release. This was reportedly proven earlier by figures on "Around the World in 80 days" and "South Pacific," comparing the increase in grosses on the pix in those cities where it preemed first on hardticket and then went into general release with the grosses of those cities where the film played only conventional release, sans the prestige buildup. According to one sales manager, the figures show that unless the picture is an absolute bomb, roadshowing serves ultimately to get more people, as well as more money, to the boxoffice.

Roadshowing, however, does present a fiscal problem, because the playoff is slower and thus a longer time is required to pay off bankloans on the picture's negative. Under ordinary circumstances, it

Nasht Winding 'Keeler' In Copenhagen; Heads Later for N. Y. On Distribution

From Copenhagen, by telephone, John Nasht, head of Topaz Film Distributors Ltd., producer of "The Keeler Affair," states that the six-week shooting schedule on the film has been completed; that his venture does not "lack funds," per the VARIETY story from Denmark in last week's issue; that he's due in New York in mid-November to negotiate North American rights, bids for which he has had from several sources.

He points to his ad in last week's VARIETY that the film will be released per schedule on Dec. 1 and that distributors, as listed in the ad, are set for France, Japan, Holland, Greece, South Africa, Italy, Denmark, Switzerland, Middle East, Israel along with Argentine, Venezuela, Uruguay (via Selecciones Gala) and Brazil, Colombia, Peru, Bolivia, Chile, Ecuador and Paraguay (via Guaranteed Pictures de la Argentina).

Nasht also can't understand the report that "two other" Keeler pictures are being shot in France and Egypt since he has exclusive rights from Christine Keeler, who has a share of the picture. He admits "anybody can make a film about Dr. Stephen Ward, now that he's dead," but he knows of no such competitive exploitation picture undertaking.

Robert Spafford, an American director who works out of Rome, is winding shooting in Copenhagen. He and Ronnie Maxwell did the script from an original by Matt White and Maxwell, both of whom are London Mirror staffers.

Yvonne Buckingham (British) plays the title role in "The Keeler Affair"; John Barrymore Jr., as Dr. Ward, has already completed his chores and returned to Rome where he resides.

Nasht admits that Danish clergy, educators and spokesmen for MRA (Moral ReArmament) have voiced heated protest to Danish Minister of Justice Hans Haekkrup but this hasn't hampered or halted production. Film costs over 75,000 pounds sterling (around $220,000).

'ALL WAY HOME' SRO IN KNOXVILLE PREEM

Knoxville, Tenn., Oct. 15.

Tickets for the offered world preem of Paramount's release of David Susskind's "All the Way Home" were a sell-out in two hours after the boxoffice opened. The performance, attended by players in the film, will be held tomorrow (Wed.). It showed earlier at New York Film Festival. It's "red carpet" for the Tennessee Theatre, a first-run Wilby-Kincey situation of 2,000 seats. Film will have a seven-day booking after the premiere.

Robert Preston, and other talent, are already in Knoxville for the showing. Paramount is making general release of the film on Oct. 17. The script is based on the novel "A Death in the Family" by James Agee. Directed by Alex Segal.

Zugsmith Says Filipino 'Intentionally' Harassed Him; Sues 3 For Libel

Los Angeles, Oct. 15.

Albert Zugsmith demanded $12,750,000 damages on charge of libel and defamation in Superior Court action against Philippine producer J. Amado Araneta, Hollywood thesps George Nader and Fay Spain and number of other defendants.

Complaint, which also named Zugsmith's Famous Players Corp. as plaintiff, stated that under a coproduction agreement between FP and Araneta, Zugsmith started direction of "The Great Space Adventure" in the Philippines in January, 1961, with Nader and Miss Spain costarred. Defendants, however, according to complaint, "intentionally began a campaign of harassment and defamation" against him, which Zugsmith said was "knowingly calculated by each and all of them to degrade the plaintiff."

Charge also was made that defendants had articles published in Philippine newspapers with defamatory statements in connection with the way he was directing pic, whose purpose was to declare him "incompetent, difficult to work with and dishonest."

Zugsmith additionally alleged he was negotiating with Pacific Television Corp. of Tokyo to coproduce a series of tv and motion pix, that an agreement had been reached but he lost the deal because of the "statements, acts and conduct of the defendants."

LEGION CAUTIONS AS TO 'TOM JONES' FILM

United Artists' "Tom Jones," Tony Richardson's film version of the classic novel which opened in New York Monday (7) to rave reviews, has been given an A-IV rating (morally unobjectionable for adults, with reservations) by Legion of Decency.

Legion calls the film "an earthy comedy-satire about morals in 18th Century England" and adds: "Although the film may appear frequently coarse, it is saved from being offensive by reason of its fast-paced and exceptional comic treatment and its honest portrayal of the period."

Legion gives the A-IV rating to those pix which "while not morally offensive in themselves, require caution and some analysis and explanation as a protection to the uninformed against wrong interpretations and false conclusions."

As a result of the unanimity of its local reviews, "Jones" looks to be a hot contender for some of the top New York Film Critics awards at the yearend.

N.Y. State Kid-Tag on Films Looms: Stronger Green Sheet in Opposition

The likelihood that the U.S. film industry faces an uphill fight against statutory film classification next year in the state of New York, plus the certainty that passage of classification in New York will prompt other states to do the same, is prompting the Motion Picture Assn. of America to seek new ways of improving the effectiveness of its Green Sheet.

The latter, comprised of pic reviews of the member groups of the Film Estimate Board of National Organizations, is regarded by the MPAA as its number one not-so-hidden persuader in arguing against the need for statutory classification. The MPAA pitch is that if parents want to know about specific films there already is plenty of information available (as via the Green Sheet), and thus state-backed film classification is unnecessary.

Early this year, largely as a result of the prodding of New York legislators, the Green Sheet expanded its coverage to include non-Code seal pictures, mostly those foreign films which are likely to get the widest Stateside playoff. At the same time, it has "rearranged" its mailing list to cover more libraries, churches, schools, civic groups, etc., which can in turn make the info available to interested parties. According to an MPAA exec, while the total Green Sheet mailing has remained about constant at 32,000, the effectiveness has been increased by eliminating from the list individuals and replacing them with organizations reaching a larger total readership.

At hearings in New York last month, conducted by the Joint Legislative Committee on Offensive and Obscene Material, it was apparent that the pro-classification legislators were not yet convinced that the Green Sheet eliminated the need for a classification bill. Thus the reason for the current pow-wows at the MPAA headquarters involving MPAA staffers and major company execs.

Because of the comparatively large expenses involved in printing, postage and keeping mailing lists up to date, it's felt that the total size of the current mailing cannot be enlarged much further. The object of the talks now is to find ways and means of obtaining an ever larger audience with the same mailing. One suggestion heard last week was to persuade newspapers to publish, as a readers service, a weekly box containing ratings on pix currently available—ratings not only contained in the Green Sheet but also from such other private "classifiers" as the Legion of Decency, and Parents' Magazine.

MPAA does not like the idea of exhibs publishing the Green Sheet rating—or any other ratings—in their ads, feeling that this implies the exhibs must live up to those ratings and, if they don't, is like asking for laws to compel them to.

Seymour Poe In Lebanon En Route Back to the U.S.

Beirut, Oct. 15.

Twentieth-Fox exec veep Seymour Poe arrived here today (Tues.) from Bombay on the next-to-the-last stop on his round-the-world biz trip of company offices. Exec will stay here three days for conferences with Michael Sursock, manager of 20th operations in Lebanon, before heading for Rome and then New York. He expects to get back to the homeoffice Oct. 20.

Before coming here, Poe had already visited Tokyo, Hong Kong and Manila, in addition to Bombay.

Ohio Exhibs' Poisonous TV Check-List

U.S. exhibition's frequent cry about the harmful effects of star-powered, recent-vintaged product on home screen's is renewed with the opening of the 1963-64 video season. "Again we are impressed by the ruthless, shortsighted policy of the motion picture distributors in releasing these pictures for prime time showing," comments exec secretary Ken Prickett in the Independent Theatre Owners of Ohio monthly bulletin.

Both Theatre Owners of America and Allied States Assn. have paid plea visits upon and contributed considerable correspondence to distribs over the matter of films providing their own competition.

Ohioians have been one of the most aggressive groups through the years. Group latest move is compilation of a list of 60 pix which Metro and 20th-Fox have leased for tv showing. The list appears with the comment about "ruthlessness" and is presented as "a guide for you in your booking," the implications of which are relatively clear. Included on the list are the names of the pix, the stars and the distributor.

Along with the comments about the Fox and Metro move is the comment that "it can have no other result than to take money out of the motion picture theatre boxoffice." The pix are then broken down into Monday night and Saturday night releases. NBC has prime time feature film shows on these evenings, the only web to have such a program. ABC abandoned one such show it ran last season and this past summer.

John Payne To San Juan; Newest Instance of Plan For Puerto Rican Studio

San Juan, Oct. 15.

Another effort to establish a film studio here. Tranquility of a lull in U.S. tourism was shattered with the arrival of actor John Payne. He visited the island briefly at request of executives of the newly-formed Malpol Co., who are hustling to promote a film studio in the Fajardo area on the island's northeast coast. Their basic thinking is that once a studio is erected, enticing producers from all over the world to make films amid the natural scenic beauties of Puerto Rico would be a cinch.

About 10 years ago, Payne formed his own picture-making company, Window Productions, which most recently created a television series called "Restless Guns." Producer-actor Payne starred in the 78 filmed half-hour sequences.

His visit here was supposed to supply the required adrenalin stimulating tonic, to get the studio project off the ground. Payne, was flown around the island. He spied the forest areas, seascapes, mountainous terrain, foothills, caves and the emerald ocean. His conclusion: "There's no reason why a studio shouldn't be build here. And there's no reason why Puerto Rico shouldn't have a flourishing film industry."

So where do we go from here? "We continue working at it—that is, promoting the idea for a studio." say Lou Lucio and Alice Pollock, the prime catalysts of the studio project.

Meanwhile, Payne was willing to discuss all that falls into the general category of what ails the motion picture industry. A motion picture is only as good as the thought and effort that is put into the script "before a single foot of film is shot," Payne declares. What's happening in the making of far too many films, he believes, is that everyone involved is so obsessed with rising costs of production "they shoot like crazy, as fast as possible, and little attention is paid to the content of the film.

"At eleven o'clock one night about a month ago we were getting ready to go to bed when the phone rang," he relates. "It was a producer friend of mine. He asked me to take a lead role in his next picture. When was shooting to begin? The next morning—at 6 a.m. The fact that I hadn't even laid eyes on the script didn't seem to matter. Well, I turned him down. But don't you know he got someone else. And the picture was finished on schedule." Payne says he was also recently asked to take the part of a West Point infantry colonel in James Jones' "The Thin Red Line," now being filmed in Spain.

Lampmen Rue IA's Talks With Studios For a Tape Pact

Hollywood, Oct. 15.

President of International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employee, Richard Walsh, is currently discussing a tape contract with the major film studios. Last July he flatly told a Hollywood IA local he had no intension of issuing a tape charter for the west coast. So charged A. T. Dennison, business rep of IA Lamp Operators local 728, in response to present Walsh-studio talks.

Dennison said he had written Walsh last July 17, telling him he was "very much disturbed" at reports the prexy intended issuing such a charter, and asserting his local has such jurisdiction. July 19, Walsh replied, telling him sources who had informed Dennison he (Walsh) planned issuance of such a charter "don't know what they are talking about. I never said I would issue a tape charter on the west coast."

Walsh went on to say he would review the tape situation, that it would have to be clarified so that jurisdiction would not go to others by default. No tape was being made in the studios at that time, Walsh wrote Dennison.

Dennison said he was surprised at the current Walsh-studio discussion in view of Walsh's letter disclaiming any plans to issue a separate charter. "We have a clause in our contract saying if tape comes in, we have jurisdiction. It's questionable that Walsh can make a separate deal. I don't think he can legally. I plan to take steps to prevent it if he does. I will recommend to our executive board we take the strongest steps possible to prevent it. We have never refused to sit down and negotiate with the studios," said the b.a.

Herb Aller, b.a. of IA cameraman's local 659, said his exec board has notified Walsh if the studios have any problem regarding tape and want to go to a 40 hour week, the local reps will sit down and talk to the studios to see if the problem can be resolved. Present work week averages from 43.2 to 48.6 hours.

The lensers' board is "adamant" in its contention tape work is in its jurisdiction, and is prepared to take whatever action may be necessary to protect its members, Allers reported.

MARTIN MELCHER'S MAN ABROAD: EDGAR ULMER

In post, he'll head outfit's operations in London, Paris, Rome and Madrid, with company to use foreign locations on several upcoming pix.

Ulmer's first assignment will be "The Cavern," which he'll roll in Yugoslavia Nov. 11 with John Saxon starred.

GOLDWYN'S HAPPY HABIT

Has Given Studio Charities $660,000 So Far

Hollywood, Oct. 15.

Motion Picture Permanent Charities, the film industry's all-encompassing single charity fund-raising organization now in its 22d year, launched its 1963-64 campaign with Samuel Goldwyn's usual $30,000 donation, plus corporate gifts of $10,000 apiece from Warner Bros. and 20th-Fox(for total of $50,000.

Kickoff luncheon at Beverly Hilton Hotel was attended by more than 300 execs and volunteer workers from motion picture and tv industries. Gordon Stulberg is campaign chairman.

Goldwyn, who was one of founders and MPPC's first prexy, has contributed $30,000 annually to tee off each year's campaign, and to date has gifted org with $660,000.

Approximately 22,000 industry personnel contribute to MPPC, about 18,000 making use of the so-called "Fair Plan," whereby one-half of one percent is deducted

Allied Artists' 1963 Loss After '62 Throws Spot on First Quarter of 1964

Fiscal 1963 was the worst year in the history of Allied Artists, the company registering a net loss of $2,747,000 for the term ended June 29. After payment of preferred dividends, this is equivalent to $2.97 per share on the 931,608 common shares outstanding at the year's end. This compares with a net loss in 1962 of $1,580,000 or $1.73 per common share after preferred divvies.

AA management, however, is predicting a profitable first quarter of the new fiscal year. This is based mostly on the earnings of Samuel Bronston's "55 Days at Peking" which opened this past summer and, consequently, isn't reflected to any degree in the 1963 figures. Allied has a $2,900,000 investment in the picture, counting in its advertising and other expenditures connected with its distribution. The company's execs feel that this coin can be recaptured.

Also contributing to the projected happier first quarter is projected continuing strong performance from the company's tv sales program. This accounted for nearly $4,000,000 in 1963 and literally sustained the company through this troubled semester. AA is just about out of its own pix to sell to tv but has been buying outside product to bolster this division. This tv distribution operation continues to be a very healthy one for Allied and praise Allah for that say its execs.

But the major problem at AA has been its product. In the past two years the company has had about 12 films which have required considerable investment but returned disappointing income. In the course of marketing this product the company spent lotsa coin for prints and advertising, not to mention the negative costs themselves, and these investments just did not realize income sufficient to offset their costs.

The outlook for the company is not nearly so devastating as its 1963 record. Allied now has nine pictures ready or almost ready to roll, included in which are some promising pictures. Currently being looked to turn a proper trick is Blake Edwards' "Soldier In the Rain" Jackie Gleason-Steve McQueen starrer which opens for Thanksgiving and is planned to

Another Screen Tool: Heraclorama

Paris, Oct. 15.

A new screen process invented by a Frenchman, Heraclorama, recently tested in a Brussels theatre in Belgium using "West Side Story" (UA). Process, according to inventor Jules Hourdiaux, can be adapted to any existing regular screen type by using a special screen and a small lens for the projectors. The Belgian press reports were good.

Hourdiaux's biz rep, Jena Vogtens, says sales are pending in 45 countries if still in abeyance in France, on its own grounds. Screen has a 180 degree curve, which is concave, to the 146 degree indentation of Cinerama. Vogtens claims it is cheap and eventually the lens can be used for making pix which would even enhance the depth, size and clarity of the images.

Vogten insists it is extremely cheap to install and it gives feeling of three dimensions also attested to by the Belgian press. Screen is made up of duraluminum strips which are rounded to catch the image and reflect it sans distortion. It is also covered with a fluorescent spray. All strips catch the projected images perpendicularly which supposedly give it a finish sans any irregularities whatever from any part of the house.

The lens, it seems, has no anamorphoscopic principle whatsoever. It now remains to be seen when it will appear in other countries. Meanwhile Cinerama has two houses in Paris and is branching out in the French keys.

Columbia London Troika

Mike J. Frankovich, departing London to become production head of Columbia at the Hollywood studio, said in New York he intends to set up a troika operation at the British capital.

One exec will be a creative packager, joining people and properties; second will function as an administrator, setting the deals, and the third will be a production manager, concerning himself with costs and personnel.

Nine Upcoming, & Allied Artists Sure Winners Among 'Em

Despite the dreariest fiscal sked in its history having been registered in 1963 (See separate story) Allied Artists has been piling up inventory for release in the near future. The company presently has nine features on the firing line, with other product nearing completion or about to start, representing over $1,000,000 worth of inventory.

A picture on which the company is pinning hope is "Soldier in the Rain," recently completed and aimed for Thanksgiving release with the plan being to keep it in circulation well into the Christmas holiday season. A Blake Edwards production, it stars Steve McQueen and Jackie Gleason and costars Tuesday Weld, Tony Bill, Tom Poston and Ed Nelson and was directed by Ralph ("Lilies of the Field") Nelson.

Just entering their first release patterns are "Cry of Battle," starring Van Heflin, Rita Moreno and James MacArthur and "The Gun Hawk," with Rory Calhoun, Rod Cameron, Ruta Lee and Rod Lauren. Completed are "Gunfight at Comanche Creek," an Audie Murphy oater; "War Is Hell;" "Year of the Tiger," the first screen story of an American Marine in Viet-Nam and entirely filmed there starring Marshall Thompson; "Now It Can Be Told," an espionage pic, and "Life in Danger," a suspense drama. Currently being edited is "The Strangler," a story based on the Boston strangler murder cases, starring Victor Buono.

Upcoming and in production is another picture which Allied is sanguine about. It's the filmization of novelist James Jones' "The Thin Red Line," a production of Philip Yordan's Security Pictures, in association with Ace Films, the production arm of the American Congress of Exhibitors. Yordan is producing, Andrew Marton is directing and Keir Dullea and Jack Warden topline. AA will release in the Western Hemisphere and Japan.

Nearing completion is another pic which Allied has hopes for. This is "Never Put It In Writing," a Seven Arts production starring Pat Boone being produced and directed by Andrew Stone. This one will also be distributed by Allied in the Western Hemisphere and Japan. Slated to roll Oct. 21, after several delays, is "The Iron Kiss," scripted, produced and directed by Samuel Fuller who recently did "Shock Corridor" for AA release. It is a Leon Fromkess-Samuel Firks production as was "Corridor" and is one of five Fromkess has to make for Allied under a recent deal.

In addition to these, there are others presently on the drawing boards. More will be known about some of these projects within the next few weeks, the sum total of which would seem to indicate that although Allied is down, it is by no means out.

FRANKOVICH IN BIG REASSURANCE

By GENE ARNEEL

Mike J. Frankovich, who last week was officially appointed head of worldwide production for Columbia, after being the London-based European filmmaking head of affairs, stated flatly at the weekend that "Hollywood will be the centre of our producion."

He specifically has in mind, he said, to centralize as much production in the West Coast as possible, adding "Hollywood will have the biggest revival it ever had."

Frankovich said the obvious in noting that his thoughts on a new emphasis on Hollywood picture lensing ought to be greeted enthusiastically by the Coast unions and the community people. It's no secret that Col producers and indies aligned with Col have been for years operating at numerous global points.

Due There Jan. 1

Frankovich, who's first v.p. of Col, and his wife, actress Binnie Barnes, will shift to permanent residence on the Coast around Jan. 1 when they settle things in the British capital. Meanwhile all the decisions are his, as of now, concerning all facets of that company's production. He was on the Coast last week but didn't think of any house shopping for the reason it wasn't until Thursday that he made the final decision to take over the studio and leave London (Sol A. Schwartz, who had been studio v.p., is in process of transfer to the homeoffice as senior v.p.).

Visited at his Sherry-Netherland suite last Saturday (12), prior to his return to London on Monday, Frankovich told this interviewer he's already initiated moves looking toward more camera work in Hollywood, including projects involving Charlton Heston ("The Warlord"), which had been slated for shooting in England and Yugoslavia, and William Wyler's "The Caretaker," and Richard Brooks' "Catch 22."

Godard's Vexed With Joe Levine; Balks Overaccenting Bardot's S.A.

Paris, Oct. 15.

If Embassy Pictures head Joe Levine, who owns worldwide rights (outside of France and Italy) to "Le Mepris" (Contempt), goes through with his plans to reedit the pic, director Jean-Luc Godard says he will ask to have his name removed from the credits. Film, which stars Brigitte Bardot and Jack Palance, is known as "Ghost at Noon" in English.

The film will be released here by Cocinor and will go out in Godard version. According to Godard, Levine insists on recutting the pic and even adding more scenes to play up the sex symbol status of the femme star, though the film was designed and conceived to give a new "image" to Bardot.

What irks Godard is that Levine paid no attention to the film during production, and waited until shooting was completed before raising his beefs. Director is also inclined to believe Italo coproducer Carlo Ponti misled Levine in his reports on pic during shooting.

RKO's Daddy Glen

Glen Alden Corp., holding company among the subsids of which is RKO Theatres, has posted a preliminary net income of $5,500,000, equal to approximately $1 a share on sales of $88,200,000 for the first nine months of 1963, the period ending Sept. 30.

For the similar stanza last year, the company has a net income of $3,850,000, equal to around 70c a share on sales of $81,350,000. What percentage of the overall business was attributable to RKO wasn't projected in the Glen Alden statement, as per usual policy.

United Artists Cuts In on 'Jones' Import Kudos

With the strong reception accorded "Tom Jones," United Artists decided last week that Lopert Pictures shouldn't take all the credit for its presentation in the U.S. so, for the first time, there's a picture on the market under the joint distribution auspices of both operations.

The film was originally billed as a Lopert release in the U.S., as are most foreign-made pix distributed in the States by UA. Latter was to distribute it overseas under its own banner. But after the rave notices garnered by the Tony Richardson film last week and the hefty biz drawn by it at Cinema I, a subtle change was made and the picture is now billed as a United Artists-Lopert Pictures release.

It's figured by UA execs that "Jones" may be in for some awards both locally and at Oscar time and the big company wants a piece of the action along with little Lopert. Also, the pic's quality and business image just proved too tempting for the major to overlook.

Georgia Kicks Out Atlanta 'Ratings'

Atlanta, Oct. 15.

Newest turn in the running battle over censorship and/or film ratings came Thursday (10) when Georgia Supreme Court knocked down City of Atlanta's ordinance which empowered a socalled "film reviewer" to see pictures in advance of showing and tag them with a "rating." Court's decision means, in essence, that there can be no censorship or prior rating.

In a decision written by Judge T. S. Candler, the court held that it is unconstitutional to require exhibitors to submit their films for either rating or censorship prior to the time they are presented in the theatres. Decision stated that this is a violation of free speech.

Judge Carlton Mobley dissented.

Decision, though brief, was like another issued last year and Thursday's ruling upheld one by Fulton Superior Court Judge Durwood T. Pye saying it was invalid for the city to have an individual or board with these duties or power.

In hearings held a month ago, Chief Justice W. H. Duckworth said the city should "punish the fire" out of film theatres that show obscene pictures, but that it should wait until the movies are shown before taking any action.

Judge Pye's earlier decision had not been enforced immediately when he left question of the constitutionality up to the Supreme Court.

City's attorneys argued that city has rights to protect the health and good order of the city. They said motion pictures of low moral standards come within this jurisdiction.

Attorneys for film industry insisted "you can't burn a house down to get rid of the rats" and that city should not be allowed to interfere with movies before they are shown.

Mrs. Christine Smith Gilliam, wife of Alderman Ed Gilliam, chairman of Atlanta Aldermanic Board's Police Committee, was formerly hired by City of Atlanta as film censor. When blue penciling ordinance was knocked out via an unconstitutionality decision stressing "prior" restraint, Atlanta passed a new statute calling for rating of pictures, viz: UY (unsuitable for youth; objectionable; and approved. Mrs. Gilliam then was designated as city's "reviewer."

If exhibitor or distributor took exception to any of these ratings he could appeal to Atlanta Library Board, who would see film in question and either uphold Mrs. Gilliam or overrule her.

Mrs. Gilliam has continued to function while Supreme Court was mulling city's appeal.

"Johnny Cool" (UA) (3d wk) is dropping from fourth position of a week ago to seventh place. "20,000 Leagues Under Sea" (BV) (reissue), which hinted some promise last week, is finishing eighth, quite strong for an oldie.

"Rampage" (WB) (2d wk) is taking ninth money though a bit uneven. It's fairly new. "Leopard" (20th) (9th wk) is winding up 10th.

"8½" (Embassy) (14th wk) is finishing 11th while "Lord of Flies" (Cont) (5th wk) rounds out the Top 12 pictures.

"Wives and Lovers" (Par) and "Sporting Life" (Cont) are runnerup films in that order, neither being especially strong.

"Any Number Can Win" (MGM) is smash in N. Y. on its preem date. "Running Man" (Col), also new, is spotty, but showing fairly well in Washington and Philly.

"Tom Jones" (UA), another new entrant, hit a new house record on initial session in N. Y. "Man With X-Ray Eyes" (AI), another newie, is brisk in K.C. and good in Cincy.

"Cry of Battle" (AA), passable in Frisco, looks thin in N. Y. "Conjugal Bed" (Embassy) continues big in N. Y. and solid in L. A.

"Stolen Hours" (UA), comparatively new, is doing better this week than last round. Pic is solid in Boston, big in Chi and good both in Detroit and Frisco. "In French Style" (Col) looms sock in Chi and solid in N. Y.

"Shock Corridor" (AA) currently is shockingly mild in L. A. and Frisco. "For Love Or Money" (U) looks neat in Washington and fast in Chi.

Note: The number of weeks out in release for bigger and longrun pix are designated in such cases.

Otto Preminger's "The Cardinal" is a long motion picture—almost three hours—but for most of the way it is superlative drama, being emotionally stirring, intellectually stimulating and scenically magnificent. It is without question the director-producer's finest work.

Aside from being an artistic achievent—there are some minor flaws, unfortunately—"The Cardinal" should be a solid boxoffice contender for Columbia. It might even enjoy what the trade calls b'ockbuster business in view of the fortituous "pre-sell," so to speak, coming out of Rome as a consequence of the Ecumenical Council and the curiosity it has engendered about the Catholic Church and its hierarchy among people of all faiths.

This picture, like the Henry Morton Robinson novel that it lives up to more in spirit than plotwise, is a skillful, fascinating blend of fact and fiction. It has the ring of authority and inside atmosphere of the Catholic Church from the parish level to the Vatican on both the material and the spiritual plane. Yet, it is not (and it would take more than a three-hour film to touch upon it) so much a story of the Church as it is the saga of a man of humble Boston Irish-American origin who becomes an ecclesiastical prince.

Robert Dozier's remarkably fine screenplay overcomes for the most part the pitfalls inherent in the flashback, episodic dramatic technique. And, with Preminger's often acutely sensitive guidance of the performers, the film succeeds admirably in humanizing the clergy, from priest to Cardinal, without tarnishing their spiritual dedication.

No synopsis—unless it moved extensively and on many levels, material and spiritual in relation to family ties; politically and philosophically in the international context, and, finally, introspectively as regards a particular individual on the pastoral and personal plane—could hope to do justice to the overall story of "The Cardinal," not to mention a multitude of nuances of characters that encompass weakness, strength and guile.

Reduced to bare fundamentals, the story concerns the development of a Rome-educated American priest who has aspirations of clerical high office. However, he experiences shattering doubt of his ability to be a good priest and, indeed, if he ever had a true "call," having from his earliest memory has been destined, according to his parents, for the priesthood.

Father Stephen Fermoyle's spiritual turmoil begins in the confessional, a sequence of intimate revelation which may disturb both Catholic and non-Catholic but which nevertheless is dramatically valid and conveys the awesome responsibility that goes with the authority (for those that submit) to bind or remit sins in the eyes of God. He is confronted by his sister, unrepentant for having slept with her Jewish fiance, in a desperate attempt to prove her love, after he was subjected at their engagement party to Irish-American religious bigotry even though he was about to embrace the "faith."

Father Fermoyle's torment—unswerving devotion to God and human agony over not having been able to ease the spiritual pain of a loved one—is further heightened when his sister hits the skids and by a party unknown is about to become an unwed mother. It's her life or the baby's, the doctor says in advising a craniotomy. This the priest has to deny on religious principles, thereby causing the death of his sister.

There are many other stages in Father Fermoyle's development as man and priest that deserve considered recounting as well. But these two incidents are his purgatory on earth, thus cannot be passed over lightly. They cause him to take a leave of absence from clerical duties for a period of two years, at a time when he is about to begin a career as a junior Vatican diplomatic functionary which would ensure the princely red hat he eventually obtains. This was the test of faith that would triumph, after much soul-searching including involvement in Austria with a girl who tries unsuccessfully to contest with the Church for his love.

At times the thought went through at least this observer's mind—how many extraordinary experiences can one man have in a life-time? However, the thought was fleeting. While it might be argued that Dozier and Preminger have come close to taxing an audience with all the unique experiences visited upon one man, it can be acknowledged that they have not taken that last fatal step into the implausible, which, of course, is the discipline of good dramatists.

As first a Vatican staffer with the title of monsignor, later Bishop, Father Fermoyle becomes involved with racism in Georgia and then the Nazi occupation of Austria, as an envoy of the Pope. In the Georgia sequence, Preminger attacks racism with brute dramatic force and in his brutalizing by the Klu Klux Klan of a Negro priest and Father Fermoyle (not officially representing the Vatican diplomatically but spiritually conveying brotherhood to a priest who had sought aid in Rome but was up against the barrier of foreign interference in United States church-state separation).

The scourging of the priest, especially Fermoyle, by the KKK, apparently is intended by Preminger to have allegorical significance and as such it serves a definite purpose. This, however, might be regarded as an arbitrary turn in the picture, depending upon what some members of an audience are willing to accept because of the volatile exposition of the sequence. The violence is deftly counterpointed by the Vatican's equation of the political and moral aspects of the situation.

The matter of nationalism and spiritual loyalty is exquisitely examined when Bishop Fermoyle is sent by the Vatican to Austria to censure Cardinal Innitzer for extending his benediction to the invading Nazis. In the delicate interplay between the junior and ranking prince of the church, excellently manifested in the dialog and acting, Preminger's direction reflects the consummate artist.

Emotionally and intellectually this interlude represents high drama in the purest form, for what greater dual purpose can a man hope to justify, as in the case of Innitzer (masterfully played by Josef Meinrad) than devotion to country and God. Circumstance, of course, completely disillusion Innitzer about uniting Austria with its Germanic heritage, but while he is honoring the letter, if not the spirit, of the message conveyed by the Vatican emissary the screen is electric.

Without faulting scenarist Dozier, "The Cardinal" is Preminger's picture for it moves on such a vast canvas—Rome, Boston and environs, New York (dockside scene only), Georgia, Vienna and back to Rome—with all the richly pictorial ritual of the ordination of a priest, the consecration of a Bishop, later a Cardinal, and the vast public excitement in St. Peter's Square for the election of a Pope. With all the vast canvas and the many individauls who appear upon it, the script might easily have been negated or lost, no matter how good, but it isn't.

Preminger also selected his cast wisely. Tom Tryon, who has the title role, plays it very well indeed, although there are shadings to the character which do not surface as might be desired. Romy Schneider is captivating as the Viennese girl who cannot disguise her feelings toward Tryon. Carol Lynley is effective as his troubled sister and also in a subsequent role as the latter's illegitimate daughter; Dorothy Gish and Cameron Prud'Homme, as the parents, Bill Hayes as a brother, Maggie McNamara as another sister, and John Saxon, as the ill-fated fiance, take care of the intimate family circle nicely indeed. They're all natural.

There are, however, two who steal the picture as far as acting goes, and Academy members should be hard put to decide between them for supporting performance honors. They are John Huston and Raf Vallone. Seldom has any film been blessed with two such towering giants, and both play the roles of Cardinals on distinctive, captivating levels.

Huston can give up directing any day—though that would be a great loss—to pursue acting. As the American Cardinal Glennon, primate of Boston, he etches a vigorous, warmly human portrait of a man who is direct, authoritarian and one feels, deep down dedicated but obviously annoyed by Roman exclusion (circa 1917) of U.S. hierarchy in Vatican affairs. Vallone, mentor of Fermoyle, is the complete opposite an outwardly gentle, but basically resolute individual; a philosopher, teacher and diplomat, who is affectionately outgoing. His is a beautifully balanced performance.

Tullio Carminati contributes importantly, too, as a Cardinal close to the Pope. Ossie Davis, as the Negro priest from Georgia, is effective as are Burgess Meredith, Cecil Kellaway, Jill Haworth, Chill Wills, Arthur Hunnicutt, Peter Weck and Murray Hamilton.

Responsible for the exquisite photography mentioned earlier is Leon Shamroy. His scenes of Rome and Vienna, not to overlook snowscapes in Stowe, are among the finest, if indeed not the finest, the screen has offered. The combination of Panavision and Technicolor makes for truly outstanding pictorial satisfaction. For its so-far limited roadshow runs "The Cardinal" will be shown in 70m, with 35m to be used for other engagements.

Also top drawer is the work of composer Jerome Moross and music editor Leon Birnbaum and such technical contributions as those of editor Louis R. Loeffler, sound effects editor Peter Thornton, and production designer Lyle Wheeler. Pry.

Ian Fleming's British Secret Service Agent No. C07—licensed to kill—better known as James Bond, cannot miss at the boxoffice in "From Russia With Love." It's a preposterous, skilful slab of hardhitting, sexy hokum. After a slowish start, it is directed by Terence Young at zingy pace. The cast perform with an amusing combo of tongue-in-cheek and seriousness and the Istanbul location is an added bonus. So, incidentally, is the peek at the Scottish Highlands where the climax is played out, and which matches up very well with the foreign locations.

Bond, the resourceful, dameloving, debeonair, cynical creation of novelist Fleming is, again played by the tall, virile Sean Connery. He makes a pretty impressive figure as a shrewd, courageous Secret Service agent. If, in fact, that's the way they have to or do behave.

This action-packed motion picture has to do with Connery being detailed to go to Istanbul and lift a top secret Russian decoding machine from the Embassy. British Intelligence senses that this may be a trap, but getting the machine is important. Connery can pull it off if he will help a young Russian cipher clerk (Daniela Bianchi) to escape to the West. She thinks she is working for her Russian Government, but actually she is a pawn of Spectre, an international crime syndicate. Complicated? You bet. The plot is just a flimsy excuse for some topnotch escapism. All very cozy, irresistible and unbelievable.

Bond has a glorious slapup fight to the death with Robert Shaw, the killer detailed to bump him off. Guess who wins? He is hounded by a helicopter as he runs across moorland clutching the decoding machine. He beats off his pursuers in a motor boat by setting fire to the sea. He referees a fight between two jealous gypsy girls just before the encampment is invaded by the crime gang. Even in the last reel, when the audience is thinking it's all over he gets held up by a chambermaid who turns out to be one of syndicate's top agents. But he is never at a loss. And, despite all his problems, he always has time to risk the hazards of the bedchamber.

With these two pix Connery has made quite a name for himself and his only problem now is to avoid not being identified entirely with James Bond, whom he has created so well. He is well served, not only actionwise, but by some crisp wisecracking dialog by Richard Maibaum. Robert Shaw is an impressive, icy, impacable killer and the late Pedro Armendariz weighs in with a formidable, yet lightly played, performance as the man who knows the sinister secrets of Istanbul. The distaff side is less well served. Newcomer Daniela Bianchi is a goodlooking Italian girl with shapely legs and promising smile. But only in one bedroom sequence is she able to give evidence that she has some thesping talent.

Lotte Lenya has been lumbered with a part that doesn't fully come off. Instead of being sinister the character may be too grotesque even for this espionage pantomime. She plays the woman who defects from the Russian Secret Service to join Spectre. Disguised with an Eaton Crop and heavy pebble spectacles, she stands out as somebody up to no good from the first glimpse. Bernard Lee, George Pastell, Lois Maxwell, Walter Gotell and Peter Bayliss play smallish routine parts with their customary flair.

Special effects boys John Stears and Frank George, the stunt specialists Peter Perkins, John W. Mitchell and C. Le Messurier, cameraman Ted Moore and editor Peter Hunt can all take a bow for a picture which is going to make exhibitors buy new automobiles to go to the bank. Lionel Bart's title song is apt. John Barry's background music is pleasantly unobtrusive. Credits are disturbingly smart, clever, jazzy and crazy—even though the audence doesn't get around to the object of the exercise—knowing who did what? Rich.

Julie the Redhead

"Julie the Redhead," which opened at the 55th Street Playhouse on Monday (14), was reviewed in VARIETY, issue of Sept. 9, 1959, under the French title, "Julie La Rousse," from Paris. Mosk reviewed this pic briefly and not enthusiastically.

"Mildly entertaining situation comedy is too pat for more chance outside of France," he wrote . . . "smoothly made and played, but the eclat is only in isolated passages. It's all been seen before, and better, in Yank comedies of this genre." Comedy stars Pascale Petit and Daniel Gelin.

Ideal picture for children from Walt Disney. Tale of two dogs and a cat who are so humanized-rendered that the humans on view are just subordinates. Even sophisticated adults ought to be impressed.

Buena Vista release of Walt Disney (James Algar) production. Directed by Fletcher Markle. Features Emile Genest, John Drainie, Tommy Tweed, Sandra Scott, Syme Jago, Marion Finlayson, Ronald Cohoon. Screenplay, Algar, based on book by Sheila Burnford; editor, Norman Palmer; camera (Technicolor), Jack Couffer and Lloyd Beebe; director of photography, Kenneth Peach; music, Oliver Wallace. Sheila Burnford's book of the same title has been given a vivid translation in "The Incredible Journey." The Walt Disney presentation is an exceptionally good, colorful adventurous tale for the younger element.

And while the kids doubtless will be enraptured with this recounting of what is indeed an incredible journey for two dogs and a cat, the live actioner, exquisitely photographed in the Canadian outdoors, has its moments of excitement for adults as well.

A bull terrier, Siamese cat and Labrador retriever comprise the unlikely trio of pals who, farmed out to a friend of their owners, embark on the journey—over 200 miles of treacherous terrain. They encounter crisis after crisis in what is a remarkable, nay incredible, fight to survive all sorts of adversities in their trip all the way home.

Kenneth Peach as director of photography has on display a wide range of camera assets, most importantly the scenic values of the Canadian high country, and with photographers Jack Couffer and Lloyd Beebe, the Technicolored widescreened diary of what alledgedly actually happened is a pictorial delight.

Director Fletcher Markle, with the assist of an animal trainer, has gotten an abundance of child-appealing excitement on the screen. And he sees to it that the story is told simply and directly, what with the humans on view exchanging dialog in honest fashion and an offscreen commentary by Rex Allen.

Emile Genest, John Finlayson and Ronald Cohoon are among the cast members. They all reflect professional knowhow. But the astutely-guided animals steal the show, thanks largely to an appealing screenplay by coproducer James Algar and Markle's success in getting the thrills on the screen.

Music by Oliver Wallace takes many symphonic twists and turns and on the overall is a top-drawer contributiton. Gene.

PULL DOWN GINGER PALACES

B&K FOLDS 3D OF OLD BIGGIES

Chicago, Oct. 15.

Balaban & Katz theatre chain is shuttering the 4,000-seat Marbro on Thursday (17), the third of its vintage neighborhood houses to go dark in the last few months. B&K closed down the south side Tivoli less than a month ago, and the Terminal shortly before. The three theatres accounted for 10,000 seats.

Marbro and Tivoli were built in the era of picture palaces and were so large as to be inefficient today. The Terminal was located within a short distance from four other B&K houses, and the company felt that it was competing with itself. A spokesman for B&K said that the closings were no indication of a cutback, but that "the economics of exhibition have changed, and in a large theatre when you finish paying the staff and the unions there's nothing left".

Coincidentally, a letter to indie exhibitors from the antitrust division of the U.S. Dept. of Justice last week revealed that B&K has proposed to "acquire" a new theatre in the suburban Oakbrook shopping center. The letter, in essence, asked the exhibs if they had any objections to another B&K house, and more specifically one in Oakbrook.

Many exhibitors take the moves to indicate that B&K is making a new move into the suburbs. Several owners, among them Oscar Brotman and Stanford Kohlberg, have had substantial success with shopping centre houses.

Jack Clark, prexy of Allied Theatres of Illinois and himself a theatre owner (the Tiffin) asserts that "the suburbs are the answer to the mystery of the disappearing picture goers". Clark points out that in recent years six houses have closed within an area two miles from the Tiffin, but that the closings have not added to the gross take from his theatre. The closed houses in his area accounted for 15,000 seats.

honest awe of the challenge he faces. Heartening to him was the fact that so many highly-placed citizens of Hollywood, upon hearing the news of his appointment, made with the enthusiasm.

Frankovich said he doesn't have any thoughts on a given number of new productions to be made at Col. "It may sound ridiculous but I wouldn't make any at all if I didn't have the right ingredients."

He comments that he hopes to "reestablish a production enthusiasm and a desire to make pictures in Hollywood. This may sound like a politician's statement but I sincerely mean it."

View of the Job

Frankovich sees the position of studio head as no longer the czar who dealt with salaried people and could change directors in midstream. The studio head today, he offered, is "a semi-esthete, a public relations man, a politician, a business man, one who can get along with people, and, importantly, someone who loves this business."

He provides chapter and verse on the need to review books and other story properties (potential scripts were much in evidence at the hotel) and bring them together with the right kind of people. He recalls it took a year to "convince Carl (Foreman) to make 'Guns of Navarone'."

Frankovich envisions the Hollywood studio as a "cooperative house of arts, not a factory, but with commercial ingredients" and as top man he "hopes to make it work." He recalls that it was 15 years ago that he left as a "little independent producer."

Frankovich feels it's "good for me to be moving at this time,"

$2.50 Seats at Opener Go For $12.50 For Demos

Albuquerque, Oct. 15.

New Mexico premiere of 20th Fox's "Cleopatra" at the Sunshine Theatre here last Thursday (10) pulled a capacity house and grossed about $12,000. It was a buyout by the State Democratic Party, with ducats peddled at $12.50 each. Political leaders bought the whole house at regular price of $2.50.

Besides a seat at the "Cleopatra" premiere, ticket buyers were also given a box supper and a cocktail party before the theatre party.

Press preview of the film was held Wednesday (9) with about 300 in attendance. Lou Avollo, resident manager for Frontier, and Chick Evans of Kansas City, 20th rep in this area, engineered both events.

Reade Launching Films Overseas

Walter Reade-Sterling, which hit the boxoffice jackpot this year with the domestic release of two American-made indies ("David and Lisa" and "The Balcony"), is now moving into the foreign market with the two pix.

Interestingly, as some foreign producers have decided to open their pix in the States sans distrib (when distribs did not offer "reasonable" terms), chairman Walter Reade has done the same in two key European dates. Exec reported that because no French distrib had met R-S terms on "David and Lisa," the company had booked the picture directly into three Paris houses, for opening late this month. He's confident that the success of those dates will enable the company to get the terms it wants for a distrib deal subsequently.

Such has already happened with "Balcony" in a similar situation in London, although the pic does not open there until Oct. 21. According to Reade, R-S, on its own, succeeded in making such a favorable exhibition deal with the Academy Theatre there that British-Lion became interested in the film and has taken it on for United Kingdom release. British-Lion also has "David and Lisa."

DIXIE EXHIBS JOINT MEET, STATE SLATES

Atlanta, Oct. 15.

J. H. (Tommy) Thompson, of Hawkinsville, as per expectations, was reelected to serve his 17th consecutive term as president of Motion Picture-Theatre Owners & Operators of Georgia on the final day of the tristate (Alabama-Georgia - Tennessee) convention.

Reelected to serve with Thompson was his entire slate: O. C. Lam, Rome, executive vice-president; Ray Edmondson, John H. Stembler, Frederick G. Storey, Harold Spears, James H. Harrison and Mrs. M. M. Osman, vicepresidents; E. D. Martin, Columbus, treasurer; and John Thompson, Gainesville, secretary.

Tennessee Theatre Owners Assn. also reelected its whole slate:

Richard Lightman, Memphis, president; E. D. Martin, Columbus, Ga., and Juanita Foree, Maryville, vicepresidents; Morton Tune, Shelbyville, secretary; and Willis, Davis, Atlanta, treasurer.

Harry Curl, of Birmingham, was elected president of the Alabama Theatres Assn., succeeding W. W. Hammonds, of Albertville. This group also elected one new v.p., Charles Crute, of Huntsvile, to join holdovers J. A. Jackson, of Clanton, Roy Martin, of Columbus, and Tom Coleman, of Anniston. A. B. Covey was reelected secretary treasurer and R. M. Kennedy remains as representative to Theatre Owners of America.

Decision on 'Cleo' Bookings by AB-PT Seen as Vindicated

American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres execs figure that the circuit's $2,500,000 investment via its booking of "Cleopatra" in situations around the country will be vindicated by the end of the picture's run in those houses.

As it stands now, six of the 10 theatres will have "Cleo" as their tennant through most of 1964. The remaining four will be running the opus for only a portion of the new year. On the strength of present business and projecting this into the coming year, it's figured that the circuit will bail out its investment by the end of the 10 engagements. No one is talking about profit yet, however.

Biz has been satisfactory in the 10 spots, it's reported, and 20th Century-Fox has been carrying on a renewed push to attract party and other group business in the coming season. This drive on the part of the distrib plus the circuit's own promotional efforts give AB-PT chiefs the feeling that their sizeable investment is a safe one.

Gene Kelly Takes a Walk

Hollywood, Oct. 15.

Gene Kelly and Sinatra Enterprises have parted. Kelly quit as producer of "Robin and the 7 Hoods" because of "artistic differences," but said splitup was "amicable." Sinatra Co. will make film for Warner Bros. release.

Differences centered on casting and song and story treatment. "I thought it best to withdraw before I got too deep into the production. We both were wide apart, that I felt I should leave."

Film, on which Howard W. Koch is exec producer and Gordon Douglas will direct starting early November, stars Frank Sinatra, Dean Martin, Sammy Davis Jr. and Bing Crosby.

CHINICH JOINS MAGNA

Succeeds Pantages As General Sales Manager

Jesse Chinich has been named general sales manager of Magna Pictures, succeeding the resigned Clayton Pantages.

Chinich, who most recently served as Buena Vista's western division manager for the last eight years, earlier was a film buyer for American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres and its subsids, and film buyer and district manager for Rugoff and Becker Theatres, now known as Rugoff Theatres.

Rule at 7-Arts Is Bursting Action

The extent to which the "packaging-and-producing" Seven Arts is influencing the contemporary film scene may be gauged from the following statistics:

In the first 60 days of 1964, it will have (1) three films completed and waiting release, (2) seven more films going into initial release, (3) another six films either in production or ready to go, and (4) two legit shows playing on Broadway.

Due to be completed before January-February of 1964 are "Night of The Iguana" (Metro), "The Wild Affair" (Metro) and "Never Put It in Writing" (Allied Artists). Going into release are "Sunday in New York" (Metro, January), "Of Human Bondage" (Metro, February), "Seven Days in May" (Paramount, February), "Global Affair" (Metro, February). Additionally, Seven Arts itself will be releasing itself three arties, the French "Gentleman's Companion" and "Les Mystifies," and the British "Sammy Going South," this year's Royal Command performance film.

Scripts which will either be in production then, or ready to go, include "No Strings," "Reflections in A Golden Eye," "Settled Out of Court," "A Candle for St. Jude," "This Property Is Condemned" and "Conspiracy of Silence."

'All The New (& Remodelled) Theatres Necessitate Changed Playoff-' Marcus

Detroit, Oct. 15.

A change in film distribution and the method of selling motion pictures were urged by Ben Marcus, chairman of the executive committee, Allied States Assn. of Motion Picture Exhibitors.

Taking note of the boom in theatre construction and remodeling, especially the new shopping center theatres, Marcus said:

"If the theatres of the nation are to continue experiencing a build-up in patronage then, to keep faith with the exhibitors who are investing millions in new theatre construction and the up-dating of others, a change in the distribution pattern is an urgent necessity. This calls for a steady and orderly flow of product to the theatres the year 'round or these millions and all the effort expended in this up-dating process will, to a great extent, be wasted."

In his statement to be published in the Allied Merchandising Manual in connection with Allied's 34th annual convention at the Americana Hotel, New York, Marcus continued:

"Further, if the industry is to relieve itself of outmoded methods, a reappraisal of time-worn sales policies of distribution should be explored. A more realistic method of selling motion pictures should be devoloped and accepted by all of distribution to end all of the confusion that has been plaguing our industry for many years. A steady flow of product, together with the adoption of an intelligent sales policy, would be a pattern change that would encourage the up-dating of many more theatres throughout the country.

"As has been repeated several times, a market research program should be undertaken by the industry to develop more modern and effective means for the merchandising of motion picture entertainment."

Marcus said there is "definite evidence" that the trend is "swinging back to more lower budget pictures with good grossing potentials rather than a heavy concentration of production capital being put into road show attractions. The huge production costs involved in producing road show pictures and the inherent risk in recouping these huge production costs, has, in many instances, proved a financial headache for the industry.

With the surge in new theatre construction and the increase in theatre patronage over the past three years, the patern now should call for more product of the caliber released during this past summer such as "Irma La Douce," "Come Blow Your Horn," "Great Escape," and "Bye Bye Birdie"—to name a few."

Marcus added that "the continuing boom in the construction of shopping centre theatres, drive-ins and others, will undoubtedly bring a change in the releasing patterns of motion picture product in the larger cities. The increase in multiple first runs appears to be almost a certainty in many localities and what else may evolve from this remains to be seen.

"It has been reported that intriguing technical advances affecting motion picture equipment and changes in the methods of motion picture presentation is foreseen in the not-to-distant future."

AB-PT SWITCHES TO COMPACTS

As time goes by, American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres will be eliminating more and more of its "big chair factories which we no longer need" in favor of the establishment of smaller, more modern houses outside the downtown areas. This per AB-PT theatre v.p. Edward L. Hyman who noted recently that there is and has been considerable re-vamping of the circuit going on for a while now.

Of course, the remodeling of a major circuit is a subtle thing since the consent decree requiring court approval for any new theatre construction but this and other circuits have been making considerable headway with their renovation plans. The biggest problem is adding to a chain and so the removal of one house and replacement with a new one is the plan most followed and the system which is easiest to effect.

Razing of older "chair factories" also makes sense in today's changing exhibition pattern, Hyman feels. The trend today is definitely to rural or suburban theatre-going and the modern, smaller theatres are the ones which are attracting more and more of the nation's movie theatre business. Accordingly, AB-PT has been gradually moving out of the downtown centres of many locations and into the shopping centres and other suburban developments.

Of course, some of the big downtown situations remain and some of them effectively. But the overhead both in terms of staff and sheer physical upkeep is prohibitive. Also, the smaller houses offer the plus of a considerably lower break-even point week to week and give a theatre a chance to hold a picture for much longer than in the older houses which have such large seating capacities.

AB-PT is also very high on drive-ins and has been building several of these around the country. The novelty aspects of this type of operation will always be a strong customer lure, Hyman feels. He notes also that this drive-in construction plan is not just limited to warm-weather areas but also involves northern localities. Ozoners are capable of turning a nice business trick and, recently, several around the country have become first-run situations in their areas.

In all, the AB-PT plan is indicative of a progressive attitude on the part of the chain. It is one that is also reflected in the plans and workings of some of the other majors, as exhibs around the country are becoming increasingly aware of the value of modernization in these changing sociological times. There is an optimism, too, about the potential in the theatre biz which is spurring the cash outlays necessary to effect such changes—along with the realization that, if such modernization is not done, the oldtimers will rapidly fall prey to the rising tide of indie chains which aren't hampered by the courts.

And as far as the courts themselves, there isn't too much strong opposition to new theatre construction, providing there's no evidence of unfair competition involved in such moves. In many cases, the application for the replacement of a razed house on a different site in the same area is just a formality. But there are still problem factors involving competition which require court review. Nonetheless, modernization is a major factor in theatre operation today and, in most instances, is occupying a lot of time among circuit execs.
